A special from Petersburg, Va., says: Fully fifteen men were killed and half as many more wounded by an explosion of powder in the fire works' factory of Romaine Bros. Charles N. Romaine, senior member of the firm; John Bland, senior member of the tobacco manufacturing firm of Bland Bros. & Wright; Capt. James Tosh, prominent citizen, and Charles Bland, of Bland Bros., were engaged in conversation in the office of the fire works concern. Fire was discovered in an out-building and these gentlemen went to the assistance of the employes and tried to extinguish it by water. An alarm had been turned in and just as Chief Engineer Farley drove into the yard, the explosion occurred. John Bland and Charles Romanie were killed instantly and their bodies were horribly mangled. Both were members of the City Council. Chief Engineer Farley was fatally injured and died in two hours. Capt. Tosh's body was burned almost beyond recognition. The other dead are Robert Roland, James Roland, James Perkins, William Tyler, John T. Harris, Red Graves, and five others who were not identified. Among the wounded are Charles Short, John Wells, and several Italians, who will probably die and whose names have not been ascertained. The loss by fire will reach $100,000. The flames communicated to other buildings used for the manufacture of fire works and there were frequent small explosions. On the opposite side of the street was a trunk factory of Messrs. Romaine Bros., and close by were the large brick tobacco factory of Bland Bros. & Wright and an old distillery now unused. All these buildings with stock and machinery were burned. There were three explosions. The first was small, and soon as it occured, Messrs. Romaine, Bland, and Tosh rushed into the drying room, and there a second and fatal explosion occurrred, and they were killed. A number of girls employed in the fire work's factory escaped before the second explosion.

IS GROWING BETTER.

A Steady Improvement in Business Observed.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: Improvement in business has continued since the President's veto, which has been sustained in the House. But the best news of the week is the great decrease in the number of failures, of which full returns are given for the first time by months in the quarterly statement in following pages. The number was 2,090 in January, 1,202 in February and 1,005 in March. The commercial liabilities were $31,320,867 in January; $17,930,419 in February, and $14,750,893 in March. Nearly half the commercial liabilities were of firms failing during the first month: much more than half of the trading liabilities, 54 per cent. as the full statement shows, 42 per cent. of the manufacturing liabilities and 49 per cent. of the other commercial liabilities. Moreover, nearly two-thirds of the banking liabilities were of failures in the first month, and over half of the railroad liabilities. Though the number of commercial failures, 4,297 in the United States was never equalled in any quarter until the last year, the average of liabilities is only $14,890, which is lower than has appeared in the records of 38 years at any time closely preceding any serious reverse. The degree of commercial soundness and health thereby indicated gives ground for hope that the liquidations consequent upon the disaster of 1893 have been in a large measure accomplished. The signs of continued improvement are more distinct than in the previous week.

BLOODY BATTLE.

Fourteen Soldiers and Twenty-eight Indians now Lying Dead on the Field.

Reno (Okla.) special: A courier from the locality of the Indian trouble reports the fighting still in progress. The soldiers have been engaged, and at 3 o'clock Friday morning fourteen soldiers and settlers have been killed or wounded, and twenty-eight of the Indians known to be killed. The Indians are surrounded, but the shooting continues. Each party is shooting at every opportunity.

The Sheriffs of "G" and "H" counties have organized and gone to the assistance of the settlers. All the soldiers from Fort Reno are now in the field except three troops of cavalry. The courier is from the Sheriff of "G" County, who sends for ammunition and assistance.

His brother here has already organized a party and left for the battleground. The continued fighting has greatly alarmed the people and the most intense excitement prevails. Parties are hastily organizing and going to the fight and much alarm is expressed at the number of soldiers who have been killed.

IGNOMINIOUS DEFEAT.

The Great Coke Strike Has Collapsed.

Uniontown (Pa.) special: The strike is over, and ignominious defeat marks its collapse. The rioters from both sections of the coke fields have laid down their arms and gone peacefully to their homes. The movement was a miserable failure and not a point was gained by the men. They are in a worse condition now than before, as the companies are starting their works with English speaking workmen, to the exclusion of the foreign element. All the works in the southern end of the region are either running or preparing to start up, while those in the northern end are in full operation.

It has just been discovered that the strikers have stolen 2,000 pounds of dynamite from the new reservoir on the mountain east of Dunbar, and great destruction of property is expected. The dynamite was stolen while the workmen on the reservoir were absent, the rioters breaking open the storage house. The robbery caused great excitement in the coke regions and many believe preparations are being made for a renewal of hostilities.

THE WALL FELL.

Burying a Number of Workmen Beneath the Rubbish.

A brick wall of a building on Broad street, Elizabeth, N. J., in process of re-construction, fell upon a gang of bricklayers who were at work on a scaffold on the opposite wall. The wounded are:

Wm. Headley, fractured skull, legs broken; taken to hospital.

Jack Kerr, leg broken and hip fractured.

Alexander Kerr, head badly cut and face disfigured.

Robert Itwin, one arm broken and skull probably fractured.

James Fury, head badly injured.

The men were all rendered unconscious. It is thought Headly will die. Several of the helpers about the work were hurt by flying bricks.

Indiana Boys in Blue.

The State Encampment of the G. A. R., was held at Lafayette, Ind., and was largely attended. Albert O. Marsh of Winchester, was elected Department Commander, and James Barney Shaw, of Lafayette, Senior Vice Commander, both by acclamation. A similar compliment befell H. H. Reagan of Lowell, Junior Vice Commander, and Dr. Charles S. Boynton of Indianapolis, Medical Director. John A. Maxwell of Delphi, and C. B. Strickland of Huntington, were nominated for Chaplain, and Maxwell was elected on the first ballot. Irvin Robbins of Indianapolis, was chosen delegate-at-large to the national encampment, with William P. Drile of Peru, alternate.

Muncie was selected as the place for holding the next encampment.

A Revolution Imminent.

A dispatch from San Salvador says: A general revolution in all the Central American countries is believed to be imminent. Orders have been given all the military forces to maintain the strictest guard on the frontiers and to search all persons entering or leaving the republic. The entire army has orders to be ready to march at any moment. There are indications that Nicaragua is trying to foment trouble in Costa Rica in order to have a pretext for seizing that country. A number of well known priests have arrived in Costa Rica, among them a former archbishop of Gautamalia, whom the Government proposes to hold as a hostage.

An A. O. U. W. Receiver Missing.

J. W. Wood, ex-Treasurer of Calhoun County, Michigan, and Grand Receiver of the A. O. U. W., has been missing since March 26. His books are now in the hands of the officers of the organization, who are investigating his accounts for six years—the time he has held office—and it is said they have found a shortage of over $5,000 in Wood's accounts. Wood took $800 with him when he left. As Grand Receiver of the A. O. U. W., Wood handled between $300,000 and $400,000 of the order's funds every year.

Longshoremen's Strike.

The opening of navigation was inaugurated with a lock out of longshoremen at Toledo. William Peter, an extensive Saginaw-Toledo lumber dealer, received the first cargo of the season on the barge Saginaw, and made an effort to have his own employes discharge the lumber. The longshoremen who wished to go to work themselves, drove the men away from the barge and when police protection was furnished, the men were too badly frightened to work.

Tripple Hanging.

Three men, Thomas Brady, James L. Wyrick, and John P. Hill, alias Albert Mansker, were hanged at the same time and on the same scaffold at Newport, Ark. Only twenty-five persons were admitted to the jail yard, where the execution took place. The arrangements were perfect and were carried out without delay. Neither of the men made any remarks on the scaffold. They were pronounced dead in fifteen minutes.

Saved the Limited.

An unsuccessful attempt was made to wreck the New York Limited express on the Baltimore & Ohio at Thirteenth avenue crossing, in McKeesport, Pa. John Boyle, a track walker, noticed several men running from the railroad, and hurried to the switch. He found the lock broken, the switch turned, and the train rounding a curve. Boyle turned the switch back and averted a wreck.

School Panic.

The bursting of a steam pipe in the basement of the Humboldt Park school at Chicago, caused a panic among the pupils, and in the rush of the children to escape from the building one boy was killed and over a score were crushed and trampled. Fourteen children were taken to the St. Elizabeth Hospital and many others were carried to their homes by the police.

A Preacher in Trouble.

At Chattanooga, Tenn., Rev. Clement W. Lewis was sentenced in the United States district court to twenty-eight years in the penitentiary in fourteen indictments charging him with wholesale pension frauds. He is a negro preacher and gained national reputation by his monumental swindles carried on undiscovered for years.

The Coke Strike Off.

Uniontown (Pa.) special: The coke strike, as far as the Frick Company is concerned, was declared off by a convention of Scottdale, and the Frick sliding scale, providing for an increase in wages, when the price of coke advances, was endorsed.

The C. A. of A. Wins.

The United States Circuit Court at Chattanooga has given judgment for $25,000 in favor of the Catholic Knights of America against the bondsmen of M. J. O'Brien, treasurer of the order, who disappeared in 1891, leaving a shortage of $76,000.

MET A FIERY DEATH.

TEN FIREMEN KILLED IN A MILWAUKEE FIRE.

Davidson Theater the Scene of a Frightful Holocaust—Many Fire Fighters Roasted—Awful Death of Those Who Could Not Be Rescued.

On the Roof When It Fell.

The Davidson Theater, the finest playhouse in Milwaukee and one of the handsomest and costliest theaters in the country, was destroyed by fire which broke out between 4 and 5 o'clock Monday morning. Ten firemen lost their lives in the fire, nine of them going down to a living death by the fall of a roof, and the tenth being killed by the fall of a ladder. Several others were also injured, some of them it is feared fatally.

The valuable scenery and property of the Lilliputians, whose ten days' engagement at the theater was to close on Wednesday, is all gone. Manager Rosenthal of the company says it was worth $50,000.

Shortly after 5 o'clock, when the fire was seemingly under control, the theater roof, on which a score or more firemen stood as they fought the flames, went down, and the brave men were carried with it to the floor of the auditorium below. Some were extricated from the furnace of flames, in which the whole interior was now enveloped, by their brave and more fortunate comrades, who risked their lives to drag out the prostrate forms of the dead and injured men. Six or eight men were soon brought out, and those who were able to speak said there were ten or more in the ruins, where living death awaited them. For these poor fellows there was no chance.

DAVIDSON THEATER BEFORE THE FIRE.

The burning roof had fallen on them, and they were roasted to death, if they had not been killed outright in that terrible plunge from the roof.

A cry of horror went up from the firemen who saw the awful catastrophe. The members of the insurance patrol were covering up the seats in the parquet of the theater, when suddenly a light was seen through the roof above. The men in the theater ran back just in time, and the next moment the roof fell into the parquet of the theater. Several of the men in the theater were caught by the falling timbers.

The scene that followed is never to be forgotten by those who witnessed it. For a moment all was dark, then suddenly a tremendous sheet of flame shot up and with it came the cries of the firemen who had fallen through the roof to the theater below. One man was heard to cry: "My God, help me. I am roasting to death."

The men were buried under the blazing roof, and there seemed to be little hope that any would come out alive, if indeed they had not been killed by the terrible fall.

An Appalling Sight.

The awful fate which overtook the firemen was the more appalling because it was entirely unexpected. No one dreamed that there was the least danger of the roof giving way. One instant the crowds of excited spectators saw the firemen standing on the roof pouring water on adjoining buildings and then they slowly sank out of sight. There was a groaning of timbers, a muffled crash as the roof struck the first floor, and the flames shot up along the shattered walls with a deadly fury.

Occurring at the early hour of 5 o'clock, in the midst of a driving storm of rain and sleet, the accident was invested with more than ordinary horrors. The firemen had gone to the roof for the purpose of directing the leads of hose to adjoining buildings as well as to saturate the roof of the theater. Nobody believed the building was in danger. But the flames had eaten upward and undermined the roof supports, and not until the structure began to sink beneath their feet did the firemen know the danger that threatened them.

Then there was no escape. Before they could even shout an alarm the roof had gone down. The men fell fifty feet and were either killed by the fall or crushed to death by the shower of bricks and stone which followed them. The immense load of debris had the effect of stifling the flames at first, but they burst out anew and mounted higher than ever. The walls of the building remained standing and made the work of rescue extremely difficult.

A look into the entrance of the theater was appalling. The stage and auditorium were buried beneath piles of debris from the falling roof, over which flames swiftly ran and crackled. Peering through the smoke the rescuers could see a heap covered with an oilskin coat lying here and there, half hidden by the bricks and plaster. Those heaps were the bodies of the firemen, whether alive or dead the rescuing party could not tell. A fireman's helmet, an ax and a piece of hose could also be seen in the ruins.

Several Firemen Rescued.

There was trouble in getting water on the fire, which now rapidly made its way through the theater and scenery. The water was finally turned on, and several of the firemen who had fallen nearest the front door of the lobby were dragged from the burning debris and carried out more or less injured. The men were removed to the saloon across the street and their wounds dressed, while the other firemen bravely kept at work pouring a deluge of water on the debris and trying to rescue others of the unfortunates. But soon no more cries were heard, and it was evident that all who had not been brought out must now be past hope.

The interior of the auditorium soon became a seething mass of flames, which the firemen vainly endeavored to subdue in order to save their doomed comrades. While the frantic men were at work amidst the ruins on the floor of the parquet, the gallery began to burn, and while directing their attention to this blaze another portion of the roof fell, making the rescue of the imprisoned men impossible and adding more fuel to the fire.

The Dead.

CAMPBELL, ARCHIE, captain of fireb at Foley, unmarried; taken from ruins dead.

FREEMAN, JAMES, pipeman No. 4, 32 years old; taken from ruins dead.

FARRELL, JOHN, chemical No. 1; taken from ruins dead.

JANSSEN, AUGUST, third assistant chief of the fire department, 36 years old, married; buried in the wreckage.

KOSCHMEIDER, FRED, chemical engine No. 2; taken from ruins dead.

MORGAN, THOMAS, pipeman No. 1, unmarried; buried in the ruins.

M'GURK, FRANK, acting captain No 14, married; taken from ruins dead.

RIES, ALLIE, pipeman No. 3; fell from a ladder; died on the way to the Emergency Hospital.

WINNEY, FRANK, pipeman No. 4; taken from ruins dead and unrecognizable.

The Injured.

CURRAN, JAMES, lieutenant No. 1: injured internally.

CROWLEY, JOHN; internally injured by fall.

LINEHAN, PATRICK, captain No. 4; collarbone broken and badly bruised.

MAUKS, FRED, No. 2; knee sprained.

SCHUNCK, CHARLES, captain chemical No. 2; left leg fractured, bruised about face and body.

SCHROEDER, FRANK, No. 4; ankle sprained.

YEO, JOHN, pipeman No. 4; burned about face and arms.

The first fatality of the fire happened before the more awful tragedy on the roof. Ollie Reis, a fireman, lost his life while trying to reach the roof of the theater before the roof fell. He had put a ladder from the northern wing of the hotel building, which is two stories lower than the theater proper, when the ladder swayed, and he fell with it to the roof of the wing. He was carried away and died in the arms of his comrades. He was a member of Engine Company No. 3.

Hotel Guests All Escape.

The guests of the Davidson Hotel, which occupies a part of the building, fled panic-stricken from their rooms when the alarm of fire ran through the corridors. They really were in no danger and had ample time to get out. No one was injured.

John A. Davidson, sole owner of the theater and hotel, lives in Chicago, and was notified of the fire in time to leave on the 8 o'clock train for Milwaukee. The Davidson hotel and theater were erected in 1890 and opened the following year. The building was one of the handsomest and most substantial in Milwaukee.

The Davidson Theater, claimed to be absolutely fire proof, was opened in September, 1891, by the Emma Juch Opera Company. Manager Sherman Brown stated, as he stood watching the smoke curling up to the studded and frescoed ceiling which had been his pride: "The original cost to John and Alexander Davidson was between $350,000 and $400,000. The loss, of course, is mainly on the lessee. The walls will stand when all else is gone. There is no way to estimate the loss, but it may be over half of the original investment. It will be at least a year, of course, before we can reopen. I have no doubt the theater will be rebuilt."

THE JENKINS INQUIRY.

Investigation of the Judge's Act Regarding Union Pacific Employes.

The Congressional investigation of Judge James Gray Jenkins for his action in enjoining the employes of the Northern Pacific Railroad from striking was begun in Milwaukee Monday. Representatives Bateman, Terry, and Stone, who comprise the subcommittee of the House Committee on Judiciary, which was appointed to conduct the inquiry, began the work assigned to them.

Chief Clark, of the Order of Railway Conductors, and Chief Sargent, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, were the two witnesses before the committee Monday. Their examination clearly defined the attitude of organized labor toward the action of Judge Jenkins. It was admitted that no act at harm had been done to the Northern Pacific employes by the celebrated injunction of the federal judges, yet the claim was made—and in no ambiguous language, either—that these writs were fraught with too much danger to organized labor to allow them to go unchallenged. The statement was boldly made that the strike was labor's only weapon of defense, and that it did not purpose to have that weapon knocked from its hands by Jenkins, Dunlay, or any other Judge. The issue was squarely joined when Chief Sargent told the committee: "We object to any court saying to us, 'you must accept these conditions, whether you like them or not.'" The far-reaching effect of the Jenkins injunction was shown when Chief Sargent gave his interpretation of them. Here it is: "If I, as an individual employe, should quit the service of the Northern Pacific receiver, and such quitting should embarrass the operation of the road, I would be liable to punishment for contempt of court."

Chief Sargent did not hesitate to tell the Congressional committee that he had openly defied the supplemental injunction which restrained the chiefs from meeting with the men and advising them regarding a strike.

When they reached home Williams got out to help his wife out; the horse frightened and started to run. Williams grabbed for his wife and succeeded in pulling her out, but in doing so he was caught by the vehicle and dragged to death. The horse ran a quarter of a mile. When found the young man was lifeless. His head had struck a rock, causing a fatal fracture of the skull. Mrs. Williams fell violently to the ground, but was only slightly injured.

THE NATION'S SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

After nearly three weeks of filibustering the O'Neill-Joy contested election case was finally disposed of Tuesday, when Mr. Patterson, Chairman of the Committee on Elections, informed the House that he proposed to insist upon the consideration of the pending election case until a vote was reached, some of the members who have been dodging suddenly decided to help make a quorum. The result was a vote in which a quorum was shown and the case was taken up. This action was so sudden and unexpected that even the contestee in the case was absent from the House at the time. So quickly was it disposed of that when he finally came in he found that he was no longer a Congressman. In his absence he had been unseated and Mr. O'Neill had been sworn in as the rightful member from the North St. Louis district. The House then immediately proceeded with the consideration of the English-Hilborn case, two hours being allowed for debate. The resolution declaring Mr. Hilborn elected was lost by a vote of 83 to 136. The quorum failed, and a trace was then declared for the night. At 5:30 p. m. the House adjourned. The Senate talked tariff.

In the House, on Wednesday, the motion to pass the seigniorage bill over the President's veto was defeated. In the contest between Messrs. Hilborn and English for a seat from California, Mr. Hilborn was beaten. The Senate continued its debate, with the tariff bill as the subject.

The Senate Thursday considered, without final action, several minor matters, and continued the tariff debate. The urgent deficiency bill, appropriating something over $1,000,000, was passed by the House. James Izler, elected to succeed Mr. Brawley as Representative of the First South Carolina District, took his seat. The Senate bill to give effect to the award of the Paris tribunal, prescribing regulations for the protection of fur seals in Behring Sea, was passed. Bills were passed authorizing the construction of bridges across the St. Louis River between Wisconsin and Minnesota at Duluth and Grosse Point. After the deficiency was disposed of the consideration of the postoffice appropriation bill was resumed. Only one amendment was adopted setting aside $30,000 for the establishment of star routes to new postoffices.

The Senate does not appear to relish its own pudding, for on Friday the tariff debate was delayed by lack of a quorum. The House went ahead with appropriation bills again. First, however, a bill authorizing the city of Hastings, Minn., to construct a wagon brige across the Mississippi River was passed. A bill to increase the amount of lands in the Yellowstone Park Reservation now leased for hotel purposes from ten to twenty acres was passed. Mr. Henderson sent to the clerk's desk and had read an appeal to Congress against the further extension of second-class mail privileges. More than 250,000,000 pounds of second-class mail matter was carried by the mails last year, it said; 5,402 news publications were started last year, and the efficiency of the mail service was crippled by the limitless quantities of second-class mail matter carried. Mr. Loud, of California, opposed the amendment on the ground it would swamp the department. It would cost the United States, he declared, $10,000,000 annually. Mr. Loud offered and advocated an amendment to increase the appropriation for railroad transportation from $25,500,000 to $28,900,000 on the ground that the former sum would prove inadequate. It was defeated. The evening session was devoted to pension bills.

The Senate Monday resumed consideration of the Wilson bill. Mr. Walsh was sworn in as Senator from Georgia to serve out the term of the late Senator Colquitt. The House was depopulated. Three-fourths of the members were at the Senate listening to Senator Hill's speech. Those who remained were occupied with District of Columbia affairs. The bill to allow bookmakers to operate at the meetings of the Washington Jockey Club met with such opposition that it was withdrawn. Only one bill of any importance, providing for $1 gas in the District, was passed.

Gen. Lee and Private Lee.

Robert E. Lee, Jr., bears a striking resemblance to his father, Gen Robert E. Lee, says a Washington correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. He rose to the rank of captain in the Confederate army, entering as a private in the famous Rockbridge artillery when he was but 18 years of age. He was counted one of the bravest and most tireless fighters in the ranks. An interesting incident is related of how he met his father after a hot battle in which young Lee had taken an active part. The artillery was parked in an open field the day after the first fight at Cold Harbor. With the other members of his company Private Lee had sought rest beneath the cannon. One of his comrades called out: "Bob, here comes your father." A figure begrimed with the dirt and smoke of battle crawled from beneath a cannon and stood up to salute and greet Gen. Lee, who was riding on a tour of inspection. The greeting between father and son was affectionate, although the General had to look closely to recognize his offspring.

What She Said.

He was a small boy and he was very much interested in the telephone. The pretty telephone girl at the Fifth Avenue Hotel put him on a tall chair, and calling up a chum on the long distance wire, placed the receiver in his ear. He was so delighted that the first thing that he told his mamma was that he had talked with a lady in

UNITED AT LAST

By Miss M. E. Braddon.

CHAPTER II.

"WHEN WE TWO PARTED."

Sir Cyprian Davenant and James Wyatt went back to town by rail, and parted company at Waterloo, the baronet going westward to his bachelor lodgings in one of the shabbier streets about Grosvenor Square, the lawyer to the big dull house on the coldest side of Russell Square, which his father had bought and furnished some fifty years before.

Sir Cyprian had work to do after the Richmond dinner, and was occupied till long after daybreak with letter-writing and the last details of his packing. When all was done, he was still wakeful, and sat by his writing-table in the morning sunlight thinking of the past and the future with a gloomy face.

Thinking of the past—of all those careless hours in which one bright girlish face had been the chief influence of his life; thinking of the future, in which he was to see that sweet face no more.

He began to walk slowly up and down the room, thinking.

"There would be just time for me to do it," he said to himself, presently; "just time to run down to Davenant, and see the old place once more. It will be sold before I come back from Africa, if ever I do come back. And there would be a chance of seeing her. I know the Clanyardes have gone back to Kent. Yes, I will run down to Davenant for a few hours. A man must be hard indeed who does not care to give one farewell look at the house in which the brightest years of his life have been spent. And I may see her again, only to say good-by, and to see if she is sorry for my going. What more can I say to her? What more need be said? She knows that I would lay down my life for her."

He went to his room and slept a kind of fitful sleep until 8 o'clock, when he woke with a start, and began to dress for his journey. At nine he was driving through the streets in a hansom, and at midday he was in one of the woody lanes leading across country from the little Kentish railway station to his own ancestral domain, the place he had once been proud and fond of, but which he looked at now in bitterness of spirit and with a passionate regret. The estate had been incumbered when it fell into his hands, but he knew that, with prudence he might have saved the greater part of it. He entered the park by a rustic gateway, beside which there was a keeper's lodge, a gate dividing the thickest part of the wood from a broad green valley, where the ferns grew deep under the spreading branches of grand old oaks, and around the smooth silver-gray trunks of mighty beeches. The Davenant timber had suffered little from the prodigal's destroying hand. He could better endure the loss of the place than its desecration. The woman at the keeper's lodge welcomed her master with an exclamation of surprise.

"I hope you have come to stay, Sir Cyprian," she said, dropping a rustic courtesy.

"No, Mrs. Mead. I have only come for a last look at the old place before I go away from England."

"Going away, sir? that's bad news."

Cyprian cut short her lamentations with a friendly nod, and was walking on, when it suddenly struck him that the woman might be useful.

"Oh, by the way," he said, "Lord Clanyarde is at Marchbrook, is he not?"

"Yes, sir; the family have been there for the last week."

"Then I'll walk over there before I go on to the house if you'll unlock the gate again, Mrs. Mead."

"Shall I send one of my boys to the house with a message, sir, about dinner, or anything?"

"You are very good. Yes, you can send the lad to tell old Mrs. Pomfret to get me something to eat at 6 o'clock, if you please. I must get back to London by the 7:30 train."

"Deary me, sir, going back so soon as that?"

The gates of Marchbrook were about a mile distant from the keeper's lodge. Lord Clanyarde's house was a dreary red brick habitation of the Georgian era, with long lines of narrow windows looking out upon a blank expanse of pasture land, by courtesy a park. An avenue of elms led from the lodge-gate to the southern front of the house and on the western side there was a prim Dutch garden, divided from the park by a ha-ha. The place was in perfect order, but there was a cold, bare look about everything that was eminently suggestive of poverty.

A woman at the lodge informed Sir Cyprian that there was no one at home. Lord Clanyarde had driven to Maidstone; Miss Clanyarde was at the village. She had gone to see the children at the National School. She would be home at two to lunch, no doubt, according to her usual habit. She was very fond of the school, and sometimes spent her morning in teaching the children.

"But they leave school at twelve, don't they?" demanded Sir Cyprian.

"Yes, sir; but I dare say Miss Constance has stopped to talk to Miss Evans, the schoolmistress. She is a very genteel young person, and quite a favorite with our ladies."

Cyprian Davenant knew the little schoolhouse and the road by which Constance Clanyarde must return from her mission. Nothing could be more pleasant to him than the idea of meeting her in her solitary walk. He turned away from the lodge-keeper, muttering something vague about calling later, and walked at a rapid pace to the neighboring village, which consisted of two straggling rows of old-fashioned cottages fringing the skirts of a common. Close to the old ivy-covered church, with its massive square tower and grass-grown graveyard, there was a modern Gothic building in which the village children struggled through the difficulties of an educational course, and from the open windows whereof their youthful voices rang loudly out upon the summer air every morning in a choral version of the multiplication table.

Miss Clanyarde was standing in the little porch talking to the schoolmistress when Sir Cyprian opened the low wooden gate. She looked up at the sound of his footstep with a sudden blush.

"I did not know you were at Davenant, Sir Cyprian," she said, with some little embarrassment, as they shook hands.

"I have not been at Davenant, Miss Clanyarde. I only left town this morning. I have come down here to say good-by to Davenant and all old friends."

The blush faded and left the lovely face very pale.

"Is it true that you are going to Africa, Sir Cyprian? I heard from some friends in town that you were going to join Captain Harcourt's expedition."

"It is quite true. I promised Harcourt some years ago that if he ever went again I would go with him."

"And you are pleased to go, I suppose?"

"No, Miss Clanyarde, not pleased to go. But I think that sort of thing is about the best employment for the energies of a waif and stray, such as I am. I have lived my life, you see, and have not a single card left to play in the game of civilized existence. There is some hope of adventure out yonder. Are you going home?"

"Yes, I was just saying good-by to Miss Evans as you came in."

"Then I'll walk back to Marchbrook with you, if you'll allow me. I told the lodgekeeper I would return by-and-by in the hope of finding Lord Clanyarde."

"You have been to Marchbrook already, then?"

"Yes; and they told me at the lodge that I should find you here."

After this there came rather an awkward silence. They walked away from the schoolhouse side by side, Sir Cyprian furtively watchful of his companion's face, in which there were signs of a sorrow that seemed something deeper than the conventional regret which a fashionable beauty might express for the departure of a favorite waltzer.

The silence was not broken until they had arrived at a point where two roads met, the turnpike road to Marchbrook and a shady lane—a cross-country road, above which the overarching branches of the elms made a roof of foliage at this bright midsummer season. There was a way of reaching Marchbrook by this lane—a tempting walk compared to the high-road.

"Let us go back by the lane," said Cyprian. "It is a little longer, but I am sure you are not in a hurry. You would have dawdled away half the morning talking to that young woman at the school, if I hadn't come to fetch you; and it will be our last walk together, Constance. I may call you Constance, may I not, as I used when you were in the nursery? I am entitled to a few dismal privileges, like a dying man, you know. Oh, Constance, what happy hours we have spent together in these Kentish lanes! I shall see them in my dreams out yonder, and your face will shine down upon me from a background of green leaves and blue sky; and then I shall awake to find myself camping out upon some stretch of barren sand, with jackals howling in the distance."

"What a dreadful picture!" said Constance, with a faint forced laugh. "But if you are so reluctant to leave England, why do you persist in this African expedition?"

"It is a point of honor with me to keep my promise; and it is better for me to be away from England."

"You are the best judge of that question."

Sir Cyprian was slow to reply to this remark. He had come down to Kent upon a sudden impulse, determined in no manner to betray his own folly, and bent only upon snatching the vain delight of a farewell interview with the girl he loved. But to be with her and not to tell her the truth was more difficult than he had imagined. He could see that she was sorry for his departure. He believed that she loved him, but he knew enough of Viscount Clanyarde's principles and his daughter's education to know there would be something worse than cruelty in asking this girl to share his broken fortunes.

"Yes, Constance," he went on, "it is better for me to be away. So long as I am here it is the old story of the insect and the flame. I cannot keep out of temptation. I cannot keep myself from haunting the places where I am likely to meet the girl I love, fondly, foolishly, hopelessly. Don't look at me with those astonished eyes, my darling; you have known my secret ever so long. I meant to keep silent till the very end; but, you see the words are spoken in spite of me. My love, I dare not ask you to be my wife. I dare only tell you that no other woman will fill that place. You are not angry with me, Constance, for having spoken?"

"Angry with you—" she began, and then broke down utterly and burst into tears.

He drew his arm round her with a tender, protecting gesture, and soothed her gently, as if she had been a child.

"My darling, I am not worth your tears. If I had been a better man, I might have redeemed Davenant by this time, and might have hoped to make you my wife. There would have been some hope for me, would there not, dear, if I could have offered you a home that your father could approve?"

"I am not so mercenary as you think me," answered Constance, drying her tears, and disengaging herself from Sir Cyprian's encircling arm. "I am not afraid of poverty. But I know that my father would never forgive——"

"And I know it too, my dearest girl, and you shall not be asked to break with your father for such a man as I. I never meant to speak of this, dear, but perhaps it is better that I should have spoken. You will soon forget me, Constance, and I shall hear of you making some brilliant marriage before I have been away very long. God grant the man may be worthy of you! God grant you may marry a good man!"

"I am not very likely to marry," replied Miss Clanyarde.

"My dearest, it is not possible you can escape; and heaven forbid that my memory should come between you and a happy future. It is enough for one of us to carry the burden of a life-long regret."

There was more talk between them before they arrived at a little gate opening into the Marchbrook kitchen-garden—fond, regretful talk of the days that were gone, in which they had been so much together down in Kent, with all the freedom permitted between friends and neighbors of long standing, the days before Constance had made her debut in the great world.

Sir Cyprian did not persevere in his talked-of visit to Lord Clanyarde. He had, in truth, very little desire to see that gentleman, who was one of the most pompous and self-opinioned of noblemen. At the little garden gate he grasped Miss Clanyarde's two hands in his own with one fond, fervent grasp.

"You know the old story," he said: "'It must be for years, and it may be forever.' It is an eternal parting for me, darling, for I can never hope to call you by that sweet name again. You have been very good to me in letting me speak so freely to-day and it is a kind of consolation to have told you my sorrow. God bless you, and good-by."

This was their parting. Sir Cyprian went back to Davenant, and spent a dreary hour in walking up and down the corridor and looking into the empty rooms. He remembered them tenanted with the loved and lost. How dreary they were now in their blank and unoccupied state, and how little likelihood there was that he should ever see them again! His dinner was served to him in a pretty breakfast room, with a bay-window overlooking a garden that had been his mother's delight, and where the roses she had loved still blossomed in all their glory. The memory of the dead was with him as he ate his solitary meal, and he was glad when it was time for him to leave the great desolate house, in which every door closed with a dismal reverberation, as if it had been shutting upon a vault.

He left Davenant immediately after dinner, and walked back to the little station, thinking mournfully enough of his day's work and of the life that lay before him. Before noon next day he and his companions were on the first stage of their journey, speeding towards Marseilles.

THEY COME HIGH.

Commercial Value of Wild Animals for Circus Purposes.

Few people have a correct idea of the commercial value of wild animals. The price is fixed by menageries and circuses, because these are the largest buyers. We give the value of some of these animals as estimated by a prominent showman. The famous Jumbo cost $10,000 and this sum was increased to $28,000 by subsequent expenses, such as transportation. The elephant was worth to his owners $30,000 a week. Giraffes are quoted at $6,000 each and hipopotami are valued at $4,000 each. A rhinoceros with one horn cost $3,000. Another horn adds just $1,000 to his value. Lions range from $800 to $1,200. A lioness costs $1,000 and tigers are quoted at $1,000. Grizzly bears are becoming scarce, and are hard to keep in captivity. A really fine specimen is worth $1,000, and they range from that down to $500. Polar bears come at $800. Other bears range from $50 to $200. A camel with one hump is worth $350, and two humps brings the market value up to $400. Ostriches are valued at $800 apiece.

Gnus, which don't attract much attention, are found in every first-class menagerie and cost $700. The American buffalo is worth $500, just $100 more than his Indian brother. The Rocky mountain goat is quoted rather high, $500, while panthers and leopards are plenty at $250 each, and hyenas and pumas go for $175. Antelopes range all the way from $185 to $300, and deer from $75 to $100, while a moose brings $500, the same price as a nylghau.

An ant-eater is worth $400; hartbeests (a kind of antelope), wart hogs and sloths, $350; cheetahs, alpacas and guanacos, $300; tapirs, $400. Sea lions bring from $300 to $400, while seals are worth but $50. Zebus are worth $250; llamas, $200; emus, $175, and mountain lions, $100. Armadillos are to be had for $50, and porcupines for half that amount. Wolves come a little higher. They average $75. Kangaroos have increased in value of late years. They are now quoted of $150. The more valuable monkeys range from $20 to $75. Horses are very valuable in a show and these animals trained for circus purposes are worth $2,500.

Militia of the States.

The entire organized militia of the various States number 112,190, divided as follows: Alabama, 2,960; Arkansas, 981; California, 4,944; Colorado, 827; Connecticut, 2,751; Delaware, 330; Florida, 1,011; Georgia, 3,535; Idaho, 232; Illinois, 4,777; Indiana, 2,633; Iowa, 2,315; Kansas, 1,666; Kentucky, 1,331; Louisiana, 1,249; Maine, 1,064; Maryland, 2,118; Massachusetts, 8,566; Michigan, 2,801; Minnesota, 1,801; Mississippi, 1,705; Missouri, 2,415; Montana, 526; Nebraska, 1,086; Nevada, 493; New Hampshire, 1,255; New Jersey, 3,915; New York, 12,810; North Carolina, 1,782; North Dakota, 479; Ohio, 6,125; Oregon, 1,575; Pennsylvania, 8,614; Rhode Island, 1,476; South Carolina, 5,440; South Dakota, 779; Tennessee, 1,794; Texas, 2,784; Vermont, 784; Virginia, 3,221; Washington, 1,702; West Virginia, 900; Wisconsin, 2,721; Wyoming, 415; Arizona, 470; New Mexico, 469; District of Columbia, 1,563.

The aggregate men available for military duty unorganized is given as 8,223,997. Of this latter class New York and Illinois contribute the largest numbers, being put down for 650,000 each.

A Grand but Unique Memorial.

The monument which has been erected upon the battlefield of Solferino is one of the largest, if not the largest, of its kind in Europe. It consists of a tower seventy-four meters high, surmounted by an electric lamp, and rises in seven stories, each representing a campaign in the struggle for the independence of Italy. Each separate story contains all the names of the generals and other officers, as well as the men who fought in that campaign. No fewer than 700,000 names are thus inscribed on the inner walls of the monument. On the ground floor are the busts and portraits of all the leading generals, and the chief ornament in the center of the ground floor is the colossal monument in bronze of Victor Emmanuel, by the Venetian sculptor Dal Zotto. The tower stands in grounds beautifully laid out, and constitutes a magnificent memorial of Italian unity. Beneath the structure repose 2,000 skulls and other remains of soldiers of the three nations who fell on the field of Solferino.

Hard Times Affect Society.

Young clubmen in New York are complaining not a little of the loss of many good dinners, which helped to eke out their small incomes so comfortably of yore; and fashionable married couples are enjoying a Darby and Joan sort of existence which may or may not be acceptable. The great lack of dinners this winter in New York is most striking, and the traveling Englishman has fallen upon evil days indeed. "I was told that your people were so extraordinarily hospitable," said a newly arrived Briton the other day, "and that I should be asked to dine somewhere every night, but I have been asked out only a couple of times, although I have presented all my letters and have been in New York for the last ten days."

Hot in Australia.

The weather in Australia during the present antipodean summer has been unusually hot and oppressive. In Adelaide, during December, the thermometer several times registered over 100 degrees in the shade, and one day it climbed to 107 in the shade and 163 in the sun. In Melbourne the hundred notch has been reached more than once, and the scorching north winds have made the atmosphere exceedingly oppressive. The foregoing figures are from weather observatory readings, and probably do not represent by several degrees the temperature of the city streets.

AT the present rate of increase there will be 63,000,000 people in Canada in fifty years' time, and 190,000,000 in the United States.

WORLD'S LARGEST FIRE ENGINE.

"Jumbo," No. 3, of the Hartford, Conn., Department.

The Nutmeg State boasts of having in its capital city the largest and most powerful steam fire engine in the world. The engine is a self-propelling machine, and was built by the Amoskeag Company, at Manchester, N. H., in 1889. In appearance the engine looks as formidable as it really is, and the excellence of its work can only be appreciated when closely watched while in service. "Jumbo," as the engine is called, is perhaps the first thing of interest pointed out to a stranger in the city, the spot where once stood the famous charter oak tree being a sort of second fiddle to the big engine.

The engine stands 9 feet 9 inches in height, over all; 16 feet 6 inches length; 7 feet 3 inches in width; weight, fully equipped for service, 17,000 pounds, the two rear wheels weighing in the neighborhood of 1,650 pounds. The boiler is fed from a tank under the tillerman's seat when going to or from a fire, or at any time when not connected to a hydrant. This tank holds 120 gallons.

The size of the engine proper may be judged from the following figures: Diameter of boiler, 40 inches; diamter of cylinder, 9½ inches; diameter of pumps, 5½ inches; length of stroke, 8 inches. During her two trial tests the engine was watched carefully by builders from other cities, and at the conclusion of her work each one expressed himself as having seen what a fire engine had never done before—and that was to throw a stream of water with such force as to tear the clap-boarding off the side of a house. During a recent fire at the Colt's Patent Firearms and Manufacturing Company's factory, No. 3 virtually saved the big armory from destruction.

"Jumbo" was put in service in August, 1889. At the first trial test a stream was thrown 348 feet.

TWO NOTED WOMEN.

One a Beauty and Wit; the Other a Religieuse and a Saint.

The most noted woman in France in the seventeenth century, was Madame de Sevigne, whom her own generation pronounced the "marchioness of marchionesses." Her beauty, wealth and wit made her the most admired of women, and the most distinguished men in the nation, such as the Prince de Conti and Turenne, sighed for her love in vain. Her letters to her daughter, Madame de Grignan, are classic in French literature and will forever perpetuate her name.

The grandmother of Madame de Sevigne, Madame de Chantal, was also famous in her day. At the age of 28, after her husband's death, she devoted herself to the sick and poor, and acting by the advice of St. Francis de Sales she founded at Annecy the order of the Visitation Nuns. At her death, in 1614, the order comprised eighty-seven houses, and at the close of the century they numbered 150, with a membership of 6,600. Madame de Chantal was canonized by Clement XII. in 1767.

Two Years More for His Vanity.

French judges have summary ways in cases of contempt of court, as an anarchist named Rentiere, who appealed against a sentence of six months' imprisonment passed on him for swindling, has found out to his cost. In the Court of Appeals the President asked him why he sought to have the sentence altered. The anarchist, in a clear voice replied, very deliberately: "I have appealed solely in order to be able to tell you this—I have spent all my life in prison, and I consider it unjust that the innocent should suffer, while on the bench of this court are seated cruel wretches (des borreaux) and murderers." The President had the last word. His retort was: "We confirm your sentence of six months' imprisonment, and we order you to be detained further for two years for contempt of court" (outrage aux magistrats).—London Daily News.

"MISTER," said the small, neatly dressed boy, "have you seen anythin' of a dog that looked like he was lost?" "No, my boy," replied the kindly faced gentleman. "Are you sure you aren't lost yourself?" "No, sir. I ain't sure about not bein' lost. Fact is, I know I'm lost. But, mister, that dog's lost so much wuss'n I am that I ain't got time to think 'bout my own troubles."—Washington Star.

Couldn't Forego His Plaint.

It is supposed that business letters are deficient in humor. Still there have been exceptions, and the very latest, sent by a member of the well-known soap-making firm (let us say) of Cake & Son, is one of the most brilliant. A retail dealer in a small way had sent for a consignment of their goods: "Gentlemen" (he writes), "wherefor have you not sent me the sope? His it bekawse you think my money is not so good as nobody elses? Dam you, Cake & Son! wherefor have you not sent the sope? Please send sope at once, and oblige your respectful servant, RICHARD JONES. P. S.—Since writing the above, my wife has found the sope under the counter."

CHAPTER II.

"WHEN WE TWO PARTED."

Sir Cyprian Davenant and James Wyatt went back to town by rail, and parted company at Waterloo, the baronet going westward to his bachelor lodgings in one of the shabbier streets about Grosvenor Square, the lawyer to the big dull house on the coldest side of Russell Square, which his father had bought and furnished some fifty years before.

Sir Cyprian had work to do after the Richmond dinner, and was occupied till long after daybreak with letter-writing and the last details of his packing. When all was done, he was still wakeful, and sat by his writing-table in the morning sunlight thinking of the past and the future with a gloomy face.

Thinking of the past—of all those careless hours in which one bright girlish face had been the chief influence of his life; thinking of the future, in which he was to see that sweet face no more.

He began to walk slowly up and down the room, thinking.

"There would be just time for me to do it," he said to himself, presently; "just time to run down to Davenant, and see the old place once more. It will be sold before I come back from Africa, if ever I do come back. And there would be a chance of seeing her. I know the Clanyardes have gone back to Kent. Yes, I will run down to Davenant for a few hours. A man must be hard indeed who does not care to give one farewell look at the house in which the brightest years of his life have been spent. And I may see her again, only to say good-by, and to see if she is sorry for my going. What more can I say to her? What more need be said? She knows that I would lay down my life for her."

He went to his room and slept a kind of fitful sleep until 8 o'clock, when he woke with a start, and began to dress for his journey. At nine he was driving through the streets in a hansom, and at midday he was in one of the woody lanes leading across country from the little Kentish railway station to his own ancestral domain, the place he had once been proud and fond of, but which he looked at now in bitterness of spirit and with a passionate regret. The estate had been incumbered when it fell into his hands, but he knew that with prudence he might have saved the greater part of it. He entered the park by a rustic gateway, beside which there was a keeper's lodge, a gate dividing the thickest part of the wood from a broad green valley, where the ferns grew deep under the spreading branches of grand old oaks, and around the smooth silver-gray trunks of mighty beeches. The Davenant timber had suffered little from the prodigal's destroying hand. He could better endure the loss of the place than its desecration. The woman at the keeper's lodge welcomed her master with an exclamation of surprise.

"I hope you have come to stay, Sir Cyprian," she said, dropping a rustic courtesy.

"No, Mrs. Mead. I have only come for a last look at the old place before I go away from England."

"Going away, sir? that's bad news."

Cyprian cut short her lamentations with a friendly nod, and was walking on, when it suddenly struck him that the woman might be useful.

"Oh, by the way," he said, "Lord Clanyarde is at Marchbrook, is he not?"

"Yes, sir; the family have been there for the last week."

"Then I'll walk over there before I go on to the house if you'll unlock the gate again, Mrs. Mead."

"Shall I send one of my boys to the house with a message, sir, about dinner, or anything?"

"You are very good. Yes, you can send the lad to tell old Mrs. Pomfret to get me something to eat at 6 o'clock, if you please. I must get back to London by the 7:30 train."

"Deary me, sir, going back so soon as that?"

The gates of Marchbrook were about a mile distant from the keeper's lodge. Lord Clanyarde's house was a dreary red brick habitation of the Georgian era, with long lines of narrow windows looking out upon a blank expanse of pasture land, by courtesy a park. An avenue of elms led from the lodge-gate to the southern front of the house and on the western side there was a prim Dutch garden, divided from the park by a ha-ha. The place was in perfect order, but there was a cold, bare look about everything that was eminently suggestive of poverty.

A woman at the lodge informed Sir Cyprian that there was no one at home. Lord Clanyarde had driven to Maidstone; Miss Clanyarde was at the village. She had gone to see the children at the National School. She would be home at two to lunch, no doubt, according to her usual habit. She was very fond of the school, and sometimes spent her morning in teaching the children.

"But they leave school at twelve, don't they?" demanded Sir Cyprian.

"Yes, sir; but I dare say Miss Constance has stopped to talk to Miss Evans, the schoolmistress. She is a very genteel young person, and quite a favorite with our ladies."

Cyprian Davenant knew the little schoolhouse and the road by which Constance Clanyarde must return from her mission. Nothing could be more pleasant to him than the idea of meeting her in her solitary walk. He turned away from the lodge-keeper, muttering something vague about calling later, and walked at a rapid pace to the neighboring village, which consisted of two straggling rows of old-fashioned cottages fringing the skirts of a common. Close to the old ivy-covered church, with its massive square tower and grass-grown graveyard, there was a modern Gothic building in which the village children struggled through the difficulties of an educational course, and from the open windows whereof their youthful voices rang loudly out upon the summer air every morning in a choral version of the multiplication table.

Miss Clanyarde was standing in the little porch talking to the schoolmistress when Sir Cyprian opened the low wooden gate. She looked up at the sound of his footstep with a sudden blush.

"I did not know you were at Davenant, Sir Cyprian," she said, with some little embarrassment, as they shook hands.

"I have not been at Davenant, Miss Clanyarde. I only left town this morning. I have come down here to say good-by to Davenant and all old friends."

The blush faded and left the lovely face very pale.

"Is it true that you are going to Africa, Sir Cyprian? I heard from some friends in town that you were going to join Captain Harcourt's expedition."

"It is quite true. I promised Harcourt some years ago that if he ever went again I would go with him."

"And you are pleased to go, I suppose?"

"No, Miss Clanyarde, not pleased to go. But I think that sort of thing is about the best employment for the energies of a waif and stray, such as I am. I have lived my life, you see, and have not a single card left to play in the game of civilized existence. There is some hope of adventure out yonder. Are you going home?"

"Yes, I was just saying good-by to Miss Evans as you came in."

"Then I'll walk back to Marchbrook with you, if you'll allow me. I told the lodgekeeper I would return by-and-by in the hope of finding Lord Clanyarde."

"You have been to Marchbrook already, then?"

"Yes; and they told me at the lodge that I should find you here."

After this there came rather an awkward silence. They walked away from the schoolhouse side by side, Sir Cyprian furtively watchful of his companion's face, in which there were signs of a sorrow that seemed something deeper than the conventional regret which a fashionable beauty might express for the departure of a favorite waltzer.

The silence was not broken until they had arrived at a point where two roads met, the turnpike road to Marchbrook and a shady lane—a cross-country road, above which the overarching branches of the elms made a roof of foliage at this bright midsummer season. There was a way of reaching Marchbrook by this lane—a tempting walk compared to the high-road.

"Let us go back by the lane," said Cyprian. "It is a little longer, but I am sure you are not in a hurry. You would have dawdled away half the morning talking to that young woman at the school, if I hadn't come to fetch you; and it will be our last walk together, Constance. I may call you Constance, may I not, as I used when you were in the nursery? I am entitled to a few dismal privileges, like a dying man, you know. Oh, Constance, what happy hours we have spent together in these Kentish lanes! I shall see them in my dreams out yonder, and your face will shine down upon me from a background of green leaves and blue sky; and then I shall awake to find myself camping out upon some stretch of barren sand, with jackals howling in the distance."

"What a dreadful picture!" said Constance, with a faint forced laugh. "But if you are so reluctant to leave England, why do you persist in this African expedition?"

"It is a point of honor with me to keep my promise; and it is better for me to be away from England."

"You are the best judge of that question."

Sir Cyprian was slow to reply to this remark. He had come down to Kent upon a sudden impulse, determined in no manner to betray his own folly, and bent only upon snatching the vain delight of a farewell interview with the girl he loved. But to be with her and not to tell her the truth was more difficult than he had imagined. He could see that she was sorry for his departure. He believed that she loved him, but he knew enough of Viscount Clanyarde's principles and his daughter's education to know there would be something worse than cruelty in asking this girl to share his broken fortunes.

"Yes, Constance," he went on, "it is better for me to be away. So long as I am here it is the old story of the insect and the flame. I cannot keep out of temptation. I cannot keep myself from haunting the places where I am likely to meet the girl I love, fondly, foolishly, hopelessly. Don't look at me with those astonished eyes, my darling; you have known my secret ever so long. I meant to keep silent till the very end; but, you see the words are spoken in spite of me. My love, I dare not ask you to be my wife. I dare only tell you that no other woman will fill that place. You are not angry with me, Constance, for having spoken?"

"Angry with you—" she began, and then broke down utterly and burst into tears.

He drew his arm round her with a tender, protecting gesture, and soothed her gently, as if she had been a child.

"My darling, I am not worth your tears. If I had been a better man, I might have redeemed Davenant by this time, and might have hoped to make you my wife. There would have been some hope for me, would there not, dear, if I could have offered you a home that your father could approve?"

"I am not so mercenary as you think me," answered Constance, drying her tears, and disengaging herself from Sir Cyprian's encircling arm. "I am not afraid of poverty. But I know that my father would never forgive——"

"And I know it too, my dearest girl, and you shall not be asked to break with your father for such a man as I. I never meant to speak of this, dear, but perhaps it is better that I should have spoken. You will soon forget me, Constance, and I shall hear of you making some brilliant marriage before I have been away very long. God grant the man may be worthy of you! God grant you may marry a good man!"

"I am not very likely to marry," replied Miss Clanyarde.

"My dearest, it is not possible you can escape; and heaven forbid that my memory should come between you and a happy future. It is enough for one of us to carry the burden of a life-long regret."

There was more talk between them before they arrived at a little gate opening into the Marchbrook kitchen-garden—fond, regretful talk of the days that were gone, in which they had been so much together down in Kent, with all the freedom permitted between friends and neighbors of long standing, the days before Constance had made her debut in the great world.

Sir Cyprian did not persevere in his talked-of visit to Lord Clanyarde. He had, in truth, very little desire to see that gentleman, who was one of the most pompous and self-opinioned of noblemen. At the little garden gate he grasped Miss Clanyarde's two hands in his own with one fond, fervent grasp. "'It must be for years, and it may be forever.' It is an eternal parting for me, darling, for I can never hope to call you by that sweet name again. You have been very good to me in letting me speak so freely to-day and it is a kind of consolation to have told you my sorrow. God bless you, and good-by."

This was their parting. Sir Cyprian went back to Davenant, and spent a dreary hour in walking up and down the corridor and looking into the empty rooms. He remembered them tenanted with the loved and lost. How dreary they were now in their blank and unoccupied state, and how little likelihood there was that he should ever see them again! His dinner was served to him in a pretty break-fast room, with a bay-window overlooking a garden that had been his mother's delight, and where the roses she had loved still blossomed in all their glory. The memory of the dead was with him as he ate his solitary meal, and he was glad when it was time for him to leave the great desolate house, in which every door closed with a dismal reverberation, as if it had been shutting upon a vault.

He left Davenant immediately after dinner, and walked back to the little station, thinking mournfully enough of his day's work and of the life that lay before him. Before noon next day he and his companions were on the first stage of their journey, speeding towards Marseilles.

THEY COME HIGH.

Commercial Value of Wild Animals for Circus Purposes.

Few people have a correct idea of the commercial value of wild animals. The price is fixed by menageries and circuses, because these are the largest buyers. We give the value of some of these animals as estimated by a prominent showman. The famous Jumbo cost $10,000 and this sum was increased to $28,000 by subsequent expenses, such as transportation. The elephant was worth to his owners $30,000 a week. Giraffes are quoted at $6,000 each and hippopotami are valued at $4,000 each. A rhinoceros with one horn cost $3,000. Another horn adds just $1,000 to his value. Lions range from $800 to $1,200. A lioness costs $1,000 and tigers are quoted at $1,000. Grizzly bears are becoming scarce, and are hard to keep in captivity. A really fine specimen is worth $1,000, and they range from that down to $500. Polar bears come at $800. Other bears range from $50 to $200. A camel with one hump is worth $350, and two humps brings the market value up to $400. Ostriches are valued at $800 apiece.

Gnus, which don't attract much attention, are found in every first-class menagerie and cost $700. The American buffalo is worth $500, just $100 more than his Indian brother. The Rocky mountain goat is quoted rather high, $500, while panthers and leopards are plenty at $250 each, and hyenas and pumas go for $175. Antelopes range all the way from $185 to $300, and deer from $75 to $100, while a moose brings $500, the same price as a nylghau.

An ant-eater is worth $400; hartbeests (a kind of antelope), wart hogs and sloths, $350; cheetahs, alpacas and guanacos, $300; tapirs, $400. Sea lions bring from $300 to $400, while seals are worth but $50. Zebus are worth $250; llamas, $200; emus, $175, and mountain lions, $100. Armadillos are to be had for $50, and porcupines for half that amount. Wolves come a little higher. They average $75. Kangaroos have increased in value of late years. They are now quoted of $150. The more valuable monkeys range from $20 to $75. Horses are very valuable in a show and these animals trained for circus purposes are worth $2,500.

Militia of the States.

The entire organized militia of the various States number 112,190, divided as follows: Alabama, 2,960; Arkansas, 981; California, 4,944; Colorado, 827; Connecticut, 2,751; Delaware, 330; Florida, 1,011; Georgia, 3,535; Idaho, 232; Illinois, 4,777; Indiana, 2,633; Iowa, 2,315; Kansas, 1,666; Kentucky, 1,331; Louisiana, 1,249; Maine, 1,064; Maryland, 2,118; Massachusetts, 8,566; Michigan, 2,801; Minnesota, 1,801; Mississippi, 1,705; Missouri, 2,415; Montana, 526; Nebraska, 1,086; Nevada, 493; New Hampshire, 1,255; New Jersey, 3,915; New York, 12,810; North Carolina, 1,782; North Dakota, 479; Ohio, 6,125; Oregon, 1,575; Pennsylvania, 8,614; Rhode Island, 1,476; South Carolina, 5,440; South Dakota, 779; Tennessee, 1,794; Texas, 2,784; Vermont, 784; Virginia, 3,221; Washington, 1,702; West Virginia, 900; Wisconsin, 2,721; Wyoming, 415; Arizona, 470; New Mexico, 469; District of Columbia, 1,563.

The aggregate men available for military duty unorganized is given as 8,223,997. Of this latter class New York and Illinois contribute the largest numbers, being put down for 650,000 each.

A Grand but Unique Memorial.

The monument which has been erected upon the battlefield of Solferino is one of the largest, if not the largest, of its kind in Europe. It consists of a tower seventy-four meters high, surmounted by an electric lamp, and rises in seven stories, each representing a campaign in the struggle for the independence of Italy. Each separate story contains all the names of the generals and other officers, as well as the men who fought in that campaign. No fewer than 700,000 names are thus inscribed on the inner walls of the monument. On the ground floor are the busts and portraits of all the leading generals, and the chief ornament in the center of the ground floor is the colossal monument in bronze of Victor Emmanuel, by the Venetian sculptor Dal Zotto. The tower stands in grounds beautifully laid out, and constitutes a magnificent memorial of Italian unity. Beneath the structure repose 2,000 skulls and other remains of soldiers of the three nations who fell on the field of Solferino.

Hard Times Affect Society.

Young clubmen in New York are complaining not a little of the loss of many good dinners, which helped to eke out their small incomes so comfortably of yore; and fashionable married couples are enjoying a Darby and Joan sort of existence which may or may not be acceptable. The great lack of dinners this winter in New York is most striking, and the traveling Englishman has fallen upon evil days indeed. "I was told that your people were so extraordinarily hospitable," said a newly arrived Briton the other day, "and that I should be asked to dine somewhere every night, but I have been asked out only a couple of times, although I have presented all my letters and have been in New York for the last ten days."

Hot in Australia.

The weather in Australia during the present antipodean summer has been unusually hot and oppressive. In Adelaide, during December, the thermometer several times registered over 100 degrees in the shade, and one day it climbed to 107 in the shade and 161 in the sun. In Melbourne the hundred notch has been reached more than once, and the scorching north winds have made the atmosphere exceedingly oppressive. The foregoing figures are from weather observatory readings, and probably do not represent by several degrees the temperature of the city streets.

AT the present rate of increase there will be 63,000,000 people in Canada in fifty years' time, and 190,000,000 in the United States.

WORLD'S LARGEST FIRE ENGINE.

"Jumbo," No. 3, of the Hartford, Conn., Department.

The Nutmeg State boasts of having in its capital city the largest and most powerful steam fire engine in the world. The engine is a self-propelling machine, and was built by the Amoskeag Company, at Manchester, N. H., in 1889. In appearance the engine looks as formidable as it really is, and the excellence of its work can only be appreciated when closely watched while in service. "Jumbo," as the engine is called, is perhaps the first thing of interest pointed out to a stranger in the city, the spot where once stood the famous charter oak tree being a sort of second fiddle to the big engine.

The engine stands 9 feet 9 inches in height, over all; 16 feet 6 inches length; 7 feet 3 inches in width; weight, fully equipped for service, 17,000 pounds, the two rear wheels weighing in the neighborhood of 1,650 pounds. The boiler is fed from a tank under the tillerman's seat when going to or from a fire, or at any time when not connected to a hydrant. This tank holds 120 gallons.

The size of the engine proper may be judged from the following figures: Diameter of boiler, 40 inches; diameter of cylinder, 9½ inches; diameter of pumps, 5½ inches; length of stroke, 8 inches. During her two trial tests the engine was watched carefully by builders from other cities, and at the conclusion of her work each one expressed himself as having seen what a fire engine had never done before—and that was to throw a stream of water with such force as to tear the clap-boarding off the side of a house. During a recent fire at the Colt's Patent Firearms and Manufacturing Company's factory, No. 3 virtually saved the big armory from destruction.

"JUMBO," NO. 3.

"Jumbo" was put in service in August, 1889. At the first trial test a stream was thrown 348 feet.

TWO NOTED WOMEN.

One a Beauty and Wit; the Other a Religieuse and a Saint.

The most noted woman in France in the seventeenth century was Madame de Sevigne, whom her own generation pronounced the "marchioness of marchionesses." Her beauty, wealth and wit made her the most admired of women, and the most distinguished men in the nation, such as the Prince de Conti and Turenne, sighed for her love in vain. Her letters to her daughter, Madame de Grignan, are classic in French literature and will forever perpetuate her name.

MADAME DE SEVIGNE.

The grandmother of Madame de Sevigne, Madame de Chantal, was also famous in her day. At the age of 28, after her husband's death, she devoted herself to the sick and poor, and acting by the advice of St. Francis de Sales she founded at Annecy the order of the Visitation Nuns. At her death, in 1614, the order comprised eighty-seven houses, and at the close of the century they numbered 150, with a membership of 6,600. Madame de Chantal was canonized by Clement XII. in 1767.

MADAME DE CHANTAL.

Two Years More for His Vanity.

French judges have summary ways in cases of contempt of court, as an anarchist named Rentiere, who appealed against a sentence of six months' imprisonment passed on him for swindling, has found out to his cost. In the Court of Appeals the President asked him why he sought to have the sentence altered. The anarchist, in a clear voice replied, very deliberately: "I have appealed solely in order to be able to tell you this—I have spent all my life in prison, and I consider it unjust that the innocent should suffer, while on the bench of this court are seated cruel wretches (des borreaux) and murderers." The President had the last word. His retort was: "We confirm your sentence of six months' imprisonment, and we order you to be detained further for two years for contempt of court" (outrage aux magistrats).—London Daily News.

The following officers are to be elected:

One Marshal,
One Clerk,
One Treasurer,
each for the term of one year;
One Trustee in First (1st) Ward,
One Trustee in Third (3d) Ward,
One Trustee in Fourth (4th) Ward,
each for the term of two years,

In testimony of which I have set my hand and affixed the seal of said town this 3d day of April, 1894. U. S. RAUT.
[SEAL] Town Clerk.

Probate Cause No. 2010.

State of Indiana, DeKalb County, } ss: } In the DeKalb Circuit Court, May Term 1894.

John C. Dick, Ellen Dick, Martha J. Coy and George Coy, you and each of you are hereby notified that Jacob Walborn as administrator of the estate of Christopher Dick deceased, has filed in the Circuit Court of DeKalb county, Indiana, a petition making you defendants thereto, and praying therein for an order and decree of said court for partition and authorizing the sale of certain real estate belonging to the estate of said decedent, and in said petition described, to make assets for the payment of the debts and liabilities of said estate; and that said petition, so filed and which is now pending, is set for hearing in said Circuit Court at the court house in Auburn Indiana, on the 6th day of June, 1894

Witness, the clerk and seal of said court, this 7th day of April, 1894.

DANIEL D MOODY.
Clerk DeKalb Circuit Court.
By Blanche Shilling, Deputy.

E. D. Hartman. Attorney.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, in a cause wherein Albert Robbins, John C. Henry and Nicholas Ensley are plaintiffs and Joseph E Ensley, Granville H. Forkner, George W. Gordon, Louisa M. Ensley, George Lanning Isaac Hague and James Draggoo are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of two thousand five hundred and fifty-six dollars and fourty one cents, with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder on between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m., and 4 o'clock p. m. of said day, at the door of the court house of DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years of the following real estate, to wit.

The undivided one half (½) of the southeast quarter of section twenty-one (21) in township thirty-three (33) north of range twelve (12) east. Also all that part of the southwest quarter of section thirty-two (32) in township thirty-four (34) north of range thirteen [13] east, lying south of Stangier's recorded plat of out lots to the town of Auburn said county, and the south boundary line of the right of way of the Detroit, Eel River & Illinois railroad, and bounded on the west by the center line of the public highway leading from Auburn to Ft. Wayne, Indiana, on the south by a line seventeen and sixty-two hundredth (17.62) chains north of the south line of said section and on the east by the east line of said southwest quarter, excepting from the last above described tract, the following tracts to-wit: first, that part included in Ensley's third addition to said town of Auburn, second, about one and one-half acres adjoining said addition on the north, part of which is now owned by Isabelle Grosh and the other part being the parcel belonging to the owners of the grist mill thereon situate as appurtenant thereto; third, one acre owned by Auburn Foundry and Machine Works; fourth, about one-fifth of an acre conveyed by George Ensley, deceased, to Eliza A. Case, in December, 1875, and, fifth, about three and fifty-seven hundredth (3.57) acres conveyed by said deceased to Oscar Gandy and Addison B Nickey now owned by Addison B. Nickey and Samuel M. Nickey, all in DeKalb county state of Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place, expose at public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....APRIL 12, 1894.

Judicial Convention.

The Democratic Judicial Convention for the 35th Judicial Circuit, composed of the counties of Steuben and DeKalb, will be held at Waterloo on at 2 p. m. All delegates to the judicial convention are earnestly requested to be present.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 2 1894,

JOHN F. SHUMAN, } Chairmen.
JOHN W. SOMERLOTT, }

Union Judicial Caucus.

The caucus met in the sheriff's office at 2 p. m. Saturday, April 7, 1894. J. A. Barns was made chairman and W. B. Brown secretary. It was decided that the southwest precinct should have two delegates and each of the others one. The selections were then made: southwest, John Harris and J. J. VanAuken; southeast, F. A. Moody; northeast, R. S. S. Reed; northwest, S. L. Campbell. The meeting then adjourned.

Waterloo democrats selected Phil Plum and S. A. Dilgard for the two delegates to which they are entitled in the judicial convention.

The Paper to Advertise in.

The COURIER has been crowded with advertising for two weeks. We have not for years solicited advertising, though it is necessary for the existence of a paper. But advertisers come and ask for space. They have learned the value of a paper that has a club in every postoffice in the county and sends papers into every one of the 115 school districts in DeKalb. The value of a paper for advertising purposes depends on the number of families it reaches, and the thoroughness with which it covers the county. A paper going to only a part of the county or to a few scattered families in various little localities is an advertising medium of as much less value as its territory and list of subscribers are smaller. Ten acres, all good land, will raise more wheat than five acres of land that is good only in "spots." A farmer knows what his fields are worth. An advertiser knows what his advertising field is worth. It is also to be noticed that the COURIER keeps up the usual amount of reading matter. It may be scattered a little and some of it may be forced off into a supplement, but it is there. The reading matter in the COURIER also covers a wider range of subjects, and embraces more articles of general interest. It is not confined to the things that interest one locality, but "shines for all." Hence, it has more readers, and with the greater number of readers, it is the most valuable medium for advertising.

WOMEN in Iowa will hereafter vote for town, city and school officers on all questions of issuing bonds. The law was passed last week.

THE people are waiting to hear congress call a roll without 164 members absent or refusing to answer to their names while drawing pay.

STRAWBOARD factory at Anderson lost 200 tons of baled straw, by fire, Sunday. Supposed work of an incendiary—not caused by the Wilson bill.

ALL the glass factories at Anderson are at work. But the proposed Wilson bill puts glass on the free list or nearly so. They don't seem to need "protection."

THE tariff on our most used articles never was as high as at the present time, yet farm products continue to go down. Would it not be good policy to try a lower tariff rate? It could be no worse.

THE advance guard of Coxey's army reached Washington by a B. & O freight train Sunday night. They were fed, then ordered to leave town or be sent to jail, that being the law there, in regard to tramps.

THAT Coxey's "army" is made up of tramps and bums, and not of workingmen, is seen by the fact they have several times refused offers of work at fair wages. But they never fail to be on hand for a free meal.

LET republicans help to repeal bad laws and make better ones, or else stop complaining of bad times. They are responsible for any evils resulting from bad legislation, and are doing all they can to prevent anything better.

A LARGE division of tramps coming to join Coxey's army was in St. Louis Sunday. The city offered them a year's work at $1.50 a day to put down water works pipes. But they refused, saying they were not there to dig in the mud and to lay pipes.

LARGE steel manufacturing plant at Newcastle, Pa., is selling steel billets in Canada at a lower price than England has been furnishing. This proves what we have often said, that our manufacturers can beat England on prices and therefore do not need "protection." Protection is a swindle.

A COLORED pension agent has been arrested at Chattanooga for extensive frauds in procuring pensions. When no one else would make a false affidavit, he would swear to it himself. Here is another chance for the republican papers to insist that this administration is unfriendly to the soldier.

REPUBLICANS are largely to blame for the present delay in passing laws. They absent themselves from roll call, from 160 to 180 daily. Being assisted, we are sorry to say, by about a dozen eastern democrats. But they have it in their power to help the better sort of democrats to pass better laws, any day.

THE people should not lose sight of the fact that any bad legislation that has tended to bring on hard times, is republican legislation like the McKinley law, and the Sherman law. They should also notice that republicans in congress and out, are doing all they can to keep bad laws alive, and to prevent democrats from making better ones.

IT IS now told that several of the "expert doctors" who were witnesses in the great Deeters trial, gave the reporters $5 apiece to give them, the doctors, a flattering write-up in their papers. If this is so, it is but another proof that, while doctors as a general thing refuse to advertise, yet they like to have a "puff" when it can be done without calling it "advertising."

"FREE wool did the business" say republican papers when speaking of the low price of wool. We do not suppose these editors would tell a willful lie, therefore we suppose they must be so ignorant as to suppose wool is on the free list. The facts are wool is "protected" by a very high duty, the very duty laid by their favorite McKinley law several years ago.

THE populist party has not proved a flattering success anywhere. In the states and localities where they have gone into power, there has been nothing but mismanagement and trouble. They do not seem to be men of cool judgment, or that moderation and self-control needed in carrying on even local government. They are run mainly by their prejudices, and not by the dictates of moderate reason and judgment.

THE Bland silver seigniorage bill came up in the House again last week, and a vote was taken to see if it could be passed over the President's veto. At the first vote, there was not enough for a quorum, although two-thirds of those who did vote, voted for the bill. A second vote was taken and those who had refused to vote before, now voted, but there was not two-thirds in favor of it. So it will not become a law.

AN IDEA of the remarkable increase in the growth of what in the Argentine Republic is shown by the following figures that will interest American producers. In 1850, 120,000 acres were under cultivation, which produced 30,000 tons of wheat; in 1860, 160,000 acres produced 40,000 tons; in 1870, 240,000 acres produced 60,000 tons; in 1880, 490,000 acres produced 120,000 tons; in 1890, 2,800,000 acre produced 900,000 tons, and in 1893, 6,100,000 acres produced 1,920,000 tons. The average yield per acre last year was 14 bushels.

D. D. MOODY, Clerk.
By Blanche Shilling, Deputy.
Baxter & Brown, Attorneys.

As to Politics

Our people should read the call for the judicial convention. It explains itself. We hear of no name for Judge except that of Cyrus Cline of Angola for the democrats. He is a worthy man. The republicans are talking of E. D. Hartman, J. E. Ross and W. L. Penfield of DeKalb, and J. A. Woodhull and Emmett Bratton of Steuben. It is likely it will be a DeKalb man, as this county has the most votes in the convention.

CONGRESSINAL

There is serious talk of putting up a new man for Congress as Mr. McNagny proved such an utter failure in some regards, that the party leaders are afraid to go into a campaign with him for years he will be defeated and drag the rest of the tickets down with him. It is also believed by many that he will decline to run again, as he has already got out of the office all the honor he ever can. In case he is not a candidate Judge Powers, will no doubt be a prominent candidate. In fact he is being urged to make the race any way. He would no doubt make a strong candidate and could be easily elected. He would, besides, make a good member, and be a great improvment. For prosecutor we presume Mr. Butler will not again be a candidate. But Mr. Charles Yotter, a rising young attorney of Angola, will be the probable nominee. He is a young man of ability.

COUNTY POLITICS

It is a little early for county politics. But we will give what news we have. Frank Seiler, W. L. Blair, D. Tomlinson and Frank Borst are the only men spoken of so far for auditor. For clerk, we hear only the names of W. H. Less and Sol. Barney. For recorder, there are many: Geo. Lanning, C. A. Jenkins, M. Kiplinger, John Crimmins, Wm. Whetsel and possibly, L. C. Loveland. We believe there are others, but we cannot recall them. For treasurer, we have Henry Hines, and P. K. David. There seems to be no name for commissioner in this district, the Southwest, though some are talking of J. Wm. Wagner and James Kelham of Keyser. In the north we have only the names of of B. F. Cornelius, Fred. Gfeller and Allen Schultz. All are good men.

NOTES ON THE ABOVE.

Judge Powers having declined to run for judge, leaves the field as far as we know to Cyrus Cline of Angola. Mr. Cline was for some years county superintendent of Steuben county and later went into the practice of law, which we learn he has made a good record in. We believe he would make a good judge. Since writing the above we learn that F. M. Powers will be a candidate on the democratic side.

As to county clerk, there seems to be but two candidates at present, W. H. Less, at Waterloo, is a successful attorney, and would bring to office if elected, the valuable knowledge of the forms and procedures of courts of law' He would make a good race, Sol. Barney, the other candidate is a man of ability and ripe business experience. He is well skilled in politics and a good vote getter. He is a son of one of the most popular of our early county officers 'Squire George Barney who was treasurer from 1861 to 1864.

Of the candidates for auditor, W. L. Blair is to well known too need introduction to the democrats of this county. He has been county chairman several terms and has been several times a candidate before our convention, for the place he now seeks. He is able and honest. Frank A. Borst has made himself familiar with the details of all the varied work in the auditor's office, and there is no more competent man in the county. Frank Seiler of Fairfield, another candidate, is a young man of fine business education and abilities, and besides strictly honest. We have not talked with all the candidates, but have word that Damel Tomlinson of Butler may conclude to enter the field. He made a splendid township trustee when he filled that place some years ago.

For treasurer we are told that 'Squire Henry Hines of Jackson will be in the field. He is a man of strictest honesty, intelligent and capable. He would be a good officer. P. K. David of Keyser is another candidate. He is a good business man, having for many years conducted a prosperous grocery in Garret, where we are told he is popular. We had expected that Warren McNabb of the same place would ask for this office, but we have received a letter from him, in which he states he will not be a candidate, James Kelham of the same township has been spoken of, but as far as we know, he has not agreed to run. He is also spoken of for commissioner, and would be a good man in either place.

Those asking the office of recorder, deserve more than a passing notice. George Lanning of this place, has a wide business acquaintance and valuable experience in several lines. He has been for several years engaged in mercantile business, and for a number of years past, has been cashier in the Davis bank here. He served several terms as town clerk, and as town trustee, and always with marked ability. He is industrious painstaking and would be a good recorder. John Crimmens of Garrett is a young man of good abilities and excellent training. He is a telegraph operator, and we are told is a worthy young man. C. A. Jenkins of Wilmington, is a prosperous and intelligent farmer, and would make a good officer. Everybody in the south part of the country knows "Charley". Michael Kiplinger of Waterloo is a bright intelligent man and has been successful in handling his own business, and is very popular. Wm. Whetsel, to is serving his last year as trustee of Franklin township it being a four year office. He is well educated, was a teacher before he became trustee, and has proved a faithful officer. L. C. Loveland is a practical farmer of Stafford township and a man who stands well where he is known. As we said it is not certain whether he will be a candidate. But this article is to give voters information, so they can make a good relection. We might there add that Ed. Lauren of Butler, who has been spoken of for recorder, will not probably be in the race

The candidate for sheriff will be Mr. Ralston; and for surveyor, Mr. VanAuken, both having made excellent records, and both being entitled to a renomination according to the rules of the party.

We said, the matter of commissioner is not well settled. No one seems to ask very earnestly for an office that brings little pay and much abuse. Of the the men spoken of for the North district, all are farmers. Mr. Gfeller has been four years trustee of Smithfield, and Mr. Cornelius the same length of time trustee of Troy. Cornelius is also good carpenter. Mr. Shultz is not only a farmer but a sawmill man, and all are wideawake business men. In the south west, the men we have heard spoken of, Mr. Wagner is now a farmer, though, he has a store and other property, including the Opera House, in Garrett. He himself devotes his time to the farm. Mr. Kelham is a prosperous and intelligent farmer, and well liked. But we are not certain that either will run. We have heard nothing as to coroner, and as there is little money or fame in the office there will likely be few seekers. It is possible that Mr. Miser will run again though we have not heard from him. The above is a full list as far as we can remember. Let the voters look over it carefully and select the best.

Democratic City Caucus.

As notified in the call in the COURIER, the caucus for the nomination of a city ticket was held in the court room Tuesday evening April 10, 1894. The meeting was called to order by J. F. Aber, and on motion of Walborn, M. Boland was made chairman. On motion of J. A. Barns, D. Y. Husselman was chosen secretary. Nominations were declared in order. For treasurer, C. H. G. Jones, having no opposition, was declared the unanimous choice. For clerk Milo Husselman and Ernest Sheets were named. For marshal, Alvin Baker, Wm. Zeiders, Samuel Fretz and Charles Reesch were named. For trustee in First Ward, Ira Brandon was nominated without opposition In the Third Ward, John Jones and Dr. D. N. Fitch were named. In the Fourth Ward, Jacob Wagner and Thos. F. Baird. The vote on clerk resulted, Husselman 99; Sheets 51. For marshal, Baker got 97; Reesch, 31; Fretz, 10; Zeiders, 31; Baker got it. For trustee in the Third Ward, Jones had 35 votes, and Fitch, 85. In the Fourth Ward, Baird got 88 votes and Wagner 22. The old committeemen were continued another year, J. F. Aber, F. A. Borst and W. B. Brown. The meeting then adjourned. The attendance was unusally great as shown by the vote, and everything was harmonious. The ticket named is a good one. We shall have more to say of them next week.

COURT.

The jury, after being out all Tuesday night, decided that Abrams and Greenwood, of Butler, might go free. They were accused of stealing meat, and though their reputation is not first-class, the proof did not seem strong enough.

Wm. Ross stole a pair of rubber boots and got 20 days in jail and a sound lecture from Judge Powers, who plainly told him he had no business to get drunk and then steal.

In State against Rowe, defendant had deposited $200 as a bond for his appearance at court. He preferred not to appear, and the $200 was ordered forfeited. The school fund will gain so much.

Good deal of odds and ends of work has been done, but as court closes this week, a good deal will have to go over.

AS YET, we have no positive information that either the Press or Dispatch has circulated a remonstrance against that bridge at Waterloo. By all means let us have the matter settled before it is too late.

UNEMPLOYED men might ask the republican party why 50,000 or 100,000 of them could not be employed in ocean commerce. Before a republican law killed off our merchant marine interests, three-fourths of all the freight and passenger business done in our seaboard towns, especially that to and from foreign ports, was done by American ships, manned by American seamen, under the American flag. This business employed large American capital and many thousand men. But for nearly thirty years under republican laws, our commerce at sea has been almost nothing, only about one-tenth of all being done by our own people. And now, even when American capital owns the ship, it often happens that it must sail under a foreign flag, as it cannot be commissioned under our laws.

Cures Dyspepsia.

Rebecca Wilkinson, of Brownsvalley, Ind., says: "I have been in a distressed condition for three years from nervousness, weakness of the stomach, dyspepsia and indigestion until my health was gone, I had been doctoring constantly with no relief. I bought one bottle of South American Nervine, which did me more good good any $50 worth of doctoring I ever did in my life. I would advise every weakly person to use this valuable and lovely remedy; a few bottles of it has cured me completely. I consider it the grandest medicine in the world." Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottle 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord.

Administrator's Sale of Real Estate.

Notice is hereby given that by virtue of an order of the DeKalb circuit court, the undersigned, administrator of the estate of John Washler, deceased, will offer, for sale at public auction, on the following described tracts of land to-wit: The west half of the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section fourteen (14), containing twenty (20) acres of land; also a strip of land twenty-four (24) rods wide off the east side of the south-west quarter of the northeast quarter of said section fourteen (14) containing twelve (12) acres; also the south half of the northwest quarter of said northeast quarter, excepting ten (10) acres of the west end thereof, containing ten (10) acres, all in said section fourteen (14), township thirty three (33), north of range thirteen [13] east.

Also the following tract: The southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of sale section fourteen (14) and all that par of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of said section fourteen (14), lying west of a line running north and south seventy six [76] rods west of the east line of said southwest quarter, excepting from the first described southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, one (1) acre of land out of the northwest corner thereof, and a cart-way along the west side thereof, conveyed by the court to C. A. Washler, by first offering for sale the forty (40) acre tract; second by offering for sale the forty-two (42) acre tract above described, and upon failure to sell either tract separately, then I will offer the whole of the above described land for sale

Terms of the sale:

One-third (⅓) cash, one-third (⅓) in twelve (12) months and one-third (⅓) in eighteen (18) months. Deferred payments to be evidenced be the purchaser's note bearing 6 per cent interest from date of sale, and attorney's fees, waiving relief from valuation and appraisement laws, and secured by a mortgage on the premises sold. Sale to be made upon the premises, and to begin at ten o'clock a. m. of said day, or as soon thereafter as practicable.

WONDER!

DID YOU EVER?

Stop to think that when you need anything in the line of Jewelry, Silverware, Clocks, Watches, Etc., Etc., that you should see

D. A. HODGE,
The Popular Jeweler.

In Robbins & McCord's.

See F. J. Yeshera's notice of his 2:28 horse, Col. Sterling.

Mrs. Dr. Buchtel is visiting in Ligonier. The Doctor will be there also, over Sunday.

Chas E. Miller, the reliable optician of Muncie, will again be at Yeshera's jewelry store Tuesday, April 17.

A. E. Tanberg, is here this week, and his wife will be here the last of this week. After a brief visit here, they will return to Janesville, Wis., their former home, and willl locate there. The COURIER, and their many friends here, wish them prosperity.

Geo. F Reed brought word yesterday, of the burning of the dwelling on the Wes. Sebert place east of here that forenoon about nine o'clock. When the fire was built that morning some coals set the carpet on fire but it was put out. About nine o'clock it was discovered, that the fire had started again, and was now in the roof. Mr. Reed got there on a run, but they could save but little. Cyrus Maurer and Silas Franks occupied the house, and lost the most of their goods.

C. P. Houser is at home this week attending to business which called him from Warsaw, where he is engaged in doing some special work for H. H. Hardesty & Co. publishers of a military work intended for soldiers and their friends He tendered his services as a soldier in defense of his country, and performed faithful service. He has spent the most of his years as a representative of some of its largest educational and school furnishing houses in the country. He was for a number of years editor and publisher of the Auburn Dispatch. We can truthfully say that the publisher of this great work has been fortunate in securing the services of as trustworthy and reliable a man as Mr Houser is Those who have dealings with him may feel certain of honorable business treatment.

Rev. W. L. Meese, has rented rooms of James Roland, the place next south of his residence, where his friends can find him at any time, as he will still make Auburn his home.

Reba Houser had her hand badly hurt the other day at Chicago where she is bookeeper and stenographer for Marcus, & Co. a large firm of merchant tailors. It was hurt in closing the safe door.

The S H. G will meet Saturday with Mrs Penfield. Program: Quotations on Spring; American Commonwealth, Mrs. Clifton; History, Mrs. Rant; Virgil's life and character, Mrs. Penfield; music Mrs. McIntyre.

Mr. Wooten comes back to Auburn for another year. We are glad to hear it and believe the church will be suited as well as church going people generally. He is an able and earnest minister and deserves the compliment he has received.

The Auburn Swing washer, made and sold by Mr. Meese, is the only washing machine made in the county. It is no longer an experiment, as it has been in use here nearly four years. Clothes washed with it last longer, because they are not injured by rubbing, and being closed in, have the benefit of cleansing by steam. There is an advantage in buying this washer, as any repairs needed can be had right here, at all times of Mr. Meese.

Inclose stamp for reply to Mrs. Lena Cooper, 1534 Lorain St., Cleveland, O. to learn how her life was saved by Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, the great cure for Nervous diseases. Warranted by F. E. Davenport.

A. D. Gœtschius who has been here through the winter visiting his brother I. B. Gœtschius at the old home place in Richland township, has returned to his home at Hays City, Kansas. He has resided there many years.

John Hook, father of ex-surveyor, J. M. Hook, died at his home in Butler last Friday, and was buried Sunday. He was one of the most prominent and successful farmers in that section. He had been in poor health for some time.

James Steel, one of the best known of Auburn's young men, died at the home of his sister, Mrs. C. F. Wood, in Tiffin, on Monday. His remains were brought here for enterment Tuesday. He had been sick but a short time, the trouble being pneumonia.

Mrs. J. J. Zent has rented her house, corner of VanBuren and Fifth street, to Ex auditor C. C. Walter, who will at once occupy it. Mr. Walter finds that his poor health makes it necessary for him to stop farm work. Our people will welcome him and his wife to Auburn.

Rev. W. H. Mygrants of Hicksville, was arrested last week at Indianapolis on a charge of defacing the Soldiers' Monument on Governor's Circle. He wrote his name on it—a very foolish and child-like thing to do. We believe he was a teacher in this county many years ago.

G. F. Kerstetter writes from Bangor, Mich., that work in the peach orchards is very dull this season and he is now working on a grain farm. Isaac Cobler's health is improving and he expects to have a store in connection with the postoffice They think peaches will be a good crop this year.

The authorities would do well to look after a few of those dances that have been going on now and then, south of the jail. The business don't seem to stop at beer and music, and the people near by are complaining. It is only across the street to the place where they are likely to get pretty soon.

S. H. Long, one of Keyser township's best farmers, moved this week with his family to Benzonia, Mich. He says "Indiana is not cold enough." We are sorry to lose such desirable people, but Michigan will get them, and we have a friendly feeling for Michigan. We will keep them posted on affairs in old DeKalb.

Mrs. M. W. Harrison died at her home in Wabash, Sunday. She had been a great sufferer from some sort of tumor, for several years, and last summer she had an operation performed, and it was believed was cured. However she since got worse, and after a term of great suffering, death came to her relief. She was a woman of the highest character, finely educated and possessed of more than ordinary ability. The people of Auburn, to whom she had endeared herself, will hear of her death with sorrow.

Wm. Merica of Butler township was here Tuesday. His loss by the burning of his barn, was a serious one. It swept away a good barn, and all his hay, grain, farming implements, etc, together with a good span of horses. It was partly insured. On the building which was insured for $500, the company only paid $460 claiming a reduction of that much as the barn had been built eleven years. This was a queer reason to give, for the insurance was taken recently when it was near its present value. The insurance on contents was paid as in contract. Still his loss is a serious one.

As will be seen by a business notice we have this week. Purdy & Metcalf have opened up a store for well supplies and repairs in the room next south of Mossey's. Mr. Purdy will be in the store himself to wait on customers and receive orders, as his health does not allow him to do out door work. But all will have the benefit of his thorough knowledge of the business. Mr. Metcalf will be on the road a good deal, but will be prepared to take orders either for repairs or new wells, or any work in their line. The active out door work of putting in wells will be in the hands of Mr. Purdy's two sons, Dell and Fred, both of whom have worked at the business with their father for several years. This assures satisfactory work. Mr. Purdy himself is badly crippled with rheumatism, which has been bothering him more or less for some years. And while this new arrangement will no doubt increase his business, yet it will give him more release from exposure in out door work. We hope to see the new firm prosper.

Mr. Kiblinger has gone to Chattanooga. Tenn., to be gone a couple of months at least. This was done on the advice of his physicians Mrs. Kiblinger and Katie went with him to care for him, as did also his physician, Dr Nusbaum. The party started on the B. & O. eastbound train Sunday and went to Deshler, and thence to Cincinnati, from which point they go to their destination. A large number of friends gathered at the Junction to bid them farewell, for our people generally feel a lively interest in Mr. Kiblinger's welfare. We earnestly hope the change of climate may benefit him. The great trouble seems to be in his throat, some disease having fastened itself there, and it seems to be hard to overcome. A letter has been received from Dr. Nusbaum, since reaching Chattanooga, that Mr. Kiblinger stood the journey well, and hopes for improvement. He sends back grateful words to the many employes who showed their kindly feelings, by attending his departure and wishing him godspeed, and a speedy return in health.

Who hitched his horses to the fine maples in front of the M. E. church, and gave them a chance to gnaw off the bark thereof? It may ruin the tree, which is a beautiful one. A man can go to church and be a christian, as he ought to be, but when he makes a vandal of himself, we knock off a large per cent of his credit.

Dr. C. E. Nusbaum and wife moved last Thursday to Bremen, in Marshall county, where they will make their home and the Doctor will locate in the practice of his profession. Both leave many warm friends here, though they had been here but a limited time. The Doctor, besides being a highly educated and successful physician, is one of the "sweet singers of Israel" and both will be missed at the meetings of our popular musical club, of which both are members. The good people of Bremen may rest assured they have added two worthy people to their number. The COURIER joins their many friends here in wishing them a pleasant future, and the Doctor an extensive practice.

W. H. McIntyre began helping Mr Kiblinger to take care of his business in a general way, last week, on Wednesday. This is the kind of help Mr. Kiblinger has needed for some years He has had Mr. McIntyre in his mind for this work for some time, but the latter has had so much of his own extensive business to care for, that he has not felt it advisable to accept till now. But as Mr. Kiblinger has concluded to go south for a time, Mr. McIntyre will take charge, at least in his absence. The large and successful business experience Mr. McIntyre has had, will fit him fully for the varied and arduous duties of his new post, and will insure to Mr. Kiblinger's extensive business, that care and business judgment that will be needed in his acsence. Every one of the varied interests of this extensive business will be cared for as scrupously and safely as if under the eye of Mr. Kiblinger himself.

EX-EDITOR STEAD has returned to London and tells the people there that Chicago is about the wickedest city in the world outside of Russia. We would never know how badly we are off in this country if an occasional crank did not come over from the other side to write a book and replenish his exchequer.

AT Seattle, recently, the Oregon Improvement Company wanted forty men, at $2 a day, to repair a washout. The superintendent picked a number of men about the City Mission and other charitable institutions, and they agreed to be at the depot in time to go on the train. When train-time came he found only seven men on hand out of his forty "unemployed," and they proved so worthless that they were discharged after a day or two. And this while thousands of men are roaming the country in search of work.

THE height of the absurd has been reached in a Connecticut city, where certain Chinamen have boycotted a Sunday school because they suspect one of their teachers, who is the wife of a police sergeant, of having given testimony as to the whereabouts of their smoking dens. The spectacle of these "converted pagans" interdicting the institution which converted them, because it interferes indirectly with their heathenish vices, is enough to make Confucius cachinnate in the tomb, and Mencius, the Celestial philosopher, turn over and roar with glee in the silence of the ancestral temple!

ENGINEERS are as prone to color blindness as the rest of humanity, and signal lamps are as apt to break as any other kind of lamp. Therefore, one of the French railway companies is conducting a number of experiments with a view to abolishing colored signals altogether. The semaphore arm will be of tremendously tough glass, and will be illuminated by a powerful incandescent lamp placed near the pivot on which the arm swings. When the signal is at danger, the light will shine straight ahead; when it is "pulled off," the rays will be inclined, so as to still render the arm visible to the driver.

THE anarchists of Europe seem at present quite as much in danger from their bombs as are the monuments and people against whom their terrors are directed. The villain who tried to destroy the beautiful Church of the Madeleine in Paris was blown up by his own bomb, when it was struck by a door which swung back after he had pushed it open. That door will certainly become famous in the legends of the church, as time rolls on. Only the other day Bourdin, the anarchist, was killed by the bomb with which he was about to destroy Greenwich Observatory. The enemies of society will not be encouraged by these accidents.

THE advance of surgery can furnish few more singular illustrations than is supplied by an operation in one of the London hospitals, whereby the breast of a blackbird was fastened to a woman's face as a substitute for her nose, which had been so damaged that it had to be removed. The woman, who had been a housemaid in a hotel, had been struck in the face by a descending lift, which caused the injury that led to the operation. The operation has proved perfectly successful, with every appearance of the woman being provided with a useful nasal appendage, though how it will perform its functions when the cure is complete remains to be seen.

WHEN the guillotine struck off the head of Vaillant it gave the only fitting expression of abhorrence that justice and civilization have for the cowardly crime which he committed. His cowardly and murderous act in throwing a bomb into the Chamber of Deputies cannot be measured by its immediate effect. It was casting defiance into the teeth of the law and proclaiming that the anarchist's cry of "death to society" was no idle threat. There is no temporizing with such bloodthirsty enemies of society. There is no safety save in rendering them harmless. They strike at the very heart of our civilization and the instinct of self-preservation demands their suppression. When they attempt to put their accursed creed in operation the most drastic measures employed against them are none too severe. Toleration is wasted upon them and even in this country swift punishment should be substituted for the mistaken mercy which pleads for clemency and grants pardons.

THE whale fishery was at one time an enormous industry in the United States. It reached its height in 1854, when 602 ships and barks, twenty-eight brigs and thirty-eight schooners, with a total tonnage of 208,399, were engaged in it. By 1876 the fleet had dwindled down to 169 vessels, and it is doubtful if fifty are now at sea. The introduction of kerosene and the increasing scarcity of whales seem to be the causes of this decline. Some remarkable voyages were made in the old days. The Pioneer, of New London, sailed in June, 1864, for Davis Strait and Hudson's Bay, returning in September, 1865, with 1,391 barrels of oil and 22,650 pounds of bone, valued at $150,000. In 1847, the Envoy, of New Bedford, was sold to be broken up, but her purchaser refitted her and she made a voyage worth $132,450. On the other hand a vessel made a five years' voyage, and on her return the captain's lay was only $85. But, as the Nantucket captain, whose vessel returned from a three years' voyage as clean as she went out, remarked: "She ain't got a bar'l o' ile, but she's had a mighty fine sail."

THERE is trouble ahead for the musical critics. Don Fernando Diaz de Mendoza, a grandee of Spain, is about to adopt the stage as a profession. Don Fernando, etc., is not only as blue-blooded as a dog-show champion, but he is extremely sensitive to criticism. He shoots with both hands and upon the slightest provocation. A hint that he flatted on high C or that he parted company with the key at any time during the performance of an opera would be sufficient to send Don Fernando around the newspaper offices with a pair of six-shooters and a belt full of cartridges. It is somewhat reassuring to know, however, that he is not a particularly accurate marksman, having shot at his antagonist in his latest duel twenty-two times without scoring a hit. Unless he improves in this respect he could not hope to meet the American critics on equal terms. Most of these gentlemen delight in feats of broil and battle, and if Don Fernando were to go blazing away a dozen of times without hitting his man he would find himself slatted over the head with "Hullah's History of Modern Music," or the libretto of the Gotterdaemmerung, either of which would be likely to produce immediately fatal results. He will have to practice in a shooting gallery before he can hope to intimidate the independent press of this giant young Republic of the West.

THERE must be some reason for the increase of lawlessness in this country and most people will not seek far to find it. There is a growing contempt for the forms and the authority of law that is only too significant. It does not mean that the people are lacking in respect for the law, but that they are sick and tired of its maladministration. The men who lynch assassins are in the wrong, of course, but they are not without excuse; the citizens who tear up the tracks of marauding railroad companies rather than invoke the aid of the courts are also justified to some extent. The lynchers know that the assassin, if left to the law, will evade justice for months or years and may escape it altogether. As for fighting a railroad corporation in the courts, no man of sense dreams of such a thing nowadays. All the tricks and devices that can be invented by high-salaried lawyers are against the citizen, and the interminable delays and extravagant cost of litigation can be borne only by a wealthy corporation. Justice, or that which is now called justice, is in most cases at the disposal of the wrongdoer. The victim is forced out of court by technicalities, the delays of the law or the sheer weight of money. That is why lawlessness is spreading. Men have no reverence for the law which protects only the lawbreakers.

BATTLE OF THE TARIFF BEGUN IN THE SENATE.

"Tall Sycamore of the Wabash" Makes an Eloquent Plea for the Wilson Bill—The Bill in Its Present Shape Will Save Taxpayers $76,670,000.

The McKinley Law Is a Crime.

Senator Voorhees opened the tariff debate in the Senate Monday afternoon with the greatest speech of his life. He had been getting ready for the occasion for the last two weeks, and, according to a Washington dispatch, surprised his friends by his masterly presentation of the Democratic side of the subject. The Senator said:

Great abuses in government, strong by the sanction and growth of years, imbedded in the powerful interests of privileged classes, created, fostered, encouraged and protected by the laws themselves, have rarely, if ever, in any age, been promptly and totally eradicated, except by forcible revolution and bloodshed. Such is the concurrent and unbroken testimony of history. The spirit of peaceful and practical reform, on the other hand, is a reasoning and progressive spirit, moving forward step by step, no matter how radical and thorough its ends and aims may be, and overcoming the most gigantic evils with patient wisdom and courage, rather than by violent and wholesale assault. The protective system of tariff taxation as developed and fastened upon the business and labor of the American people, especially during the third of a century past, growing worse at every stage, is a system of indescribable injustice and oppression, and yet who will contend that all its vicious principles and workings can be annihilated by a single blow or totally wiped out by a single legislative enactment?

For the bill now under consideration no such claim is made, but in its behalf can be truthfully asserted, and will be successfully maintained, that it accomplishes a vast work in the field of tariff reform, embodies a great relief to the people from iniquitous existing burdens and constitutes a long stride, though not a final one, toward the approaching day of a full and perfect deliverance. I challenge the attention of the Senate and the country to the great and commanding fact that by the provisions of this bill the seeming paradox of a reduction of taxes and at the same time an increase of public revenues will be reconciled when it becomes a law. I will not stop to consider at this point the vast individual robberies committed in protected markets, the untold and incalculable millions of blackmail levied by American manufacturers for their own pockets on their enforced customers when cut off from all outside competition; it is enough for my present purpose to say that we have liberalized American markets, made them more accessible to the traffic of the world, and, while not establishing free trade, we have made trade freer and more even-handed between the manufacturer and the consumer.

The Bill Makes Reduction.

But over and above and beyond this wide and well-known field of extortion and injustice, it will be found from the schedules of this bill that tariff taxes now officially ascertained and paid under existing laws, on the wants, necessities, and daily consumption of the laboring men, women, and children of the United States, have been reduced more than $76,000,000 per annum. These reductions are as follows:

Chemicals	$1,000,000
Pottery	1,900,000
Glass	1,500,000
Metals	12,500,000
Wood	800,000
Tobacco	3,800,000
Agricultural products	3,300,000
Spirits, wines, etc	1,500,000
Cotton manufactures	3,450,000
Flax, hemp and jute manufactures	6,000,000
Woolen manufactures	23,500,000
Silk manufactures	3,500,000
Paper and pulp	300,000
Sundries	2,450,000
Transferred to the free list	12,170,000
Total	$76,670,000

To this must be added the further imposing fact that the bill provides for a full and ample revenue, largely in excess of present supplies, with which to meet all the requirements of the public credit. With such a beneficent and stupendous result plainly within the reach of the American people and almost ready for their eager enjoyment, I envy not the fate of the party, nor the man, nor the set of men who shall constitute themselves a hindrance and an obstruction to its speedy fulfillment. Faults and imperfections can, of course, be alleged and pointed out; concessions are apparent which have been unwillingly made in order to secure its passage; articles on the free list, as they came from the House, have been made dutiable under the duress of a small majority here, yet, deeply as I regret the necessity for these changes, I do not hesitate to say that the bill, taken as a whole as it now stands, with its combination of lower taxes on the necessaries of life, and at the same time increased revenues for the government, will be hailed as a substantial measure of reform and relief by the great producing masses of the American people.

Dominated by Monopolists.

Manufacturing interests which 100 years ago were in deed and in fact in their infancy, and were nursed and fostered while yet in the cradle of their birth, are now the colossal taskmasters of the whole people, commanding tribute from every day's labor beneath the sun, haughtily striding the corridors of this Capitol and issuing their edicts in the tones of dictators for or against the enactment of pending measures in the halls of Congress. Those who own and represent these swollen and arrogant interests do not hesitate to declare in what terms a bill vitally affecting 70,000,000 of people will be permitted to become a law, and in default of what provisions for financial profits to themselves they will insure its defeat. In the hard-working days of attempted tariff reform they are met everywhere, and, as a rule, bear themselves as favorites of power generally do.

The enactment of the McKinley law in 1890 was a gigantic crime not only against every workingman and every working woman in the United States, but also against every individual manufacturer and against all manufacturing interests. It was not so designed by its authors, but such was its real and inexplicable character. It declared a policy so fallacious in principle, so rotten in morality and so ravenous in its exactions on the absolute wants of life that its possible duration was only a question of time when the next election by the people should occur, and yet the vast manufacturing interests of the country were tempted and seduced into accepting its delusive bribes and into an eager adjustment of themselves to its alluring though evanescent and short-lived provisions. It can never be forgotten that the enactment of the McKinley law in October, 1890, was followed almost immediately by a reduction of the wages of all workers in iron and steel, beginning at Homestead, in Pennsylvania, under Carnegie, resulting in bloodshed and wholesale murder, and extending to all parts of the country and to almost every branch of manufacturing industry.

Mr. Voorhees defended the ad valorem system as fairer and more easily understood than specific duties. On the subject of the sugar schedule he said:

Absolute free trade in sugar is an attractive theme, but no such thing has ever existed for a single hour since the organization of this government. A moderate duty has always been imposed upon sugar, and it has been a stanch revenue support to the government. In that great model of a Democratic tariff for revenue only—the tariff of 1846—it was declared in short and simple phrase that sugar of all kinds and "sirup of the sugar" were subject to a duty-laid tax of 30 per cent. ad valorem. During the present fiscal year, ending June 30, there will be paid by the treasury $12,300,000 as bounty to the producers of sugar, and every dollar of this vast sum is first collected from those who plant corn, raise wheat and engage in all the various pursuits of labor. Nearly $30,000,000 bounty has been handed over to the sugar-makers of the United States since the law went into operation, and each year the sum is rapidly increasing. If the law is to remain unrepealed the time is near at hand when it will confer as a mere gratuity more than $24,000,000 per year on a small portion of our population.

Discusses the Whisky Tax.

I have at all times earnestly favored an increased tax on whisky. I would be glad to-day if the pending bill provided for a tax of $1.20 per gallon, instead of $1.10, as it does. Revenue raised from distilled spirits, the purchase and consumption of which is never a necessity of life, is a deep gratification to me, and the fact that $20,000,000 of the surplus accruing under this bill will be furnished by the tax on whisky is a genuine joy to my mind. My sincere regret is that more money for the government was not obtained from the same source, and consequently less from other sources of different character. I have no hesitation in declaring, upheld as I am by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who have both recommended every step taken on this project, that one of the wisest, safest, most useful and necessary provisions in the pending bill is that increasing tax on distilled spirits and granting an extension of the time they may remain in bond without being driven out of the country.

Speaking of the proposed income tax, which he warmly upholds, Mr. Voorhees said:

Defends the Income Tax.

The proposition contained in the pending bill to levy a tax of 2 per cent. on all net incomes of corporations and of individuals in excess of $4,000 per annum is so just and equitable toward the hard-working tax-payers of meager resources throughout the entire country that not a word in its defense or explanation would seem necessary here or anywhere else. But the narrow and corroding selfishness of riches has been aroused by this simple measure of justice, into fierce resentment and contention. For no earthly consideration would I paint an unjust or overwrought picture of the dangerous pretensions and intolerable arrogance of accumulated wealth now manifest in this country, but, speaking in fear of my Maker, I devoutly believe that the limit of endurance has been reached; that the time has come for a test to be made between the power of hoarded money and the power of productive labor; that the people from this time forward, more than ever before, will organize and take rapid and heroic measures against the continued and brutal dictation of the plutocracy, against the paramount influence of wealth, against the rule and supremacy of the rich in shaping the financial policy of this government in their own interests.

If I believed wool on the free list would hurt the farmer I would not vote for the pending bill. If the farmer should get an increased price for his wool by reason of a tariff for its protection he will pay it all out and much more to the manufacturer as a duty on woolen goods when he next buys a flannel shirt, an overcoat or a pair of trousers.

Sir, this is the birthday of Thomas Jefferson. One hundred and fifty-one years ago to-day he came into the world, the greatest emancipator of thought, philosopher of liberty and teacher of the natural rights of man ever known in human history. The blows he struck for freedom, justice and equality in government are yet resounding throughout the earth and they will never cease to be heard until the last shackle of privilege and tyranny is broken. Ten days before his soul took flight from his mountain home he wrote his parting words to his own countrymen and to all the races of mankind. With this great dying message before us and in its spirit we take new courage and go on with our work.

"All eyes are open or opening," he said, "to the rights of man. The general spread of the light of science has already laid open to every view the palpable truth that the mass of mankind have not been born with saddles on their backs, nor a favored few booted and spurred, ready to ride them legitimately by the grace of God."

Hail, mighty message, and hail its speedy and certain fulfillment. All hail the counsels of Thomas Jefferson in this hour of caste based on wealth, of privilege granted by law, and of monopoly fastened on the slavery of labor!

THE ASS IS ABUSED.

This Much Despised Animal Has Many Good Points.

Although man has been called the strongest of mammals it would seem that he would have to give up the palm to that much despised animal, the ass. An infantry soldier marches all day with seventy pounds of arms, ammunition and baggage, half his own weight, while a cavalry horse is well loaded with 250 pounds, one quarter his weight. Even a camel will not carry more than a third its own weight. But the little ass may be actually loaded with three-quarters his own weight and will travel four and a half miles an hour and keep it up.

It is odd how we have got to associate obstinacy and numberless ugly qualities with the ass, says a writer. This is all wrong. The one word which we are wont to use to cover all these assumed vices is mulishness. But a mule is a hybrid, and one of the peculiarities of hybrids is their general lack of the stanch virtues. If I were to hunt for a creature whose conduct from birth to old age came nearest to exemplifying the four cardinal virtues I would unhesitatingly choose the ass.

There is an aristocracy of asses and there are the many headed. If you want the former look at one of the Syrian asses. He is richly saddled and bridled and has two attendant Arabs to cater to his wants, for he must be kept in the finest condition for his master, the emir. This handsome fellow is truly a noble, if handsome is as handsome does. His manners are perfect, and his gaits are as smooth as they are rapid. He will go off at a running walk which would not spill a drop of water out of a brimful cup, and which will cover fully six miles an hour. He can canter all day at an eight-mile gait, but his traveling gait is the running walk on the rock, and in these gaits he has no equal. He is far more comfortable than any horse, and in a week's travel will go quite as far.

The background of the picture of the ass is always dire poverty. In prosperous countries the ass is not considered. In countries where strict economy is necessary to the barest existence, where every kernel of wheat, every grain of rice, every spear of green stuff which can be eaten is counted, where it is a question, not of whether a man can rise in the world, but whether he can keep body and soul together until the next harvest, the ass is useful as no other animal can be. One hardly needs to feed him. He can pick up a living on the highway.

THE idea that fruit eaten at night is deleterious is proved by the bad effect it had upon Adam from eating an apple after Eve.

BLOTS ON THE BILL.

SENATE AMENDMENTS ARE SO CHARACTERIZED.

Congressman Warner Reviews the Senate's Tinkerings with the Wilson Tariff Measure—Wreckers of the Wilson Bill—The Voice of the People.

Warner on Amendments.

In an interview in American Industries Hon. John DeWitt Warner, of New York, thus reviews the Senate amendments to the Wilson bill:

In taking coal and iron ore from the free list the proposed Senate tariff bill repudiates the pledge of the Democratic party to give our industries free raw materials. In its discriminating duty in favor of refined sugars, it adds a tax which is not expected to produce a cent of revenue, and will not do so. The sugar schedule proposed gives the trust, after full allowance is made for the loss in refining, a net discrimination in favor of refined sugar of about one-eighth of a cent a pound, without taking into account residual sirups, which will increase this according to the grades of sugar treated, though in most cases not above one-sixth of a cent per pound.

I cannot understand this action. The House Committee was misled by statements which were not exposed until after the bill was printed. But the Senate Committee was forewarned by the action of the House, and when it was appealed to by the trust the press of the country ventilated the matter thoroughly. The Democratic press, led by the World, nailed to the counter every sugar trust misstatement as fast as it was offered; the non-partisan commercial press analyzed its business statements, and, adding to the World's expose of its practices, demonstrated that sugar refining in this country needed no protection whatever; and the Senate Committee, after full consideration, came to the same conclusion and adopted a schedule which gave the sugar trust but a petty and accidental advantage, if any.

Meanwhile the sugar trust lobby had become the most scandalous that ever disgraced the capital. The head of the trust, accompanied by its secretary, came to Washington to direct the campaign. Stock gambling on Senate rumor, demoralized the New York Exchange, until finally an indignant people began to stone from the doors of the committee-room the lobby which the committee failed to kick from its presence. Just as the whole matter had become an open scandal the blackmailing band were given a part of their demands, and a partial surrender was made that, so far as anything can do so, vindicates the strikers. It is not those who have attacked Democratic reform, but rather those who have yielded to the attack, that the people will now hold responsible. And, "Oh, the pity of it!" For the trust is not satisfied by this remnant of what McKinley gave it. The opponents of the bill are made stronger than ever, and its friends are discredited by their concessions. It will pass, but after longer delay and in less satisfactory shape than if its friends had forced the fight in the open and made its enemies responsible to the people for whatever blots they got upon it.

The late of some of our New England friends is an instructive object lesson. Possessed of the finest principles in the world, they kept them intact while getting in the Wilson bill more free raw material and more "protection" to manufacturers than did any other section of the country. But they did not know when they were well off. Their representative on the committee did not even vote for its bill, and it had hardly reached the Senate when, from one quarter and another, New England Democrats appeared in advocacy of "protection" to sugar refiners. The combine was also enlisted in behalf of protection for coal and iron ore. Protection has been given the sugar trust; New England has lost free coal and free iron ore, and she finds that her duties on textiles have meanwhile been reduced. Having sold their birthright of Democratic principles, our New England friends have lost their pottage.

Wreckers of the Wilson Bill.

A band of Senators are carrying further than has ever before been known the personal spirit which that body has been encouraging too much for a quarter of a century. Responsibility to party and to people sits lightly on all the members of that body. The cultivation of privilege has shot up into a pampering of personal prerogative.

Smith of New Jersey says that the House Committee of Ways and Means is composed of able and conscientious men, but of men who know nothing of the "many and diverse interests of New Jersey."

This would be bad enough if he spoke the literal truth about his position. Why should the Ways and Means Committee know all about the interests of New Jersey? It is enough for it to know the needs of the United States Government. The courts do not recognize the power of Congress to legislate for the many and diverse interests of any State.

But what Smith is doing is to get legislation for the many and diverse interests of his private friends. The real interests of the masses of New Jersey lie in the enactment of an equitable tariff law as quickly as possible. These interests are sacrificed by the contemptible logrolling for special favorites which is dissolving the Wilson bill's integrity and shaking the business of the country with renewed uncertainties.

Smith's words are a specimen of the corrupting influence of protective tariffs. If there is party spirit enough left among the Democrats of the Senate, a resolution should be passed declaring in express terms that the many and diverse manufacturing interests of every State must look out for themselves, as the more numerous, more extensive and more diverse farming and trading interests of the country are compelled to do. Perhaps such an enunciation of party principle would arouse so much wholesome party spirit that Smith, Murphy and Gorman would be shackled and silenced. Party spirit should take the bill back to what it was when it went to the Senate and should pass it in three weeks or less.—St. Louis Republic.

A Flimsy Excuse.

For the "conservative" Senators who have McKinleyized the Wilson bill the flimsy excuse is put forth that they did it in response to the clamor of their constituents. But what did these gentlemen expect? Did they suppose that the pampered children of protection would surrender their privileges without a protest and without an effort to preserve them?

These "conservatives" are not novices in politics. Most of them are veterans and pride themselves on being "practical politicians." They knew while the campaign for tariff reform was being fought, just as well as they know now, that when the time came to frame a bill every trust, every combine and every favored industry would throng Washington with lobbyists and deluge it with petitions. A year ago they could have named the men who would be at the capital this winter shrieking that they will be ruined if tariff reform is carried out. They knew perfectly well then what claims would be urged and what arguments would be presented. The whole performance is stale than a thrice-told tale. To none is it staler than to those jaded old political hacks.

The excuse is preposterous. It impeaches the intelligence of those in whose behalf it is offered. When Senator Mills was asked by the wool-growers of Texas to oppose free wool he peremptorily said "No," and that was the end of it. When Tom Johnson was petitioned by his constituents to sustain high protection on clothing he not only refused but read them a wholesome lesson in the economics of tariff reform. Honest men deal honestly with conditions they expect and invite. They don't shirk and then hunt excuses.—New York World.

Personal Interests in the South.

We see no special reason for the excitement caused by the charge that some United States Senators are interested in sugar speculations. Men who own millions are usually speculators. Our United States Senators can boast of many shrewd speculators worth their millions. This being so, how do the people expect these men to be able to vote, without personal interest, on such a measure as a tariff bill, the underlying principle of which is to grant special privileges to persons financially able to take advantage of the opportunity to rob the great body of the people. The spirit of a protective tariff is based on selfishness and greed. This is why we see such a struggle in Congress when an attempt is made to lift the burden from the people. A Congress of the United States, none of the members of which had a personal pecuniary interest in the perpetuation of a robber tariff, would be a real surprise to those who have watched the evolution of the protective theory in this country.

The intelligent observer of the struggle now going on in the Senate over the Wilson bill, is not in the least surprised at the action of the Senate. He expected much opposition in that body as well as in the House.—Pomeroy (O.) Democrat.

The Voice of the People.

The people elected a commission for the express purpose of revising the tariff. It is now sitting in Washington, and the dignified portion of it is making a blooming ass of itself. Six years ago the people would have the tariff "reformed by its friends." Two years ago they changed their minds completely, and decided that the tariff should be reformed by its enemies. That is why the Democratic party is in power in Washington. That is why if it does not do its duty, it will not be in power in Washington hereafter. If the Democratic party deceive the people there will rise up a party which will not deceive them. And if such a revolution as that occurs there will be no concessions made to trusts and combines in its legislation. It will wipe the whole accumation of thirty years of Republican favoritism, corruption, and scoundrelism out of existence. This Democratic Congress must do its duty. It cannot evade or shirk it. And it cannot do it too quickly.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Reciprocity Will Go.

A correspondent asks whether the retaliatory duties levied by President Harrison upon the coffee and hides of Colombia and Venezuela will stand under the Wilson bill. Beyond all doubt they will not, whatever may become of the reciprocity treaties. The duty of any Collector of Customs will be to enforce the law as he finds it. Under the new tariff coffee and hides will be admitted free of duty, no matter where they come from, and no power is given the President or anybody else to make any discriminations. The Collectors will have no occasion to concern themselves any longer with President Harrison's fulminations, after his warrant of law for issuing them has been destroyed. They will let all that dead past bury itself and collect the duties, and no others, which the law says they are to collect.—New York Post.

Lucky Republicans.

There may be a slump in tariff reform at this fall's election. It is to be expected that the unthinking masses will hold the Democrats responsible for the hard times we are now having, even though, as in the present case, Republican legislation is entirely responsible for our present troubles. It is fortunate for the Harrisonian administration that it did not have to continue in power three months longer. The Republicans may be fortunate again. The good effects of the Wilson bill will probably begin to show about the end of this year. If the Republicans shou'd be victorious in the November election, they will undoubtedly credit themselves with the prosperity, and the unthinking may accept it all as gospel.

False Representatives.

The action of the Democratic Club of Parkersburg, W. Va., in indorsing the Wilson bill as it passed the House, and denouncing the course of Senators Camden and Faulkner as being part of a conspiracy to defraud the consumers in the interests of manufacturers, mine owners and lumber barons, tends to justify the remarks of the World to these Senators. They do not represent the people of West Virginia nor the Democratic national platform in the amendments which they have helped to make in the tariff bill.—New York World.

Unusually High Wages.

A halcyon March is not without its drawbacks. The maple sugar harvest has gone wrong in New Hampshire for lack of a frost, aided by "the scarcity and unusually high wages of help." It is gratifying to know that there is some other explanation of the failure than the anticipated effect of the Wilson tariff; but what explanation can be given for the dastardly, not to say disloyal, rise of wages in New Hampshire at a time when, according to the organs, a tariff reform administration is doing its best to abolish wages entirely?—Philadelphia Record.

CURRENT COMMENT.

The Prendergast Stay.

The rope which Prendergast did not stretch was not wisely saved.—New York World.

The reprieve of Prendergast is more than a Chicago scandal. It is a national outrage.—New York Recorder.

The claim now is that Prendergast has gone insane since his trial. The antics of the Chicago bench are enough to make anyone mad.—Minneapolis Journal.

The reprieve of Prendergast, the man who murdered Mayor Harrison of Chicago, is a mistake. The assassin was tried and found guilty. He should be hanged.—Albany Argus.

If Prendergast has the usual luck of insane murderers he will, on the testimony of "experts," be sent to an asylum for a few months and be discharged "cured" on the testimony of some other "experts."—Detroit News.

The scope of the inquiry might be profitably extended so as to include the sanity or honesty of the parties responsible for this miscarriage of justice. It is now claimed that whether found sane or insane he will escape the gallows.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

His fellow-prisoners in the Cook County jail shouted: "Hang Prendergast," while a lesser murderer was paying the penalty. Their apprehension of the principles of essential justice is clearer than that of the Chicago judge who stretched his authority to reprieve the assassin of Chicago's late Mayor, Carter Harrison.—New York Telegram.

A Peculiar Bequest.

A Christiania newspaper, which does not give itself up to the comic element, relates that a Danish lawyer named Nikolson bequeathed the whole of his property to trustees to be employed in the purchase of bicycles for the use of children attending school, and part of the money is to go toward paying a teacher to train the boys in bicycle riding. The validity of the will has been disputed by the sons of the testator, who refuse to acknowledge it, so that it is still a question of doubt whether the children will reap the benefit of the strange bequest. That the testator was sincere enough, and that he recognized in the wheel untold blessings which might have escaped the observation of minds of less acumen, the concluding portion of the will should go to prove. It says: "I have always found a bicycle a capital protection against the importunity of those people who persist in stopping you in your walk to spin a long yarn in the hot sun or in the biting east wind. My machine, unlike a horse, never shied once; and in many drives I have had no need to entrust life and limb to the tender mercies of a coachman."

Tulle in Paris.

Tulle is becoming extremely fashionable in Paris, and, therefore, all over the world. It is threatening to oust the long popular chiffons, and at the leading Parisian dressmakers this season many evening dresses have been made for girls and young married women of tulle over silk slips of self, or contrasting colors. A pretty model is a changeable glace taffeta in pale pink and azure, covered entirely with azure silk tulle. The skirt has a loose fold about the feet, caught at intervals with rosettes of pink and azure moire ribbon. The corsage is draped with tulle and the "puffy" sleeves are finished off with ribbon bows and a delicate tulle ruffle finishes the decolletage.

THE man who will say a mean thing will sooner or later do one.

No Woman Can Be Happy and light-hearted when painful female complaints crush out her life.

If she is melancholy, excitable, nervous, dizzy, or troubled with sleeplessness or fainting spells, they are symptoms of serious female weakness. A leaf out of the experience of Mrs. Anna Miller, who lives at Duhring, Pa., shows that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will cure that terrible weakness and bearing-down pain in the abdomen, the dizziness in the head, the feeling of irritability, and loss of appetite.

A Hot Air Toy.

Most children have amused themselves with toy windmills cut from a square of paper or card and mounted on a pin; but perhaps few have made cardboard serpents for placing in currents of hot air. These require some care and sometimes a second trial to make them work well, but a little perseverance and some ingenuity will accomplish very pretty results.

Cut out a circle from card-board and mark the center; then draw a spiral line leading from a point near the center around and around until it reaches the circumference. When this is evenly drawn, cut along the spiral line so that when supported at the center the rest of the card will hang like the coils of a snake. The center may be pierced and pivoted upon a pin and stuck above a hot radiator or suspended by a thread over the stove. A powerful current of ascending hot air will cause one of these coils to revolve rapidly when properly balanced.

The Two Johnnies.

There were only two little boys in the class,
Two fat little fellows with eyes of blue;
And one was Johnny, oh, listen to this,
The other was Jonnny, too.

"Spell 'pie,'" said the teacher, with smiling lips,
"Now, Johnny Jones, you must try;"
He looked very solemn and wise and good,
And he spelled it, "P-i, pie."

"Come Johnny Smith, I will listen to you,
While Johnny Jones has his cry."
A gleam of triumph in two blue eyes,
And he straightway spelled "P-y."

Together the Johnnies came out from school,
Their brave little spirits quelled;
They were wondering, wondering, wondering,
What "p-i" and "p-y" spelled!

Very Naughty.

Little boy—Oh, papa, mamma was awfully naughty this morning when the doctor was here.

Father (nervously)—What did she do?

Little boy—Stuck out her tongue at him.—Hallo.

A Little Reptile.

Teacher—Mention one of those reptiles that crawl on all fours on the ground.

Tommy—My little sister. Her name is Molly.—Texas Siftings.

Two Brothers.

Two small boys signaled a street car, says the Ram's Horn, and when it stopped it was noticed that the one boy was lame. With much solicitude the other boy helped the cripple aboard the car, and after telling the conductor to go ahead returned to the sidewalk. The lame boy braced himself up in his seat, so that he could look out of the car window, and the other passengers observed that at intervals the little fellow would wave his hand and smile. Following the direction of his glances the passengers saw the other boy running along the sidewalk, straining every muscle to keep up with the car. The passengers watched his pantomime in silence for a few blocks, and then a gentleman asked the lame boy who the other boy was. "My brother," was the prompt reply. "Why does he not ride with you in the car?" was the next question. "'Cause he hasn't any money," answered the lame boy sorrowfully. The little runner was speedily invited into the car, and the sympathetic questioner not only paid his fare but gave each boy a quarter besides.

Serves Him Right.

"Have you got any stale bread?" asked Johnny Fizzletop, sticking his head into a baker's shop up in Harlem.

"Yes, I have five or six loaves."

"Serves you right. Why didn't you sell 'em while they were fresh?"—Texas Siftings.

A Little One's Faith.

A 5-year-old maiden of Bellefield had been invited to a children's party, and she talked continually of the expected pleasure.

"But, Frances," said her papa, "suppose it should rain so hard that you couldn't go?"

"The dear Lord wouldn't let it rain an' spoil a little girl's fun, would he?" she asked, anxiously.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

A Confusing Answer.

An amusing story is told of a small boy in one of Marshall Field's stores in Chicago, who approached his employer and asked for an advance in salary. "How much are you getting a week now?" said the merchant. "Four dollars and a half, sir." "And how old are you?" "Twelve, sir." "Why, my boy, at your age I wasn't paid that much." "Well," replied the shrewd lad, "maybe you weren't worth it to the firm you was working for, but I think I am."

Where Boys Cannot Whistle.

There is a country in Africa where no one is allowed to whistle after dark. The name of this country is Fez. And in Fez the person who whistles after the shades of night have fallen will very likely be killed, because the people of Fez believe that whistling after dark calls up evil spirits. If a whistle is heard on the streets of Fez at night the people jump up out of their beds and run out, armed with guns and knives, to kill the one who is whistling. It is even worse in Fez to whisper at night in the streets, because it is thought that the evil spirit is very near, and that the one who whispers is talking to him. It cannot be very pleasant to live in the town of Fez, because a boy might, without thinking, whistle in the evening, and then the consequences would be very bad. Or a girl might whisper to her brother as she is seated on her own doorstep in the evening.

Breezes from Springs.

"I have seen a few blowing springs, and I could never understand how they are formed or the cause for the outward current of air," said Bert Magoffin, of Kentucky, at the Southern. "There is one at Brandensburg, Ky., where the water coming from the spring is strongly impregnated with salt. There is sufficient breeze blowing from the spring to be distinctly felt and to blow a handkerchief quite violently. This breeze is intermittent.

"There is another one in Walker County, Georgia, where the water is fresh and the breeze is considerably stronger. It can be distinctly heard for some distance, and in the hottest weather it is sufficient to keep a person cool and comfortable around the spring. The opening in the mountain where the water flows is small, and when an ear is placed to this opening the wind can be heard as though a strong breeze were constantly blowing inside, while outside not a breath of air may appear to be stirring. I have never heard a reasonable explanation of these phenomena."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Women as Detectives.

The sphere of woman has been so greatly enlarged for the past few years that one hears from the fair sex in all the phases and departments of life. The West End road now employs a corps of women detectives who are supposed to keep tab upon conductors who may show an inclination to knock down fares. That great corporation finds that women make better detectives than the men because their eagle eye is not easily detected. The women cast a very slight look at the clock register when a fare is rung in, and nothing is thought of it, but a man who is seen looking at the register is pointed out by everybody as a West End detective. The women detectives, like the men detectives, as soon as discovered, are of no further use to the West End.—Boston Post.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

A Hydrostatic Phenomenon.

They were drifting along upon the placid surface of the classic Charles. It was in the summer time, of course. The night was balmy, and the conversation had lagged for some little time. Suddenly the New York belle broke the silence.

"How much higher the river is tonight than it was last evening!" she exclaimed.

"Is it?" replied her companion, a Harvard boy, with some show of interest.

"Why, yes," continued the young lady! "don't you see how much higher the water comes up on the boat?"

The young man changed his posture, his eyes reflecting the twinkles of many a bright star in the heavens.

"There were more people in the boat last evening than there are now, were there not?" he asked.

"Oh, yes, there were four of us."

"Well, that accounts for it," he laughingly explained.

"Funny that should make the river higher!" mused the girl from Gotham. "I'll ask teacher about it."

Temperatures of Forests.

For twenty years the Swiss Government has made observations through its forestry stations on the temperature of the air, of the trees, and the soil in the forests. These observations show that the temperature in the forests is always below the temperature outside. The temperature also varies according to the trees composing the forests. A beech forest is always cooler than a forest of larch. As to the trunks of the trees, they are always colder than the surrounding air. Regarding the temperature of the soil, it is found that in the forest the temperature is invariably below that of the air. Outside the forest the soil is always warmer than the air in summer and colder in winter.

The Rule of the Order.

Two monks, one a Dominican, and the other a Franciscan, traveling together, were stopped by a river. The Dominican told the Franciscan that, as he went barefoot, he was forced by the rule of his order to carry him across; that if he refused he would commit a great sin. The Franciscan yielded to this observation, and took the other on his shoulders. When they were in the middle of the ford, the Franciscan asked the other if he had any money about him. "Yes," replied the latter, "I have two reals." "I ask you a thousand pardons, brother," rejoined the disciple of St. Francis, "but my order forbids my carrying money." And with these words, he plumped his man into the river.

One of Lamar's Courtly Remarks.

Judge Lamar, of the United States Supreme Court, who died last winter, was a gentleman of the old school and was always making fine speeches to women. There are no end of stories told about him. On one occasion he was taken to task by a lady at Bar Harbor, who thought he did not recognize her. "Ah! Judge," she said, "I am afraid you don't remember me; I met you here two years ago." "Remember you, madam!" was his quick reply, with one of his courtly bows; "why, I've been trying ever since to forget you." And she laughingly exclaimed: "Oh! go away, you dear, delightful old Southern humbug!"—Harper's Weekly.

The next time you are in a melancholy mood, as you are almost certain to be if you become bilious or dyspeptic, picture to yourself the condition of a poor man who, without resources and with a family on his hands, finds himself on a sick bed. Gloom obscures his narrow horizon in every direction. Unable to do any work, without means, or friends capable of assisting him, with the possible prospect of continued ill health; with rent, perhaps, unpaid and unpayable, the outlook for him is gloomy indeed. How shortsighted, then, is the man of humble means who perceiving that his health and strength are failing takes no precaution to avert the oncoming evil. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a reliable, professionally recommended restorative of health and vigor, and a sure means of preventing the many disabling complaints which exposure, overwork, neglect and insufficient food produce. Malaria, rheumatism, kidney and liver complaint, dyspepsia and nervous disease always yield to it.

Walled In by Bees.

A Western newspaper, the Red Bluff Democrat, reports a singular discovery made by some farmers who found a "bee tree" and cut it down to get the honey.

The honey was in a hollow midway of the trunk. The men split the trunk, and to their surprise took out not only some eighty pounds of honey, but a dead duck and eleven duck eggs.

It appeared that a wood duck had made a nest in the hollow, and that after she began to sit upon the eggs the bees stopped up the entrance with comb, so that she was unable to get out.

How Very Delightful.

"What charming weather," we all say in the opening days of the early spring; then off go the wraps and up go the windows to let the balmy air come in—with it come in numerous things that ought to be kept out. We feel sore from stiffened limbs, and many go tottering around with lame backs. Mr. Harry Williams, Greenville, Cal., under oath, writes on this subject as follows: "A lady suffered so severely with pains in the back for two days that she could not sit up. One application of St. Jacobs Oil gave the sufferer a good night's rest, and in the morning she was well." That was charming.

The Liberty Cap.

When the Romans manumitted a slave, his head was adorned with a small red cloth cap. As soon as this was done, he was known as a libertinus, or freedman, and his name was registered among others of the city's "tribes." In the year 263, when Saturninus invaded the capital, he hoisted a cap on the point of his spear, to indicate that all slaves who rallied around the standard should be free. This was the origin of the liberty cap still used in art as a symbol.

It will, perhaps, require a little stretch of the imagination on the part of the reader to recognize the fact that the two portraits at the head of this article are of the same individual; and yet they are truthful sketches made from photographs, taken only a few months apart, of a very much esteemed citizen of Illinois—Mr. C. H. Harris, whose address is No. 1,623 Second Avenue, Rock Island, Ill. The following extract from a letter written by Mr. Harris explains the marvelous change in his personal appearance. He writes: "Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery saved my life and has made me a man. My home physician says I am good for forty years yet. You will remember that I was just between life and death, and all of my friends were sure it was a case of death, until I commenced taking a second bottle of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' when I became able to sit up and the cough was very much better, and the bleeding from my lungs stopped, and before I had taken six bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' my cough ceased and I was a new man and ready for business.

I now feel that it is a duty that I owe to my fellow-men to recommend to them the 'Golden Medical Discovery' which saved my life when doctors and all other medicines failed to do me any good.

I send to you with this letter two of my photographs; one taken a few weeks before I was taken down sick in bed, and the other was taken after I was well." These two photographs are faithfully re-produced at the head of this article.

Mr. Harris's experience in the use of "Golden Medical Discovery" is not an exceptional one. Thousands of eminent people in all parts of the world testify, in just as emphatic language, to its marvelous curative powers over all chronic bronchial, throat and lung diseases, chronic nasal catarrh, asthma, and kindred diseases.

Eminent physicians prescribe "Golden Medical Discovery" when any of their dear ones' lives are imperilled by that dread disease, Consumption. Under such circumstances only the most reliable remedy would be depended upon. The following letter is to the point. It is from an eminent physician of Stamps, Lafayette Co., Ark. He says: "Consumption is hereditary in my wife's family; some have already died with the disease. My wife has a sister, Mrs. E. A. Cleary, that was taken with consumption. She used Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and, to the surprise of her many friends, she got well. My wife has also had hemorrhages from the lungs, and her sister insisted on her using the 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I consented to her using it, and it cured her. She has had no symptoms of consumption for the past six years. People having this disease can take no better remedy." Yours very truly,

W. C. Rogers M. D.

From the Buckeye State comes the following: "I was pronounced to have consumption by two of our best doctors. I spent nearly $300, and was no better. I concluded to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I bought and used eight bottles and I can now say with truth that I feel just as well to-day as I did at twenty-five, and can do just as good a day's work on the farm, although I had not done any work for several years."

Truly, your friend,

William Dulaney

Mr. Dulaney's address is Campbell, Ohio.

"I had catarrh in the head for years and trouble with my left lung at the same time. You put so much faith in your remedies that I concluded to try one bottle or two, and I derived much benefit therefrom. I used up three bottles of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, five bottles of your "Golden Medical Discovery," and in four months I was myself again. I could not sleep on my left side, and now I can sleep and eat heartily. So long as I have your medicines on hand I have no need of a doctor; I do not think my house in order without them. Yours truly,

A. H. Heard

If it would be any more convincing, we could easily fill the columns of this paper with letters testifying to the cure of the severest diseases of the throat, bronchia and lungs, by the use of "Golden Medical Discovery." To build up solid flesh and strength after the grip, pneumonia, ("lung fever"), exhausting fevers, and other prostrating diseases, it has no equal. It does not make fat like cod liver oil and its nasty compounds, but solid, wholesome flesh.

Mrs. Charles Frank NORTH SYRACUSE, N. Y.

Cured of Neuralgia Kidney and Liver Troubles Gall Stones Nervous Prostration and Female Weakness in a Worst Form

NORTH SYRACUSE, N. Y. Sept. 14, 1891.

DR. A. OWEN, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR:—After being worn out with pain for five years, and doctoring all those long years, I chanced to see Mrs. Ella Trautman's statement in the National Tribune. As I read it, I thought, as a last resort, I would try one of your Electric Belts, for, I had doctored with physicians in Syracuse, only receiving temporary relief, and began to think there was no hope for me. I purchased one of your No. 4 Electric Belts, and found relief at once. I could feel my disease gradually disappearing. It is now seven months since I commenced wearing the Belt, and I have not taken a drop of medicine since the first day I commenced wearing it. I have worn the Belt according to instructions every afternoon since I received it, and to-day I am thankful to you for your wonderful discovery. For two or three years I suffered with dyspepsia, had terrible pains in my side, my food refused to digest. Now I can eat almost anything without any distress in the stomach. For two long years I did not have a good night's sleep. I was so dreadful nervous it seemed as if I would be wild. I used to tell my husband if I could not get rid of this nervousness I did not wish to live, as life was almost a burden. Worn out and completely discouraged, I at last found relief in your No. 4 Electric Belt, and that is more than doctors did for me. I also had severe pains in my head; at times I could hardly see one go around the room. I cannot tell how much I suffered, but the belt has taken away all pain and nervousness and I can sleep good once more. When I began wearing the belt, I could hardly walk around the house, but after the first week I began to get stronger, and have continued to improve ever since until to-day I feel like a new person. The belt has given me new life, and I can enjoy company once more. Doctor, you don't know how good it seems to get out. It seems as if I was let out of prison. My husband wears the belt in the forenoon for kidney trouble, and it is helping him. He joins with me in their highest praise. If I could not replace it, I would not take any amount of money for my belt. I would not give my Electric Belt for all the doctors and drugs in Syracuse, if I could not get another. I would say to ladies, who are suffering from diseases peculiar to our sex, to try one of DR. OWEN'S ELECTRIC BELTS, and you will find relief at once, for it did for me what medicines could not do, and I trust it will do the same for you. It will also take away that tired feeling, and give you rest at night. Now, doctor, please accept my thanks. You have my permission to use this letter if you so desire. I feel it a duty to inform people of your wonderful discovery. Yours respectfully, MRS. CHARLES FRANK.

The "Kearsarge" Court Martial.

(From Harper's Weekly.)

The trial by court martial, which began in the Navy-yard in Brooklyn on March 23, of Commander Oscar F. Heyerman and Lieutenant C. H. Lyman, of the navy, for negligence in causing the loss of the famous old corvette Kearsarge on Roncaddor Reef on February 2d, last, has afforded civilians an excellent illustrateson of that lofty dignity and high sense of duty that prevail in judicial tribunals composed of naval or military officials. The last court martial in Brooklyn before this, of a commander in the navy was held three years ago. The charge then was cruelty. The charge this time is losing the vessel that was most dear to the memory of all patriotic citizens.

Naval courts martial of one kind or another are frequent enough in the dismal-looking buildings in the Brooklyn yard, but probably none more interesting than this one, was ever held there. This time one finds on trial a commander universally respected, whose handsome, frank face is indicative of his high personal character and ability as a sailor; a man beloved by his associates, superiors and inferiors, as few men in the navy have been; a man, doubtless, who would have preferred to lose his life in the honorable service of his country than to lose this ship, of all ships on which the stars and stripes were raised.

SAILED THE SEAS 38 YEARS.

One of His Experiences.

For thirty-eight years Capt. Loud followed the sea, most of that time as master of a vessel, and upon retiring from the water was appointed by the Secretary of the United States Treasury to superintend the seal fisheries in Alaska, which position he held five years. He relates one experience as follows:

"For several years I had been troubled with general nervousness and pain in the region of my heart. My greatest affliction was sleeplessness; it was almost impossible at any time to obtain rest and sleep. Having seen Dr. Miles' remedies advertised I began using Nervine. After taking a small quantity the benefit received was so great that I was positively alarmed, thinking the remedy contained opiates which would finally be injurious to me; but on being assured by the druggist that it was perfectly harmless, I continued it together with the Heart Cure. Today I can conscientiously say that Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and New Heart Cure did more for me than anything I had ever taken. I had been treated by eminent physicians in New York and San Francisco without benefit. I owe my present good health to the judicious use of these most valuable remedies, and heartily recommend them to all afflicted as I was."—Capt. A. P. Loud, Hampden, Me.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and New Cure are sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or by Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5, express prepaid. They are free from all opiates and dangerous drugs.

Good Words for Good Democrats.

The Garrett Republican, one of the most radical republican papers, had last week several articles commending some good democrats, all of whom will be candidates for office. And we clip Bro. Miner's good words right now, so that if any of them get the nomination he will not be able to deny it. Here they are:

Our friend of childhood days Cyrus Cline, of Angola, made Garrett and this office a visit last Tuesday. Mr. Cline has devoted his life to the noble task of securing pensions for disabled soldiers and the study of law, and won for himself the affections of vast numbers of the battle scarred "vets" and their friends. Cy, as we always called him, is our highly esteemed friend and it is a pleasure to meet and serve him so far as we can.

F. A Borst, of Auburn, was over last Monday looking after his interests as candidate on the democratic ticket for the office of county auditor. He appears like a gentleman in every way, but unfortunately he represents the wrong party this year.

We notice that Judge Stephen A. Powers has announced that he will not be a candidate for reelection this year. Our acquaintance with him extends back to our schoolboy days, and although it has always been mutual, he is on the wrong side in politics to win this year, and we deem his refusal to make the race a very wise consideration. W. L. Penfield is most likely to be the winner this year.

W. H. Less, of Waterloo, was a caller at this office last Tuesday. He will ask the democrats of this county for the nomination of clerk. We have known Will from a boy and have always found him to be reliable in his statements, honest in his dealings, with an unblemished character. We would gladly lend him a hand in any way as a business favor, but he is on the wrong side in politics to win this year in DeKalb county.

The veteran well driver, W. S. Purdy, has, in partnership with Ed. Metcalf opened a store of well supplies and fixtures, in the room next south of H. J. Mossey's bakery, on Main St. They will keep a good stock of well supplies, fixtures and repairs and ask all who need anything in this line to give them a call. Both are experienced men in this work and are sure to suit all.

A Quarter Century Test.

For a quarter of a century Dr. King's New Discovery has been tested, and the millions who have received benefit from its use, testify to its wonderful curative powers in all diseases of the throat, chest and lungs. A remedy that has stood the test so long and that has given so universal satisfaction, is no experiment. Each bottle is positively guaranteed to give relief or the money will be refunded. It is admitted to be the most reliable for coughs and colds. Trail bottles free at Robbins & McCord's drug store. Large size 50 cents and $1. 6

What makes a house a home? The mother well, the children rosy, the father in good health and good humor. All brought about by the use of DeWitt's Sarsaparilla. It recommends itself.

HONDURAS, under its new dictator, Bonilla, is unfriendly to Americans. He realizes that he could have driven out President Vasques much more easily had it not been for the American settlers who helped the latter. The Americans were led by Major Burke of Louisiana, and Gen. Imboden of Virginia. Imboden will be remembered as one of the first men who went into our rebellion. He then commanded a company of Virginia artillery, and with the help of old Gov. Wise and several other hot headed old reprobates, he got possession of Harper's Ferry and the U. S. arms in its arsenal and shops.

St. Joe News—Mr. David Andress has honeycombed his ten acre farm with tile and painted his house till it shines, and is prepared to take it easy, but he can't settle down yet. He has already rented Henry Milliman's farm and is pitching in for a big summer's work. * * * Mrs. Diadem Bone boarded the train last Wednesday noon, bound for Ft. Wayne, where she will spend the remaining part of the week shopping and visiting among friends.

Angola Magnet—Populist governor or a costly experiment. They have one in Colorado, one in Kansas and another in South Carolina, and they've had small sized topsy-turvy rebellions and some bloodshed in all three of those states.

St. Joe News—C. C. Walters has sold his farm to James Draggoo, of Auburn, and we understand will move to the county seat. He has bought the Palace livery barn, and together with his son Harpster, will manage that business. Cy and his estimable wife have a host of friends in this part of the county who regret very much to have them leave this community, but wish them prosperity wherever they go.

Pure blood means good health. Reinforce it with DeWitt's Sarsaparilla. It purifies the blood, cures eruptions eczema, scrofula and all diseases arising from impure blood. It recommends itself.

The Trial of the Largest Gun Ever Built in America.

From Harper's Weekly.

The first 13 inch high-powered rifled gun completed in this country was tried at the naval ordnance proving ground on Wednesday, the 21st inst. It is the largest modern gun which has been built in this country, and its trial was a complete success.

The gun and mount were built at the Washington Navy-yard Ordnance-works in less than a year, and were set up at the proving ground last week to be tested by the actual firing of a service charge and projectile. The mount, weighing about 31 tons, was easily transported to the proving ground and put in place; but the moving of a 13 inch gun, weighing 60½ tons, was a more delicate matter. The gun was put on two car trucks of four wheels each, connected by a long tie-rod, so that the distance between the trucks was about 30 feet. This length between trucks was fixed so that in running the gun upon the barge which was to take it to the proving ground, its weight would be evenly brought upon the barge. On arrival at the proving ground it was hauled ashore, and the 80 ton crane picked it up and safely placed it in its position on its mount. The gun was fired with full service charge and projectile, and worked perfectly on its mount without a break.

Something wrong when you tire too easily. Something wrong when the skin is not clear and smooth. Something wrong when the blood is impure. Everything right when you take DeWitt's Sarsaparilla. It recommends itself.

They Want Better Men.

The demand of the democrats of this district for an abler and honester representative in congress is not the only case of the kind in Indiana. Here is what a late number of the Ligonier Banner says of other districts:

It is pretty well settled that Congressman Hammond will not be renominated, and Bynum of the Indianapolis district is also pretty sure of being defeated. Jason B. Brown of the New Albany district is already as good as beaten, and Martin of Bluffton will be knocked out. Conn has declined a renomination and with other districts to hear from it is evident that the next congressional delegation from this state will be considerably changed.

DeWitt's Sarsaparilla is prepared for cleansing the blood from impurities and disease. It does this and more. It builds up and strengthens constitutions impaired by disease. It recommends itself.

Elder, S. S. Beaver, of McAllisterville, Juniata Co., Pa., says his wife is subject to cramp in the stomach. Last summer she tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy for it, and was much pleased with the speedy relief it afforded. She has sinced used it whenever necessary and found that it never fails. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

It cures blood and skin disorders. It does this quickly and permanently. Is there any good reasons why you should not use DeWitt's Sarsaparilla? It rec-

Assessors' Schedule.

At the recent State meeting of the township assessors, they fixed a value on the various articles at which they would assess them, and will likely adhere to these rates in the main, so that assessments may be uniform all over the state.

SCHEDULE

Horses—heavy draft horses, first grade, $500 to $700 each; second, $300 to $400; third, $100 to $200, governed by the breeding qualities and individuality. Light draft stallion roadsters—first grade, $1 200 to $1,600; second, $600 to $800; third, $200 to $400, governed by the speed shown, individuality and breeding. General purpose stallions—first grade, $200 to $300; second $100 to $200 governed by the breeding. General purpose work horse—first grade, 4, to 10 years old, $50 to $60, younger and inferior horses in the same proportion. Roadsters and speed horses from $100 to $500, speed and individuality to govern. Jack from $100 to $400. Mules, 3 to 8 years old, $50 to $60 each; younger and older ones in the same proportion.

Cattle—registered beef: bulls, $25 to $200; milk cows and heifers, $50 to $300 each. Registered milk-and-butter cattle; bulls, $10 to $100 each; cows and heifers, $25 to $150. Fat cattle: Export, $4 a 100, gross weight; shippers, $3; butcher, $250; common milch cows, $10 to $25 each; work oxen, from $40 to $75 a yoke.

Sheep—registered, $5, to $25; common $1 to $4.

Hogs—registered $10 to $75; common stockers and feeders, $3 50 100

Chickens—blooded and fancy, $1 to $5 common, $2 to dozen; ducks $3 a dozen; geese, $4 a dozen; turkeys, $6 a dozen.

Honey bees from $1 to $3 a stand.

It was decided to assess merchandise at 90 per cent. of the invoice value.

FARM PRODUCTS

Wheat, per bushel 40 cents; corn 25 to 30; rye and barley, 25; oats, 20; potatoes, 40; timothy seed, $1.50; clover seed, $4; timothy hay, per ton, $6; clover hay $4; beef, per pound, 4 cents; bacon, 8 cents; bulk pork, 6; lard, 8; wool 10 to 13; beef, per barrel, $8; pork, $10; cider and vinegar, 10 cents a gallon; wine, 35 cents; sorghum molasses, 15; maple molasses, 50 cents; maple sugar, 5 cents a pound. Many other things, such as household articles are to, but at a fair cash value, according to the judgment of the assessor and the condition of the article. Mr. Kutzner, the county assessors for this county, was present at the Indianapolis meeting, and is anxious to have all the assessing done a fair and impartial basis. Mortgage and personal notes to be listed at their true cash value. A note well secured and drawing 6 per cent is worth 100 cents on the dollar. Only special deposits of greenbacks shall be exempt from taxation.

Chas. Patterson. Cured in one month.

"At 14 years of age I learned a bad habit which almost ruined me. I became nervous and weak. My back troubled me. I could stand no exertion. Head and eyes became dull. Dreams and drains at night weakened me. I tried seven Medical Firms, Electric Belts, Patent Medicines and Family Doctors. They gave me no help. A friend advised me to try Drs. Kennedy & Kergan. They sent me one month's treatment and it cured me. I could feel myself gaining every day. Their New Method Treatment cures when all else fails." They have cured many of my friends."

Dr. Monlton. Cured 5 years ago.

CURES GUARANTEED OR MONEY REFUNDED.

"Some 8 years ago I contracted a serious constitutional blood disease. I went to Hot Springs to treat for syphilis. Mercury almost killed me. After a while the symptoms again appeared. Throat became sore, pains in limbs, pimples on face, blotches, eyes red, loss of hair, glands enlarged, etc. A medical friend advised Drs. Kennedy & Kergan's New Method Treatment. It cured me, and I have had no symptoms for five years. I am married and happy. As a doctor, I heartily recomend it to all who have this terrible disease—syphilis." It will eradicate the poison from the blood."

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

WATERLOO.

The L. M. C. meet Tuesday evening, April 17, at the home of Mrs. Olive A. Long.

Mrs. Sarah Edge has sold her farm southeast of town.

It snowed Tuesday afternoon.

Emory Till and family are with Mrs. Barnhart, who is Mrs. Till's mother. Mr. T. had a severe illness while living in Hudson, from which he has never fully recovered, and at present the prospect is none too favorable.

The New England and Kentucky supper Saturday was very well attended and most that was not eaten by those calling for supper was sold afterwards. Baked pork and beans, corn, wheat and Boston brown bread, biscuits, pressed beef, etc. were among the goodies provided for a most excellent, appetizing and satisfying meal.

Go to Mrs. Winslow for perfumes. She has a fine line of all the best and just received several new ones and new names, that are already becoming as much the rage as White Rose has been.

Mrs. Mary Bonzer sent invitations to the members of L. M. C. for Tuesday evening. Tea at 6 sun time. It was the regular evening for the club to meet with Mrs. B. and a pleasant time is anticipated.

Michael Fickle has gone to Ohio to visit a month, perhaps several, with brothers and sisters.

Mrs. Wm. Patterson has gone with her children to visit her parents who reside in Lawrence, Kansas. She went expecting to make a lengthy visit.

Samuel Beck has been seriously ill for over a week. He has not been really well all winter, and it seems doubtful if he is ever fully so again.

Mr. Kagy has moved into Frank Beidler's house.

Dr. Frank Bevier has moved from Mrs. Barnhart's house into the north part of town.

Mr. Rose, mail clerk, has rented George Braun's house.

J. Rosenthal, merchant, has rented and occupies the Taylor house.

Miss Hattie Smith had a vacation from Wednesday until Monday, and spent it in Waterloo at her home. She invited nine of her young lady friends to spend Saturday evening with her. Her invitations were original in being written on smooth brown wrapping paper, folded over twice and a straw inserted to hold it together. After the invitation, followed the words, conundrums, stories, songs. Her rooms were lighted by candles. Fruits and candies were served, such as oranges, bananas, dates and figs, the latter served each one placed in a brown paper curiously folded. Of course the occasion was enjoyed by all. Miss Smith left for Kendallville on the 5 o'clock train Sunday.

Saturday Waterloo's streets were filled all day, as well as the stores and millinery shops. It was opening day at Johnson's the new store of J. Rosenthal, Boyer & Lease—and Mrs. P. Gill's. All were tastily arranged, and a fine lot of goods in great variety made a beautiful display. At Johnson's and Rosenthal's they were more than crowded, they were amply packed. At the latter place a charge amount of goods were sold. The store looked beautiful, but by evening the windows were denuded of some of their decorations, of lovely patterns curtains etc, carried off by purchasers. Mrs Johnson's fine taste undoubtedly found a field in which to display it, decorating and exhibiting their fine line of dry goods and lovely hats, each one a poem in lace flowers and ribbon. Mrs. Gill deserves appreciation. She made a good display her hats are pretty and found many admirers, and she no doubt will have her full share of customers in the future, as in the past. Boyer & Lease have their store closely filled with goods, it would seem to make it more difficult to decorate to advantage, than with more room, yet it was all pretty, and the customers who want the goods are the important consideration after all.

SUTLER.

Mother Diehl is reported seriously ill, at the residence of her son, Leander J., of our place. She returned from Ann Arbor where she underwent an operation. Her recovery seems doubtful.

Mother Bowman remains nearly the same. It is doubtful if she will recover

John Hook, formerly of Stafford, but recently of Butler, died at his home on the south side last Friday. His funeral took place Sunday at the Wartenbee school house, south Stafford.

John Brunkhart had the misfortune to lose the fingers of his left hand, while operating a buzz saw at the wind-mill factory last week. It will seriously cripple him the rest of his life.

Aunt Catharine Rogers is seriously sick, and has been so for a number of weeks. She lives alone with her grandson, Frank Snyder, a young man of about twenty years, who has nobly devoted his entire time to her care for a number of years, doing all the house work and taking care of his helpless old grand-mother. But few boys could be induced to such a sacrifice.

A number of our people are in attendance at the Dick Abrams' trial this week. Mr. Abrams has been an excellent laborer and when free from the influence of liquor, was a very fair sort of a man. None know this better than the saloon keepers, yet he obtained liquor, and in all probabilities this has been the main cause of his downfall. While liquor is sold crime will continue in tenfold proportion to what it would otherwise be. Yet there remain fools enough in nearly every state to suffer its continuance.

CONCORD.

G. W. Reed, of Auburn, is visiting friends here and at St. Joe.

F. M. Monroe, D. D. Miller and H. Milton were at Auburn on business relating to the settlement of their estate.

Mrs. Ed. Elson and little daughter Alda returned to their home in Canton, O., Tuesday.

Jas. Brent and wife are at home to their friends on the farm.

Mr. Pence now has the supervision of the farm of Misses Laura and Jennie Shutt.

Alice Draggoo spent Thursday and Friday at Auburn.

Mrs A. Rickets is quite low with stomach trouble.

James Johnson and D. W. Baker hauled several loads of tiling last week.

Bertha Hollobaugh closed her school last Friday after a successful term.

Fred Jenkins closed his school last Friday and will now turn his attention to farming.

G. W. Hamilton and wife, of Grove Bethel, visited in the family of F. Buchanan Friday.

Fred Becker is running J. C. Owens' farm this summer.

A Mr. Tarries now occupies Mrs. E. Lutz' property.

Doma Hull, of Spencerville, attended church here last Sabbath, as was also Grant Keller, of Butler.

J. B. Gibford and wife visited C. A. Rhodes, of Spencerville, last Sunday.

Mrs. Mert Johnson is reported no better.

Maggie Baughman was able to attend church Sunday.

G. W. Draggoo and Wayne Scott were in Allen county on a business trip Tuesday.

Henry Milton will shortly leave for Cleveland, O.

Richard Ervin and wife are now doing the stamp licking, and are not sour about it either.

Last Saturday Newt Wasson hitched up his son Clyde's colt and drove to St. Joe and it seems the colt broke loose and turned several circles in the street before being caught. It kicked and broke the fills, then Crairy started for home leading the colt, but gave out; then thinking to ride, he led the colt to the fence and mounted, but the colt played camel and off went Mr. Newt. Clyde said it was a new idea for a 225 pound man to ride a 150 pound colt. Wallace says anyone desiring a hostler would do well to employ his father.

Fred Morr has built a summer kitchen and wood house.

Wm. Simanson and wife and N. Testison and wife, of St. Joe, were the guests of Mrs. B. Baker last Sabbath.

THE only reason for putting even a small duty on sugar, is that all the money paid will go into the treasury. It was poor business management that took this duty off. It produced nearly sixty millions a year, and the government got all of it, or nearly all. But the McKinly law threw this money away, and arranged to pay out several millions in bounties. Hence we are now short of money to run the government.

"The Show at Washington."

Everybody who expects ever to visit Washington, or who cares to know anything about the real personality of the men who carry on affairs at the National Capital will want to read "The Show at Washington," the interesting and sketchy little volume just issued by the Washington Publishing Company. It is the work of those gifted and clever Washington correspondents, L. A. Coolidge, of the New York Recorder and J. B. Reynolds, of the Boston Advertiser, who have given a graphic picture of the tremendously interesting comedy constantly on the boards at the Capital. The book is fearlessly truthful. There is not a dull line in it, nor a paragraph which is not fresh, bright and sparkling. The statesmen who help to frame our laws are placed before the reader exactly as they are, and the intimate personal acquaintance of the authors with most of our national celebrities enables them to reveal for the first time many striking characteristics about which everybody will like to know. The book is chatty and personal. There is hardly a paragraph which does not contain a character sketch, a pen picture or an anecdote. The conception of the work is novel. Nothing like it has ever been attempted before. A mere glance at the table of contents is enough to whet the reader's appetite for what is to come, and each chapter fulfils the expectations aroused by its heading. The ways of the President and the White House family the members of the Cabinet, the Supreme Court, the Senate, the House and the Diplomatic corps all come in for incisive and discriminating treatment. The literary style of the book will commend it to all lovers of picturesque and sinewy English.

The work is handsomely issued in paper at 25 cents and in a substantial cloth binding at $1, and is sold by all booksellers and news dealers, or can be obtained direct on application to the Washington Publishing Co., publishers, 1406 G street N. W., Washington, D. C.

SAINT JOHN'S VISION AT PATMOS.

Rev. Dr. Johnson's Sermon at the First Presbyterian Church.

South Bend Daily Tribune.

Below is a synopsis of Rev. Dr. Johnson's sermon at the First Presbyterian church Sunday morning, April 8:

These are they that came out of great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.—Rev. 7:14.

The isle of Patmos is situated in the Icarian sea. It is a small island of rock and one of the most desolate on the globe, but its rock and dust are sacred because associated with the memory of St. John, the apostle. He was banished to this lonely spot by a cruel Roman emperor. However it became a mount of transfiguration because of the revelation given to the apostle; but what did John see looking through the open door? Well, he tells us that he saw a multitude which no man can number. Even figures were impotent to tell the story; figures can help us estimate the population of the globe, but stagger in the presence of the countless number that greeted the eye of St. John. The majority of the race will enter the gate of pearl through the atoning merit of our Lord. There will be no children or little ones in the city of the lost; they are in heaven clothed in white and with palms in their hands. The little girl that you buried under the white snow of last winter is in the multitude singing her song of praise; hence it is well with our friends who have died in the christian faith. But the multitude is composed of all nations and tongues.

There is great variety in heaven. Even on earth there is no monotony. The brilliant stars of our sky differ in glory. We would not care to have our globe all mountain or sea or prairie; neither would we wish to have a race of poets or artists. Poetry is well, but it would be too much of a good thing to have a world of poets. Art is well, for we all love the glowing canvass of the artist. But our world would be poor, indeed, if every man were an artist. The human heart loves variety and it will be gratified in the city that arose before the eye of John. But the multitude is suggestive. It tells us of the triumph of our Lord. His chariot is to move in triumph over the earth. When we strike hands with christianity we strike hands with victory.

In the presence of our Lord the good will be more than a match for the evil. The multitude which no man can number tells the thrilling story of the triumph of our Lord. But who are they? Well, they are they that have come out of great tribulation. But is that a limitation? By no means. For the reason that the word tribulation means friction. And every child of God has friction—there is the friction between the old man and the new, with our besetting sin and with business and sorrow and storm. Hence every christian comes out of great friction in his march toward the city of pearl and jasper. The christian life is a conflict and its path is over battle fields. Victory is beyond the friction or tribulation. We may learn some profound lessons sitting at the feet of nature.

A member of this church showed me the other day the first home of a butterfly. It was its home before it evolved into some thing larger and more beautiful. It was the log cabin of a worm on its way to a palace. The evolution of a butterfly was most beautiful. The sick wife of my friend dropped the suggestive thought that the struggle and friction of the worm to get out of the old home added a new beauty to its color. It is a lesson that John learned through the open gate that through much friction or tribulation we pass into the kingdom of God.

But why were they within the gate of pearl? Well, because they had washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. All who enter heaven enter on the ground of the atoning merit of our Lord. He is the open door into the kingdom. Without Christ there is no heaven. To wash in His blood is to trust Him as our personal Saviour. Their robes were white and white is the symbol of purity and victory. We largely take on the color of our surroundings. The seed dropped into the cold soil of the Alps naturally takes the color of white when it flowers that it may be in harmony with its home of perpetual snow. So to stand in the presence of our Lord is to become like Him. To see Him means transformation. Blessed thought, that we are to be like Him. That will be heaven; and so we say, all hail!

HOUSEL—SNYDER.

An exceedingly pretty and quiet wedding was that which took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. William Snyder, of DeKalb, Butler township, on last Thursday at high noon, in which their youngest daughter, Miss Sadie, was united in marriage to Mr. E. E. Housel, only son of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Housel, of DeKalb. At the appointed hour the guests assembled in the parlor and the wedding march from Mendelsohn, played by Maggie Snyder, sister of the bride, announced the approach of the bridal party. The bride entered, preceded by her sister, Miss Lillie, who acted as bride's-maid, and Mr. Will Strouse as best man. The impressive ceremony was performed by Rev. J. D. Brosy, of Auburn. The bride was becomingly costumed in a gown of gray corded silk with pearl trimmings and ribbons. After receiving congratulations, the bride and groom led the way to the dining room where the wedding dinner was served. Only relatives and most intimate friends were present, including the DeKalb Quartet, of which both are members. The guests from abroad were: Mr. and Mrs. James Snyder and son Charles, of Ft. Wayne, Mr. Snyder being only brother of the bride. Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Ober and daughters Laura and Nellie, George and Miss Mary Bishop, of Auburn, and Will Strouse, of near Garrett. The presents were costly and pretty as well as useful. Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Housel left in the afternoon for a short wedding trip. They were accompanied as far as Ft. Wayne by Maggie and Lillie Snyder, Laura Ober, Mary Bishop, Will Strouse and others.

Married.

Miss Minnie B. Duesler, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Duesler, was married on Sunday, April 8, at 3 p. m., to James W. Metcalf, at the home of the bride's parents.

The bride is one of DeKalb's successful teachers, having taught in our county for the past three years.

Mr. Metcalf is an industrious farmer and only son of Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Metcalf.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. O. Butler, of Waterloo, in the presence of about thirty-five guests, relatives of the contracting parties, after which hearty congratulations were bestowed upon the newly wedded pair, who, with the minister, led the way to a feast which had been carefully prepared for the occaston, and heartily enjoyed by everyone present.

The gifts were numerous, useful and ornamental.

The guests were invited to the home of groom on Monday, where they partook of a nicely prepared dinner, and in the evening the Union Chapel Band and others serenaded them. After playing several pieces of music they were invited into the house and treated to cigars and cake.

Those present from a distance were Mrs. George Diehr and children, of Fremont, Ohio, who is a sister of the bride, and Mr. and Mrs. Burhans, of Elkhart, Ind.

The Ligonier Banner says: "Capt. J. E Braden tells us that the cold weather has almost ruined the prospects for fruits in this locality. He says that even the hardy fruits like the blackberry are injured, and that early cherries are all killed."

The following from the Laporte Argus: "We were shown some peach buds one day last week, and the closest examination gave no evidence that they have been damaged by the snow and frosts. On opening the buds the fruit appeared to be green and in a healthy condition There seems to be no doubt that apples escaped without material injury. But there is an impression that the early mall fruits and possibly early pears, were damaged.

AROUND THE WORLD.

INTELLIGENCE FROM ALL PARTS OF THE GLOBE.

Three Children Meet Death in a Burning Building—Another Victim of Hazing—The Great Northern Railroad in the Hands of Strikers—A Bloody Crime.

ALL TRAINS TIED UP.

Great Northern Strike is Worse—Railway Organizations in a Row.

St. Paul (Minn.) special: The situation on the Great Northern has grown steadily worse, and it is stated at labor headquarters that not a train is running on the line between Spokane Falls and the North Dakota border at Red River. Local trains are running from St. Paul to the Western Minnesota border, but it is useless to send out through trains. The strikers at Williston, Minot, Devil's Lake, and Grand Fords, N. D., have offered to run mail trains, but the Great Northern Company has issued peremptory orders that no cars shall move unless the whole train is allowed to go.

It was developed that there is a big row on between the American Railway Union and the various railway brotherhoods. The strike was ordered by the American Union and is being actively antagonized by the railroad employes' brotherhoods more than by the railroad company itself. There can be no doubt that the individuals of the various brotherhoods are privately somewhat dissatisfied, but they recently accepted the revised schedules and are standing by their agreement with the company.

A large number of brotherhood engineers and firemen along the line are willing to resume work, but the American Union men refuse to man their trains. The brotherhood men, who are out from sympathy with the strikers, have been informed by their chiefs that they are violating their oaths, and that if they continue to remain out will be expelled from the brotherhoods.

BURNED TO DEATH.

Terrible Fate of Three Daughters of August Krinkie.

Janesville (Minn.) special: The residence of August Krinkie, three miles west of this place, was burned, and three of Krinkie's daughters, Augusta, Martha, and Edith, aged respectively 10, 8, and 6, perished in the flames. Mr. Krinkie arose early and started a fire in the kitchen stove and then went to the pasture after his cows. Shortly after he had left the neighbors were aroused by a loud report in the direction of Krinkie's house and saw the structure in flames. Assistance soon arrived, but nothing could be done to rescue the girls from the building.

The fire caught from the kitchen stovepipe and had a good start before the inmates were aware of their danger. One of the girls was the first to awake and she called her mother, who opened the kitchen door, when the flames burst through with such force that she barely escaped with two smaller children. A quantity of dynamite was stored in the house and this exploded shortly after the fire was discovered. The explosion probably caused the death of the girls. After the house and contents were consumed the remains of the girls were found in the cellar. The flesh was entirely burned off the bodies.

A Murderer's Confession.

Wooster (Ohio) special: At the trial of James C. Wiggins of Disko, Ind., charged with employing Dr. W. Brown, of the same place, to assassinate W. A. Mackey, of this county, because the latter would give damaging evidence against Wiggins in the divorce suit of Jacob Snell, against his wife, Brown made a full confession implicating Wiggins. He said Wiggins importuned him several times, but he refused, and only when he was taking a load of horses to Lima did he consent. Wiggins gave him the loaded revolver and a bottle of strychnine. He was to use the poison first, and failing with that was to shoot Mackey. He was to receive $1,000 for killing Jacob Snell and $1,000 for killing Mackey. He received $50 cash. Four hundred dollars was to be paid him Christmas and the balance when Mrs. Snell received the $10,000 insurance on Mackey's life.

More Hazing.

A fatal accident occurred at Huntington, Tenn., where a party of schoolboys attempted to haze a new student. The plan was to take the victim to the woods and frighten him with pistols fired from ambush. One of the shots struck a young man named H. T. Harper, who was passing along the road at the time, inflicting a wound from which he died in a few hours.

A Saw Mill Explosion.

Breece's saw mill, near Bainbridge, Ohio, was wrecked by a boiler explosion. Engineer Nate Weatherby and Frank Breece, brother of the proprietor, were instantly killed. Ed. Everhart, Grant Martin, Chas. Boslin, and Samuel Houston were seriously injured.

General Vaccination Orders.

An order has been issued by the State and City Health Board requiring everyone in Indianapolis to be vaccinated, only those who have been successfully vaccinated in the last seven years being exempt.

Nine Thousand Men Out.

Birmingham special: The Walker County miners have joined the strike, making 9,000 men out.

The Roby Cases Continued.

The Roby prize fight cases, which were to have been tried at Crown Point, Ind., this week, have been postponed until the next term of court, on account of Judge Langdon's illness.

Oklahoma Pilgrims Go in Style.

The Oklahoma contingent of Coxey's army, 300 strong, has completed arrangements with the railroad company to carry it to Washington in box cars.

Terrible Explosion.

A Union Tank Line oil car standing on the Northwestern tracks near Sacramento avenue and Kinzie street, Chicago, took fire and exploded. One boy was killed and several men injured. The car was ignited by a hot journal, and the fire department, seeing the danger, withdrew, as the fire could not spread. A crowd gathered to watch the blaze, when the tank suddenly exploded, hurling broken iron and burning oil in all directions. Many of the spectators were thrown to the ground by the shock, and a number were slightly injured by flying debris. Railway shanties near by and a train of stock cars were fired by the burning oil, but the flames were soon extinguished.

NEST OF DYNAMITERS.

Sensational Discovery at Aubervilliers, Paris.

Paris special: Paris was startled recently by a sensational dynamite discovery just made in Aubervilliers, one of the city's environs. The police unearthed a great nest of anarchists and found enough bombs to annihilate the whole city. The authorities say the discovery was made just in time—that a huge conspiracy for the destruction of life and property was barely nipped soon enough to arrest a fearful horror.

Since the Vaillant affair the police have been especially active in tracking anarchists to their dens, and many have been arrested. The detectives, in fact, made the capital too hot for the terrorists, who fled for refuge to the small manufacturing towns under the walls of the city. Of these Aubervilliers was believed to have been most favorable because of the almost exclusive laboring character of its people.

The police department sent its detectives to the town and the result was the finding of a whole magazine of anarchistic ammunition that caused the most widespread alarm in Paris among those who knew something of the anarchists' methods. In a water-way under the road leading from Aubervilliers to Courneuve the police found a dozen tin boxes filled with the most dangerous explosives—a case containing twenty-four pounds of poudre verte, twenty pounds of dynamite cartridges, a quantity of scrap steel and hob nails and a reversible bomb ready for use.

AT AN END

Is the Revolution in the State of Rio Grand Do Sul.

A special from Buenos Ayers, Argentine, via Galveston, says: The Revolution in the State of Rio Grande do Sul is at an end. After being repulsed at Rio Grande City the insurgent squadron, under command of Admiral Mello, fled. Subsequently the defeated warships landed 2,000 men on the Uruguayan Coast, near the boundry of Brazil. These refugees were in dire distress. They had no clothing, nothing to eat. The Government of Uruguay granted them protection, but has ordered the squadron under Mello to leave Uruguay waters forthwith.

The Government of Uruguay sent a force of troops on board gunboats to the point where Admiral Mello landed the Brazilian insurgents from the Republica and other vessels. Eventually the Uruguayan troops surrounded the Brazilian insurgents and the latter surrendered.

As the Republica is understood to be in the hands of the Uruguayan officers, and as Admiral Mello and his army are prisoners, the complete downfall of the rebel cause is admitted on all side. There may be some little further fighting in the southern portion of Rio Grande do Sul, but the eventual complete triumph of President Peixoto is no longer a question of doubt.

DARING ROBBERY.

Single-Handed a Bold Outlaw Loots a Nebraska Bank.

Crawford (Neb.) special: A bold robbery was perpetrated here, the Crawford Banking Company being the victim and losing about $2,300. The robbery took place sometime after banking hours and while President Whipple was alone in the bank. He was sitting at his desk at work when suddenly he was told to throw up his hands and to not call out. He looked up into the muzzle of a pair of revolvers in the hands of a big burly man. He was told to open the money drawer which he did and the robber pocketed the contents. Whipple then marched to the vault and what cash was available there was taken. The robber then closed the vault door, leaving the bank president on the inside and the bolt was slipped on the prisoner, who was released a few minutes later by Mr. Chase who entered the bank on business. Mr. Whipple was able to give a description of the robber who had not worn a mask. Officers with Winchesters are scouring the country in the hope of heading him off before he gets to the hills.

Dreadful Casualty.

A terrible accident occurred at the steel plant of King, Gilbert & Warner at Middleport, Ohio, by which ten men were fearfully burned by the upsetting of a mass of molten metal. Four of the injured will die. The men were preparing to pour a large vessel containing 2,000 pounds of molten steel when the apparatus for moving the vessel broke, precipitating the molted mass into the pit, where about sixty men were at work. A fearful explosion followed, and the white hot metal flew in all directions. Physicians were summoned and the injured men were removed to their homes and given every possible care. The explosion raised a cloud of steam that was seen for several miles.

Senator Vance.

Senator Vance of North Carolina, died at his home, 1726 Massachusetts Street, Washington, at 11:20 o'clock Sunday night. He had a stroke of apoplexy in the morning. He had been suffering for some time from paralysis and a complication of diseases, but the end was sudden and unexpected, as he was regaining his health and it was thought was on the road to recovery. He was compelled during the winter to leave the Senate and go to Florida. Here he grew somewhat better, and in view of the struggle over the tariff he returned to Washington. He was a member of the Committee on Finance, but took little or no part in framing the present tariff bill.

Buried Alive.

A few days ago a 15-year-old daughter of J. Luckish, a Bohemian, living at Cresco, Iowa, died suddenly. The day before she had a tooth pulled, and an anasthetic was administered during the operation. The next morning she was found dead in bed. The following day she was buried. Two or three days later the grave was opened and it was found that she had, as was suspected, been buried alive. The glass in the coffin was broken to fragments, the body was in a condition of fearful contortion, the hands were cut and blood-stained, and the hair tern out. The corpse was turned over and was found face downward.

Social Purity Crusade.

The women in charge of the social purity crusade at Sioux City, Iowa, held a meeting recently, at which they took steps toward a united effort on the part of women of the city to close the disorderly houses. They have thus far induced the city government to close the worst of the variety theaters, and will at once circulate petitions to have the dens of the city closed. If the Council and the Mayor do not accede to their request they will raise money and prosecute the places.

The Last Call.

Gen. Henry W. Slocum died at his home, in Brooklyn, N. Y., at 12:05 Sunday of pneumonia. He had been ill only a few days, but death was not expected. He began to sink early in the evening, and Dr. Bellows, the family physician, called in Drs. Fuhs and Westbrook, and he rallied for a while. He suddenly grew worse, however. At 11 o'clock he fell asleep. Shortly before 12 he awoke, perfectly conscious, and spoke to his family. He was conscious the end was near.

Depew a Candidate.

St. Louis (Mo.) special: Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, who is here, announces himself as a candidate for President of the United States. Mr. Depew, accompanied by Cornelius Vanderbilt and M. E. Ingalls, President of the Big Four Railroad, reached here on a tour of inspection of the Vanderbilt properties. The party stopped at the Southern Hotel, where Mr. Depew, in an interview, declared his candidacy.

The Ship Canal.

At a meeting of the directors of the Toledo Chamber of Commerce, a committee appointed to investigate the feasibility of a ship canal from Chicago to Toledo, shortening the distance over 700 miles. The committee will also select a route for the canal and endeavor to demonstrate to the promoters of the proposed enterprise that it would be a profitable investment.

More Coke Workers Idle.

Uniontown (Pa.) special: This end of the coke region had an exciting day Monday, and as a result 1,000 men employed at seven plants, comprising 1,200 ovens, are idle. The house of one man was broken open. He was beaten, one of his ears cut off and then he was forced to accompany the strikers.

Double Murder.

Near Collinsburg, Texas, Frank Crews, a farm hand, shot and mortally wounded his employer, Thomas Murrell, without warning. Mrs. Murrell rushed to her husband's assistance and Crews cut her throat, killing her instantly. The murderer escaped.

Will All Strike.

It is reported that every trainman on the Great Northern Railroad from St. Paul to Seattle will quit work and move nothing but mail cars. They have received word that the company intends to ship new men, and they are determined to stop the scheme.

Trade Outlook Brightening.

It is announced to-day that the Anderson, Ind., flint bottle works will resume operations at once, and will not close during the summer. Director Conrad Smith regards the trade outlook as the best it has been for three years.

Burned to a Crisp.

San Angelo (Texas) special: The Concho Hotel, a large two-story frame building, has been destroyed here by fire. In the ruins the remains of Ollie F. Berry, a prominent ranchman of Menard County, were found burned to a crisp.

To Be Enjoined.

The trustees of the estates of Lady Henry Somerset, the leader of the Women's Christian Temperence movement in England, are petitioning the courts for an injunction to restrain her from closing all the saloons on her estates.

MADELINE IS WINNER.

JURY GIVES HER A VERDICT FOR $15,000.

Notorious Pollard-Breckinridge Breach of Promise Case Is Ended at Last—Small-Pox Epidemic Is Not Abating in Chicago—Pest House Overcrowded.

Jury Strikes an Average.

The Pollard-Breckinridge trial in Washington is ended at last and Madeline Pollard has a verdict for $15,000 against the silver-tongued Congressman from the blue-grass region. The jury rendered its verdict after having been out a little over an hour. The jury took fifteen ballots before reaching a conclusion. The difference was mainly over the amount of damages to be granted, and there was but one man on the jury who favored the defendant. On the first ballot one juror voted for the defense and hung out for a time, but his colleagues thought he did it more for the sake of argument than because he was strongly in favor of Col. Breckinridge. A number of ballots were required to reach a compromise on the amount of damages to be awarded. Two or three jurors wanted to give the full amount of $50,000, while the others thought that merely nominal damages would serve to express their opinion that the Congressman had treated Miss Pollard shabbily.

Col. Breckinridge, according to a dispatch, was very cool after the verdict had been rendered. He declined to speak at that time for publication, as did his attorneys. Miss Pollard was somewhat excited, but not hysterical, while awaiting the result, and broke into tears when she heard it. She declined to be interviewed, and her attorneys said that she was anxious to efface herself from the public sight as far as possible, now that the case had ended. Congressman Breckinridge will appeal the case, and in the meantime will go to Kentucky and demand a re-election as a "vindication."

The Verdict Is Announced.

At 4:35 there was a rush toward the court-room. Judge Bradley and the jury entered at one door. Col. Breckinridge, his son and Col. Phil Thompson, his attorney, by the other. There was some delay in waiting for the other parties. Every one knew the jurors had not come in to ask for instructions, because they carried their coats and hats. The jury had been out only one hour and twenty-eight minutes. There was an intense silence. Five minutes passed before Attorney Carlisle, representing Miss Pollard, entered. Judge Bradley requested the people to refrain from demonstrations. Then the verdict of $15,000 for the plaintiff was announced. There was no expression of approval or disapproval from the crowd. Col. Breckinridge himself rose to make a motion for a new trial and the court adjourned.

There was nothing but expressions of approval and regrets that the amount was not larger among the few Senators in the Senate chamber when the bulletin was announced to them and rapidly passed around the chamber.

Since the verdict was rendered the theatrical managers have redoubled their importunities, and several telegrams came to Miss Pollard offering her astonishing sums to go upon the stage at once. Her friends decline to give the names of the theatrical managers or to discuss their offers, saying that no attention will be paid to any of them.

Ask Congress to Take Action.

Hardly had the verdict in the Pollard-Breckinridge case been rendered when a meeting of prominent Washington women was called to take action regarding the case of Col. Breckinridge. Representatives of several feminine organizations met at Willard's Hotel, and, after an interesting conference, adopted resolutions calling upon Congress to consider the qualifications of Representative Breckinridge for membership in that body.

PEST HOUSE CROWDED.

A Most Serious Condition of Affairs Exists in Chicago.

One hundred and twenty-six new cases was the small-pox record in Chicago for the last week as shown by the books in the Health Department. Twenty-five of these were reported on Friday, twenty-three on Saturday. Eleven had been discovered up to 4 o'clock Sunday, and the department declares the disease is still spreading. One hundred and eighty-six patients, says a dispatch, are in the pest house, several are in the "suspect" ward of the County Hospital, and a number are quarantined in private houses because there is no room in the city's hospital. No more women or children will be removed from infected houses unless some extra provision is made for their care.

The Department of Health, by its officials and inspectors, declares itself unable to meet the emergency and prevent the further spread of the disease unless further facilities are provided at once and the people of the wards most affected co-operate in reporting new cases as soon as they arise.

The most serious condition of affairs has been found in the southwest portion of the city, especially in the Ninth and Tenth Wards. Dr. M. Brand, the inspector, found three persons dead in their houses Sunday, and two similar cases on Saturday. The people living in the houses had concealed the existence of smallpox until death came and they were compelled to call in the undertaker. He notified the Health Department and Dr. Brand was sent to investigate.

Went to School and to Church.

"It would not be well to give the addresses," said the doctor when he was asked about them, "but they were in families where the people had been passing in and out, the children going to school, the family attending church and going about as if small-pox were an every-day affair. That seems to be nothing extraordinary, either. I have had a number of cases where the first word we had of them was from the undertaker. Generally we find one or two new cases in the house with the dead body, but the isolation of such cases is not enough to stop the trouble, because we are called in after the harm has been done.

"Another thing, and the most serious obstacle, is the opposition to vaccination. The Poles especially seem to regard inoculation with fear as a thing to be dreaded. It is next to impossible to persuade the residents of the district to protect themselves and their neighbor from contagion. As a result the condition of things here is serious and something ought to be done at once if they are not to be worse.

"Here is an example of the way the disease is scattered: I was called in to examine a patient in a house. I found a little girl already dead, another sister in the first stages, and the father, who was a butcher, attending to his shop every day. There had been no attempt to isolate him. He sold fresh meat to hundreds of people in that neighborhood, and it will be strange if some of them do not come down sick. To make matters worse, the sanitary conditions in the district are very bad. Not an alley in the Ninth or Tenth Ward is paved, and almost all of them are filled with trash."

TO RESIST COXEYITES.

Iowa's Governor Orders State Militia Under Arms.

Nine companies of the Iowa National Guard in the western part of the State were under arms, ready to go to Council Bluffs in case their presence was needed, to prevent lawlessness and disorder on the part of Kelly's Western industrial army. Governor Jackson, according to a Des Moines dispatch, received a telegram from the Sheriff of Pottawattamie County, asking him for troops to preserve the peace and protect property. The Governor at once ordered Company I, of the Third Regiment, Iowa National Guard, at Council Bluffs, W. E. Atkinson commanding, to report to the sheriff for duty. The company numbers forty men, and is one of the best in the State.

A short time afterward N. M. Hubbard, Jr., of Cedar Rapids, attorney for the Chicago and Northwestern Railway, arrived in Des Moines and hurried to the Capitol. He represented to the Governor that the trunk lines of railroad which touch Council Bluffs would be unable to protect their trains and other property from the invaders. He feared that the 2,000 desperate men in Kelly's army would capture trains on some of the east-west roads running into Council Bluffs and run them wild eastward, possibly causing wrecks and disaster.

Gov. Jackson announced his intention of preserving order and preventing the capture of any trains in Iowa, and in company with Mr. Hubbard started for Council Bluffs in a special train over the Chicago and Northwestern. Before leaving Gov. Jackson telegraphed to Adjutant General Prim, who is in Cherokee, to report for immediate duty and through Maj. J. R. Prim issued orders to the following companies to assemble at their armories and await marching orders:

Company G, Third Regiment, Creston, 40 men, Capt. W. J. Fuggan; Company I, Third Regiment, Bedford, 65 men, Capt. M. Miller; Company K, Third Regiment, Corning, 50 men, Capt. A. B. Shaw; Company B, Third Regiment, Villisca, 45 men, Capt. S. P. Moore; Company M, Third Regiment, Red Oak, 42 men, Capt. J. W. Clark; Company E, Third Regiment, Shenandoah, 40 men, Capt. O. L. Shaffer; Company L, Third Regiment, Council Bluffs, 40 men, Capt. W. E. Atchison; Company I, Fourth Regiment, Sioux City, 50 men, Capt. W. A. Kirk; Company H, Sioux City, 50 men, Capt. J. A. Haley.

Frye's Army Splits in Twain.

Vandalia, Ill.—General Frye and his arm camped here last night. Ever since their arrival here the men argued strongly that they could make no headway walking, and many of them being sick and worn out from their long journey declared they would go no further on foot. It appeared the men censured General Frye for not making a greater effort to get transportation, and this morning they voted by company to throw General Frye overboard and elect a new general more in sympathy with their ideas. The vote showed a very slight majority in favor of retaining General Frye. Then the men opposed to following General Frye openly declared they would go no further with him. Shortly before noon General Frye started on the National road east, followed by about 200 men. The remaining 156 held a caucus and decided to seize the first Vandalia freight train east and ride as far as possible.

Vinette's Army Is Arrested.

San Bernardino, Cal.—In response to a call from Colton for help Sheriff Booth, with forth-eight deputies armed with shot-guns, went to Colton to arrest the second Los Angeles regiment of the army of the unemployed. After quietly leaving this city the army under Captain Vinette marched to Colton and during the night took possession of a Southern Pacific freight train. The engineer side-tracked his train and refused to haul the men. Upon the arrival of Sheriff Booth and posse, the army was ordered to get off the cars, which command they refused to obey. The town hose cart was then drawn out and water from the city waterworks was turned on the men. They did not leave, however, until the army was placed under arrest to a man.

Coxey at Massillon.

J. S. Coxey, the leader of the commonweal of Christ, who so suddenly disappeared from the ranks of the army at Addison, Pa., on Thursday, made his appearance in the streets of Massillon Saturday morning. Mr. Coxey arrived there Friday night, and was driven directly to his home. When questioned about his commonweal, he answered that it was a glorious success, and that Washington would be reached without trouble of any kind.

THE mystery of the extensive robbery of valuable mail at the South Bend postoffice, which has been going on since last July, was cleared up the other day by the arrest and confession of Edward Boone, a married man and son of Phillip H. Boone. The prisoner has been a resident of that city all his life, and until recently was employed in the postoffice. He was forced to resign on account of his bad habits. Edward Berger, whose house Boone had occupied until lately, found an open letter containing a money order for $2.17, payable to County Treasurer Yenn, and a letter from the remitter, Henry C. OUT OF THE PARTY.

Senator David B. Hill, of New York, Breaks Away from Democracy.

Washington dispatch: Not since the most exciting days of the silver debate last fall has there been such a crowd in the Senate as was present Monday to listen to Senator David B. Hill, of New York, on the tariff question. The Senator did not begin until 2 o'clock. The galleries were crowded to their utmost capacity. The public galleries were all filled; the diplomatic gallery, too, was crowded, and the seats set apart for the families of the President and Vice President were also occupied. Outside the halls the corridors were thronged with visitors anxious to get into the galleries, and they stood in long lines awaiting their turn.

D. B. HILL

On the floor of the Senate were fully fifty members of the House of Representatives, all anxious to hear what the Senator from New York had to say upon the tariff question. Mr. Hill's speech was disappointing in that it made no definite announcement as to his purpose regarding the final vote on the tariff bill, if such a vote is ever reached. It was expected that he would attack the President and some of the views of the administration, and it was also anticipated that he would violently assail the chairman of the Finance Committee and the members who had directed the formation of the tariff bill.

The Senator met the expectations upon these points, for the opening paragraph of his speech contained a direct reflection upon the President. Later along he criticised the Hawaiian policy of the administration and paid his respects to Secretary Gresham with the declaration that the Secretary of State was not a Democrat. Eventually he got around to Mr. Voorhees and the Finance Committee, and he pitched into the Chairman in rather pointed language. His remarks in this particular were not such as are calculated to create harmony between the opposing factions on the Democratic side of the Senate regarding the pending tariff bill.

Senator Hill is criticised even by some of his friends for having indulged such a course at so critical a time. Mr. Hill read his speech from printed proof slips, though he appeared to need the copy only for occasional guidance, his delivery being as free and natural as if he was speaking extemporaneously. His voice and pronunciation were such as to render every sentence distinct and forcible. He was frequently interrupted by applause.

The main portion of his speech was an argument against the income tax, and it is regarded as unusually strong. Few of the Democratic members, however, believe that the income tax provision will be stricken out. The Senator clearly intends to vote against that provision of the bill, and it is now understood that he will vote against the entire measure if the income tax is retained in it. In view of this fact it is reasonably certain that Senator Hill may be counted among the opponents of the bill upon its final passage. That is the calculation by the friends of the measure since hearing his speech. Mr. Hill's speech on Monday marks the beginning of a critical period in the history of the pending tariff legislation.

AHEAD OF LAST YEAR.

Winter Wheat Crop in Various Sections Makes a Good Showing.

The condition of winter wheat on the first of April, as reported by the statistician of the Department of Agriculture, averages 86.[illegible] per cent. for the entire country, last year the average being 77.4. In 1892 it was 81.2 and 96.9 for the year of 1891. The corresponding average for rye is 94.4 per cent. The averages of wheat for the principal States are as follows: Kentucky, 83; Ohio, 90; Michigan, 83; Indiana, 90; Illinois, 87; Missouri, 88; Kansas, 72; Nebraska, 85; Iowa, 87. The average date of seeding in the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys was late, owing to the dry weather. In general, however, the conditions of soil were not unfavorable to planting and germination. Very little damage is reported from the Hessian fly, and that only in sections of Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas.

The weather from seeding time until recent cold waves swept over the country, except in cases hereafter noted, has been very favorable to the growth of the plant. In the Eastern, Northern and Northwestern States snow covering has afforded protection in addition to that of a mild temperature. The returns in regard to the effects upon wheat resulting from the recent cold spell are not so satisfactory nor so conclusive as desirable. The injury to the crop is considerable, if not great, but the comments of the correspondents accompanying the report would seem to indicate that the full extent of the damage was not fully determinable at date of transmission. In the Eastern and Northern States the damage was comparatively slight. In the Southern Atlantic and Southern States the damage is marked and decided, with perhaps the exception of Texas. While in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Kentucky the injury from frosting is considerable, the extent of same is contingent on future meteorological conditions. The returns indicate that freezing to the ground was quite prevalent, especially on low and rich moist land, but with roots left untouched, or at least alive, with good prospects of recuperation on the recurrence of favorable weather. In the States of Kansas, Nebraska and California the impaired condition of the crops has not resulted so much from the frost as from cold weather. High winds are also noted by Kansas correspondents as one of the causes of unfavorable conditions.

PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION.

Gives Notice That the Behring Sea Act Is a Law and Must Be Observed.

President Cleveland has issued the following proclamation:

WHEREAS, An act of Congress, entitled "An act to give effect to the award rendered by the tribunal of arbitration at Paris, under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concluded at Washington, Feb. 29, 1892, for the purpose of submitting to arbitration certain questions concerning the preservation of the fur seals," was approved April 5, 1894. [Here the act is quoted in full.]

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States of America, have caused the said act speedily to be proclaimed to the end that its provisions may be known and observed; and I hereby proclaim that any person guilty of violation of the provisions of said act will be arrested and punished as therein provided; and all vessels so employed, their tackle, apparel, furniture and cargo will be seized and forfeited.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the City of Washington, this 19th day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-four, and the independence of the United States the one hundred and eighteenth.

GROVER CLEVELAND

UNITED AT LAST

BY

MISS M E BRADDON

CHAPTER III.

"IT WAS THINE OATH THAT FIRST DID FAIL."

Nearly a year had gone since Cyprian Davenant had turned his back upon British soil. It was the end of May, high season in London, and unusually brilliant weather, the West End streets and squares thronged with carriages, and everywhere throughout that bright western world a delightful flutter and buzz of life and gayety, as if the children of that pleasant region had indeed in some manner secured an exemption from the cares and sorrows of meaner mortals, and were bent on making the most of their privileged existence.

A neatly appointed brougham waited before the door of a house in Half-Moon street, and had been waiting there for some time. It was Mrs. Walsingham's brougham, and the lady herself was slowly pacing to and fro her little drawing-room, pausing every now and then to look out of the window, and in a very unpleasant state of mind. She was elegantly dressed in her favorite toilet of Indian muslin and lace, and was looking very handsome, in spite of the cloud upon her smooth white brow, and a certain ominous glitter in her blue eyes.

"I suppose he is not coming," she muttered at last, tossing her white lace parasol upon the table with an angry gesture. "This will be the second disappointment in a week. But I shall not go to the concert without him. What do I care for their tiresome classical music, or to be stared at by a crowd of great ladies who don't choose to know me?"

She rang the bell violently, but before it could be answered there came a thundering double knock at the door below, and a minute afterward Gilbert Sinclair dashed into the room, bearing in his hand a beautiful bouquet of the rarest and most fragrant flowers.

"Late again, Gilbert," cried Mrs. Walsingham, reproachfully, her face brightening nevertheless at his coming; and she smiled at him with a pleased welcoming smile as they shook hands.

"Yes, I know it's late for that confounded concert. But I want you to let me off that infliction, Clara. That sort of thing is such a consummate bore to a man who doesn't know the difference between Balfe and Beethoven, and you know I have a heap of engagements on my hands."

"You have only come to cry off, then?" said Mrs. Walsingham, with a sudden contraction of her firmly molded lips.

"My dear Clara, what a fiend you look when you like! But I wouldn't cultivate that kind of expression if I were you. Of course, I'll go to the concert with you, if you are bent upon it, rather than run the risk of anything in the way of a scene. But you know very well that I don't care for music, and you ought to know——"

He stopped, hesitating, with a furtive look in his red-brown eyes, and a nervous action of one big hand about his thick brown mustache.

"I ought to know what, Mr. Sinclair?" asked Clara Walsingham, with a sudden hardness of voice and manner.

"That it is neither good for your reputation nor mine that we should be seen so often together at such places as this Portman Square concert. It is almost a private affair, you know, and everybody present will know all about us."

"Indeed! and since when has Mr. Gilbert Sinclair become so careful of his reputation—or of mine?"

"Since you set your friends talking about our being engaged to be married, Mrs. Walsingham. You have rather too many feminine acquaintances with long tongues. I don't like being congratulated, or chaffed—it comes to pretty much the same thing—upon an event which you know never can happen."

"Never is a long word, Gilbert. My husband may die, and leave me free to become your wife, if you should do me the honor to repeat the proposal which you made to me six years ago."

"I don't like waiting for dead men's shoes, Clara," answered Sinclair, in rather a sulky tone. "I made you that offer in all good faith, when I believed you to be a widow, and when I was madly in love with you. But six years is a long time, and——"

"And men are fickle," she said, taking up his unfinished sentence. "You have grown tired of me, Gilbert; is that what you mean?"

"Not exactly that, Clara, but rather tired of a position that keeps me a single man without a single man's liberty. You are quite as exacting as a wife, more jealous than a mistress, and I am getting to an age now at which a man begins to feel a kind of yearning for something more like a home than chambers in the Albany, some one more like a wife than a lady who requires one to be perpetually playing the cavaliere servente."

She stood for a minute looking at him, with a sudden intensity in her face. He kept his eyes on the ground during that sharp scrutiny, but he was fully conscious of it nevertheless.

"Gilbert Sinclair," she cried, after a long pause, "you are in love with some other woman; you are going to jilt me."

There was a suppressed agony in her tone which both surprised and alarmed the man to whom she spoke. Of late he had doubted the sincerity of her attachment to him, and had fostered that doubt, telling himself that it was his wealth she cared for.

"Would it grieve you very much if I were to marry, Clara?" he asked.

"Grieve me if you were to marry! It would be the end of my life. I would never forgive you. But you are playing with me. You are only trying to frighten me."

"You are frightening yourself," he answered. "I only put the question in a speculative way. Let us drop the subject. If you want to go to the concert——"

"I don't want to go; I am not fit to go anywhere. Will you ring that bell, please? I shall send the brougham back to the stable."

"Won't you drive in the park this fine afternoon?"

"No; I am fit for nothing now."

A maid-servant came in answer to the bell.

"You can take my bonnet, Jane," said Mrs. Walsingham, removing that floral structure, "and tell Johnson I shall not want the brougham to-day. You'll stop to dinner, won't you, Gilbert?" she went on when the maid had retired. "Mr. Wyatt is to be here, and Sophy Morton."

"How fond you are of the actor people. So Jim Wyatt is coming, is he? I rather want to see him. But I have other engagements this afternoon, and I really don't think I can stay."

"Oh, yes, you can, Gilbert. I shall think I had just grounds for my suspicion if you are so eager to run away."

"Very well, Clara, if you make a point of it, I will stop."

Mr. Sinclair threw himself into one of the low luxurious chairs with an air of resignation scarcely complimentary to his hostess.

The interval before dinner dragged wearily, in spite of Mrs. Walsingham's efforts to sustain a pleasant conversation about trifles.

The conversation dawdled on in a languid manner for a couple of hours, and then Mr. Sinclair went away to change his dress for the regulation dinner costume.

The smile which Mrs. Walsingham's face had worn while she talked to him faded the moment he had left her, and she began to pace the room with rapid steps and a darkly clouded brow.

"Yes, there is no dobut about it," she muttered to herself, with suppressed passion. "I have seen the change in him for the last twelve months. There is some one else. How should I lose him if it were not so? Heaven knows what pains I have taken to retain my hold upon him! There is some one else. He is afraid to tell me the truth. He is wise in that respect. Who can the woman be for whom I am forsaken? He knows so many people, and visits so much, and is everywhere courted and flattered on occount of his money. Oh, Gilbert, fool, fool! Will any woman ever love you as I have loved you, for your own sake, without a thought of your fortune, with a blind idolatry of your very faults? What is it that I love in him, I wonder? I know that he is not a good man. I have seen his heartlessness too oftrn of late not to know that he is hard and cruel and remorseless toward those who come between him and his iron will. But I, too, could be hard and remorseless if a great wrong were done me. Let him take care now he provokes a passionate, reckless nature like mine. Let him beware of playing with fire."

This was the gist of her thoughts during a gloomy reverie that lasted more than an hour. At the end of that time Miss Morton was announced, and came fluttering into the room, resplendent in a brilliant costume of rose-colored silk and black lace, followed shortly by James Wyatt, the lawyer, courteous and debonair, full of small-talk and fashionable scandal. Gilbert Sinclair was the last to enter.

The dinner was elegantly served in a pretty little dining-room, hung with pale green draperies and adorned with a few clever water-color pictures, a room in which there was a delightful air of coolness and repose.

Mr. Wyatt was invaluable in the task of sustaining the conversation, and Clara Walsingham seconded him admirably, though there was a sharp anguish at her heart that was now almost a habitual pain, an agony prophetic of a coming blow. Gilbert Sinclair was a little brighter than he had been in the afternoon, and contributed his share to the talk with a decent grace, only once or twice betraying absence of mind by a random answer and a wandering look in his big brown eyes.

James Wyatt and Mrs. Walsingham had been running through a catalogue of the changes of fortune, for good or evil, that had befallen their common acquaintances, when Gilbert broke in upon their talk suddenly with the question:

"What has become of that fellow who dined with us at Richmond last year? Sir Cyprian something."

"Sir Cyprian Davenant," said James Wyatt. "He is still in Africa."

"In Africa! Ah, yes, to be sure, I remember hearing that he was going to join Harcourt's expedition. I was not much impressed by him, though I had heard him talked about as something out of the common way. He had precious little to say for himself."

"You saw him at a disadvantage that day. He was out of spirits at leaving England."

"Very likely, but I had met him in society very often before. He's rather a handsome fellow, no doubt; but I certainly couldn't discover any special merit in him beyond his good looks. He's a near neighbor of the Clanyardes, by the way, when he's at home, is he not?"

"When he's at home, yes," answered the solicitor. "But I doubt if ever he'll go home again."

"You mean that he'll come by his death in Africa, I suppose?"

"I sincerely hope not, for Cyprian Davenant is one of my oldest friends. No; I mean that he's not very likely to see the inside of his ancestral halls any more. The place is to be sold this year."

"The baronet is quite cleared out, then?"

"He has about four hundred a year that he inherited from his mother, so tightly tied up that he has not been able to make way with it."

"What Clanyardes are those?" asked Mrs. Walsingham

"Viscount Clanyarde and his family. They have a place called Marchbrook, and a very poor place it is, within a mile or two of Davenant. The old viscount is as poor as Job."

"Indeed! But his younger daughter will make a great match, no doubt, and redeem the fortunes of the house. I saw her at the opera the other night. She was pointed out to me as the loveliest girl in London, and I really think she has a right to be called so. What do you think of her, Gilbert?"

She fixed her eyes upon Sinclair with a sudden scrutiny that took him off his guard. A dusky flush came over his face, and he hesitated awkwardly before replying to her very simple question.

Clara Walsingham's heart gave a great throb.

"That is the woman," she said to herself.

"Miss Clanyarde is very handsome," stammered Gilbert; "at least I believe that is the general opinion about her. She has been intimate with your friend Davenant ever since she was a child, hasn't she, Wyatt?" he asked, with an indifference of tone which one listener knew to be assumed.

"Yes, I have heard him say as much," the other answered with an air of reserve which implied the possession of more knowledge upon the point than he cared to impart.

"These acquaintances of the nursery are apt to end in something more than friendship," said Mrs. Walsingham. "Is there any engagement between Sir Cyprian and Miss Clanyarde?"

"Decidedly not."

Gilber Sinclair burst into a harsh laugh.

"Not very likely," he exclaimed. "I should like to see old Clanyarde's face if his daughter talked of marrying a gentlemanly pauper."

"That is the woman he loves," Mrs. Walsingham repeated to herself.

No more was said about Sir Cyprian or the Clanyardes. The conversation drifted into other channels, and the evening wore itself away more or less pleasantly, with the assistance of music by and by in the drawing-room, where there were a few agreeable droppers-in.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

WHAT A ROMANCE.

The Old Capital of a Proud Southern State Sold to an ex-Slave.

Alabama's old capital, the city of Cahaba, was sold the other day at auction for $550. In old days Cahaba held its head high. It had grand inaugural fetes. Great streets were laid out in the pine groves and large docks were erected. A Governor's mansion was built and a daily paper started. Fine dwellings shot up as in a night. Brick stores arose as if by magic. A metropolitan air sat upon the woodland capital. It vaunted itself proudly, and spoke in friendly and condescending interest of the decay of neighboring towns and villages.

The town-lot speculator fastened himself upon the community. He laid out the pine groves into lots and sold them at fancy prices. Eligible sites for building purposes were sold at thousands of dollars an acre. Cahaba began to look even upon Mobile as a suburb, and saw the day when it would be as large as New Orleans

Cahaba's glory lasted about ten years. In 1850 the capital was taken from the town and removed to Tuscaloosa and thence to Montgomery. The reason for this was the impure air about Cahaba. The capital was all Cahaba had to call it into prominence. It gone, the town went back gradually into the insignificance from which it so suddenly had been called. The brick stores became empty, the streets grew up in grass and forests, and the proud families moved away.

The death-knell was sounded last week. At the stroke of the Sheriff's hammer the town was knocked down to Henry Freeman, colored, an ex-slave, for $550 cash, in default of the payment of taxes. Henry got in his purchase seventy-two town lots, three brick stores, several cottages, and other property—fifty acres in all. What will he do with his purchase? He will plant cotton, corn, and rutabagas. He will train bean vines over the brick stores, or tear them down and use the brick to make barns and outhouses.

PEANUTS.

How They Are Grown and Made Ready for Market.

There were few peanuts grown in this country previous to the war. During that period they formed a considerable portion of the Confederate soldier's bill of fare, and when the war was over the Southern people were so impoverished that they turned their hand to the first thing that seemed available. Peanuts could be grown without great expense in preparation, and the first real crop of peanuts, in 1866, proved a great success. It is now estimated that 4,000,000 bushels are annually placed upon the market.

Peanuts grow upon a trailing vine with leaves much resembling small four-leaved clover. The small yellow flower it bears is shaped like the blossom of all the pea family. The soil in which it is cultivated must be light and sandy; after the flower falls away, the flower-stalk elongates and becomes rigid, curving in such a way as to push the forming pod well below the surface of the earth; if by any accident this is not done, the nut never matures.

They are planted in rows about three feet apart, and the vines spread until the ground is covered by them. Harvesting is done after the first frost, and the yield is often 100 bushels to the acre, making this a more profitable crop than wheat or cotton. The vines, with the nuts clinging to them, are torn up with pronged hoes, and allowed to dry in the sun for a day or two, and then stacked to cure. In about a fortnight the nuts are picked off, the empty ones, which are technically called "pops," being rejected. The picking is done by hand, and is slow work, as an expert laborer can pick only three bushels a day.

Easy When You Know How.

The secrets of snake-charming are much simpler than most people imagine. The snakes to be handled are gorged with food until they become drowsy, or else they are drugged so that their senses are dazed. Sometimes they are kept in ice-boxes, and the cold keeps them in a semi-torpid condition. In either case the snakes are only half alive. In handling the reptile the hand must always grasp it at certain places where the head can be guided and held from the body. This is the hardest thing to learn, but, like everything else, it comes with practice. In handling a reptile with the fangs in—which ought to be prohibited by law—one requires great strength, as the strain on the system during the performance is very great. The grasp and movements must be precise and accurate. There is no room for hesitancy or uncertainty.

Color and the Electric Light.

Some colors suffer by the electric light, notably yellow and pink. Heliotrope assumes a pinky hue, and many delicate gradations of shade are lost under the light of the modern illuminant. Pale blue also loses some of its glory, but green is vastly improved. Bright crimson looks well if artistically and effectively toned down, and some shades of primrose are especially beautiful. Wrinkles, it is said, are mercilessly shown up, and the complexion that is not of nature's making becomes flat and ghastly in the truthful light. For this reason the electric light is not popular with many people, but the knowing hostess secures all its beautiful effects and makes everlasting friends of her lady guests by covering every lamp with a shade of yellow silk. The result is magical

Paper Pulp.

One of the difficulties which have stood in the way of the substitution of paper pulp for wood in the manufacture of pencils has been the toughness of the paper covering, and its consequent resistance to the action of a knife, but, by a new process which has lately been introduced, the molecular cohesion of the paper is modified in such a manner that it can be cut as easily as cedar wood.

A COLORED man recently applied for a marriage license in a Louisville court, and when informed that it would cost $2, shook his head wistfully and muttered: "That'd buy a terrible lot of flour, boss."

IN Australia a 17-year-old giant measures 8 feet 3½ inches and weighs 300 pounds.

HOW BUTTONS ARE MADE.

Many Ways of Manufacturing These Useful Articles.

There are almost as many ways of making them as there are different kinds of buttons, says the Youth's Companion, and it would be impossible in an article of this kind to describe them all. The four-hole metal button, such as is used on the waistbands of trousers, is the kind most extensively sold and universally known. For that reason a description of their making may be more generally interesting. The metal used for these buttons is mostly the sides of old tomato and fruit cans, and the scraps of tin left from the manufacture of other articles. In some of the better grades brass is used, but in either case the process is the same.

After the tin has been flattened it is taken by girls, who run the sheets through punching-machines, which cut them up into circular pieces a little larger in diameter than the button is to be. At the same time the edges of these disks are turned up all around, somewhat the shape of a round tray. This blank, as it is called, forms the front of the button. Other girls, in the meanwhile, are cutting with similar dies small circular pieces from thin sheets of brown pasteboard, the kind known as strawboard. These, together with the metal blanks, are taken to another machine, where they are put into perpendicular tubes, which feed them automatically into holes in the top of a revolving steel plate, or table. These holes are arranged in a circle, so that as the plate turns they pass under the two feeding tubes and then under a punch.

As the holes pass under the first tube a metal disk is dropped into it with the rimmed side up; when the next tube is reached a pair of steel fingers takes one of the pasteboard disks and fits it into the metal one At the next turn of the table the punch descends into the hole and crimps the rim over the pasteboard so as to fasten the disks together At the same time another punch from below rises under the button, and at one operation punches the four thread holes, forms the hollow in the center, and presses whatever ornamental figuring there may be in the face of the button. After this they are dipped in black japan and baked in an oven to harden it. Finally girls inspect them, and after throwing out imperfect ones pack them in pasteboard boxes holding one gross each.

A little better grade of the same button is made with backs of metal instead of pasteboard; but the process of manufacture is the same in both and both kinds are used for the same purpose.

TIGE RETRIEVED THE BOME.

But in the Accomplishment of the Feat He Secured Self-obliteration.

"The hero of my story," he began, "and he was a hero of the first water, was an Arkansas farmer who sailed under the honorable name of Miller. Of course you all know that in Arkansas it is against the law of the commonwealth to use dynamite in the public waters. Well, to hurry through the statement of the case, a lot of us came to the conclusion that if we wanted to make a big haul of fish it would be necessary to use a little force. Accordingly dynamite bombs were secured, and we asked Miller to go up stream and throw the bombs in while we, his guests, would gather at a ford a few rods down and secure the floating fish. Miller, accompanied by a highly educated water spaniel, went up the bank and prepared for his attack upon the denizens of the water. He hurled one missile, fuse attached, into the stream. An instant later the dog was in the water, and in a moment he had the bomb in his mouth swimming for the shore.

"'Drap it, Tige!' shouted the farmer. 'Drap, I say!'

"But the dog would not obey. He swam wildly forward and in twenty seconds had landed. Miller started to run, the dog coming after him at a break-neck gait. Miller ran toward the fishermen below. They realized the situation in an instant, and levelling their guns warned the farmer to head in another direction. The situation, for all its seriousness, was the funniest that I ever saw. Miller ran wildly down the hill, yelling at the dog to go back.

"'Stop!' he yelled. 'Drap it, Tige! Go home!' But the dog only increased his efforts to reach his master's side.

"But the end soon came. The fuse burned its length, and then—Miller never recovered even the collar of poor Tige!"—St. Louis Republic.

THE sale of the Sierra Valley and Mohawk Railroad for $20,000 in satisfaction of lawyers' claims has resulted in some disappointment. Doubtless the lawyers for defending the road against the assaults of rapacity were entitled to pay. But their demands were only for $20,000. The sale results in the acquirement of $600 that somebody else must inevitably secure. And it would have been so easy and professional to have tacked this trifle onto the bill.

Not Evidence Enough.

In a Washington County town a little while ago the local champion liar was brought up before the justice for stealing hens. 'Twas a pretty plain case, and, by the advice of his lawyers, the prisoner said: "I plead guilty." This surprising answer in place of the string of lies expected, staggered the justice. He rubbed his head. "I guess—I'm afraid—well, Hiram," said he, after a thoughtful pause, "I guess I'll have to have more evidence before I sentence you."—Lewiston Journal.

Probate Cause No. 2010.

State of Indiana, DeKalb County, } ss: In the DeKalb Circuit Court, May Term, 1894.

John C. Dick, Ellen Dick, Martha J. Coy and George Coy, you and each of you are hereby notified that Jacob Walborn as administrator of the estate of Christopher Dick deceased, has filed in the Circuit Court of DeKalb county, Indiana, a petition making you defendants thereto, and praying therein for an order and decree of said court for partition and authorizing the sale of certain real estate belonging to the estate of said decedent, and in said petition described, to make assets for the payment of the debts and liabilities of said estate; and that said petition, so filed and which is now pending, is set for hearing in said Circuit Court at the court house in Auburn, Indiana, on the 6th day of June, 1894.

Witness, the clerk and seal of said court, this 7th day of April, 1894.

DANIEL D. MOODY, Clerk DeKalb Circuit Court. By Blanche Shilling, Deputy.

E. D. Hartman, Attorney.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, in a cause wherein Albert Robbins, John C. Henry and Nicholas Ensley are plaintiffs and Joseph E. Ensley, Granville H. Forkner, George W. Gordon, Louisa M. Ensley, George Lansing, Isaac Hague and James Draggoo are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of two thousand five hundred and fifty-six dollars and fourty one cents, with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder on between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m., and 4 o'clock p. m. of said day, at the door of the court house of DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years of the following real estate, to wit:

The undivided one half (½) of the southeast quarter of section twenty-one (21) in township thirty-three (33) north of range twelve (12) east. Also all that part of the southwest quarter of section thirty-two (32) in township thirty-four (34) north of range thirteen (13) east, lying south of Spangler's recorded plat of out lots to the town of Auburn said county, and the south boundary line of the Fort Wayne Detroit, Kel River & Illinois railroad, and bounded on the west by the center line of the public highway leading from Auburn to Ft. Wayne, Indiana, on the south by a line seventeen and sixty-two hundredth (17.62) chains north of the south line of said section and on the east by the east line of said southwest quarter, excepting from the last above described tract, the following tracts to-wit: first, that part included in Ensley's third addition to said town of Auburn, second, about one and one-half acres adjoining said addition on the north, part of which is now owned by Isabelle Grosh and the other part being the parcel belonging to the owners of the grist mill thereon situate as appurtenant thereto; third, one acre owned by Auburn Foundry and Machine Works; fourth, about one-fifth of an acre conveyed by George Ensley, deceased, to Eliza A. Case, in December, 1878, and fifth, about three and fifty-seven hundredth (3.57) acres conveyed by said deceased to Oscar Gandy and Addison B. Nickey now owned by Addison B. Nickey and Samuel M. Nickey, all in DeKalb county state of Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place, expose at public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws

Heavy storms did much damage on the Atlantic coast last week.

Senator Vance, of North Carolina, died at his residence in Washington Saturday of a stroke of apoplexy.

W. H. Shambaugh was last week nominated for mayor of Ft. Wayne by the democrats. He used to teach school in DeKalb county.

Thieves broke into a minister's house at Ft. Wayne last week and stole his bible. If this recklessness goes on, even editors will have to lock their doors.

Fire at Hiladale last Thursday morning nearly destroyed the plant of the "Telephone-News." They got the paper out however, by the help of the "Standard" office.

Manchester, England is now a seaport town. The big ship canal is finished, going down the river Irwell to the Mersey, and to the sea. Length 35½ miles; cost 75 millions.

The production of gold in the United States for the past year exceeds 35 millions, an increase over the previous year of 1½ millions. Shall we lay this increase to a democratic administration?

The Butler Record is again bewailing the extremely low wages paid in Italy. But it forgets to state that Italy is a "high protection" country, and that "free trade England" pays much higher wages.

The Lagrange Standard says that in 1852, the whig and democratic candidates for president, had an equal number of votes in that county. The democrats had 39 the most votes, in Steuben county that year.

When a republican tells you the McKinly law should not be repealed, call his attention the fact that under that law the receipt of revenue have fallen off about 70 millions a year, compelling government to issue bonds to get money.

Gold is being shipped to England again. It has to go in order to buy goods. Our laws should be so changed that we could send our farm products and manufactured goods abroad to pay for what we buy, instead of sending gold.

McKinley law is a flat failure, for while the cost of many imported things, and of things not imported, is kept up as high as possible, it prevents money from going into the U. S. treasury, and compels us to borrow money to pay needed expenses.

Breckenridge was assessed $15,000 damages for breach of promise with Miss Pollard, Saturday. It has been a nasty case and the public will be glad it is ended. But the gray haired old sinner has no money, and it looks like a barren victory for the frail woman.

American Grape Sugar Works, the largest in the world, and located at Buffalo, N. Y., were destroyed by fire last week. They made "glucose" from corn, and from this they made grape sugar, fine syrups, etc. Much of our finest syrup for table use is made in this way.

Chairman Shuman has issued a call, or rather a request, for all the democratic committeemen to meet with him at Waterloo, in the forenoon of May 2, the same day that the judicial convention is held there, as he wishes a consultation on important matters. We hope every committeeman will try to be present, as there is nothing more valuable than this preliminary work. Read the call.

David B. Hill, senator from New York, followed by his man, senator Murphy from the same state, occupies purely republican ground on the tariff. They will do all they can to prevent a reform tariff bill from passing. The western democrats who have favored Hill for president should make a note of this. Hill may want the nomination in 1896. He will need to turn over a new leaf if he gets any democratic support.

All the papers in this county have complimentary notices of Hon. E. D. Hartman as a candidate for judge. We believe Mr. Hartman would be a good officer. The republicans of DeKalb have delegate votes enough to nominate any man they agree on and they have in the destrict votes enough to elect him, if they have a good candidate. If they don't have a good candidate, of course the democrats stand ready to furnish a good one.

David B. Hill.

It is of interest just now to notice the universal condemnation that western democrats bestow on Senator Hill, of New York. The following is from the Ligonier Banner, that has generally been very friendly to Hill:

The speech of David B. Hill last Monday was a surprise to many of his political admirers in Indiana, a disagreeable one at that. It begins to look as if he had about cut loose from his democratic mooring and was drifting away from the party. * * * The stand that Senator Hill has taken toward the income tax feature of the tariff bill will most effectually kill him as a presidential possibility. His friends can now repair the damage he has done his cause.

Can Compete With the World.

We have often said that American manufacturers need no "protection" against the "pauper labor" of the old world. Facts keep coming to the surface to prove the truth of this. The Laporte Argus, in a recent article, criticized the position taken by the Studebakers, of South Bend, against some points in the new tariff bill. Following this article up, the Argus publishers a letter from Amos R Rodgers of New Carlisle, which is in the same county with South Bend, Mr. Rogers says, the Studebakers can and do sell, their wagons etc, all over the world, in spite of foreign cheap, pauper labor, and that they did this several years ago. In proof of this, he makes the following statement:

In 1885 I was assisting Dr. D. P. Robbins in compiling an industrial history of South Bend. In the progress of my work it became my duty to write up the Studebaker interests. Among the matters to be given special prominence in their article was the fact that the Studebaker Co. was then engaged on an extensive contract made with the French government, to supply the French army with wagons, and, if I remember aright, with ambulances also.

The question might be appropriately asked in this connection also: "Why did not the French government employ the pauper labor of its own land, or of some contiguous district, to build wagons for its army, instead of placing its order with a firm located far toward the center of the American continent, from which it is separated by three thousand miles of stormy ocean?"

There is no part of the civilized world in which the Studebaker wagons are not profitably sold.

Amos R. Rodgers.

Indiana Compared with Sister States.

Indiana with her $2,095,176,626 of property stands tenth in the family of states. New York stands at the head of the list with $8,577,901,991. Then follows Pennsylvania with nearly $6,200,000,000, Illinois with $5,000,000,000 and Ohio with very nearly $4,000,000,000. Her remaining rivals are Massachusetts with $5,800,000,000, California with $2,533,000,000, Missouri with $2,397,000,000, Iowa with $2,287,000,000, Texas with $2,105,576,766, and Michigan presses Indiana closely, as she is worth $2,095,016,272.

It is a striking fact that in the amount of gold and silver coin and bullion, Indiana surpasses California, the El Dorado, by about $3,000,000, from which it may be inferred that the old coffee pot and the rural sock are still popular in the Hoosier state. In the value of real estate and improvements Indiana stands eighth, being exceeded only by New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Massachusetts, Ohio, California and Missouri.

The growth of the wealth of the state is best shown by the fact that in 1850 the total valuation of real estate and personal property was $302,650,263; in 1860, $528,836,371; in 1870, $1,268,180,543; in 1880, $1,681,000,000; in 1890, $2,006,176,626. The per capita valuation rose from $205 in 1850 to $956 in 1890.—ex.

Prohibition County Convention

The prohibitionists of DeKalb county will meet in convention at the Court House in Auburn, Indiana, April 28, at 10 a. m. A full ticket will be nominated. All who are in favor of the destruction of the liquor traffic are cordially invited o attend.

CITY CANDIDATES.

Last week we had only time to give the names of the men chosen. The candidate nominated for trustee of the first ward was Ira Brandon, the present incumbent. He has made a good officer and done what he believed his duty, without fear or favor, and he was generally right.

T. F. Baird, for trustee in the fourth ward, was elected to that place two years ago, but on moving to Corunna, resigned, and C. A. Picker was chosen in his place and served out his unexpired term. Mr. Baird was a faithful member as long as he served, and will serve the people well if elected.

In the third ward, Dr. D. N. Fitch is the nominee. He is known to every voter in the town, and is an able and successful man in his line of work. We believe he will be a thorough-going public servant.

Charles H. G. Jones, the nominee for treasurer, has served in that place with remarkable ability for three years already. He has been careful and painstaking, and kept the city's money in such good shape that it could be got at to a penny at a minute's warning.

The candidate for clerk, Milo Husselman, is a young man of ability and business experience. He was book keeper for several years for the Church Furniture Co., and saved the company's books when the factory burned. He will make a good officer

Alvin Baker, the present marshal, is a candidate for re election, and is an able and painstaking man. He has earned a re-election by an increased majority.

Maccabeeism in Auburn

Miss Laura M. Conrad, the lady deputy of the Ladies of the Maccabees, organized a hive of twenty-five members in the hall of the K. O. T. M. last Friday evening, April 13. She was here only a week with authority to issue the charter with as few as sixteen members, but she met with such kindly support from the friends of Maccabeeism in Auburn that she was enabled to make the number of charter members twenty-five. After the usual ceremonies attending the installation of officers, the sir knights expressed their appreciation of the ladies' enterprise by serving them with refreshments of ice cream, cake and candy. It was a most enjoyable occasion. After a few short speeches and a general good time of friendly chats all retired to their homes feeling that Maccabee prosperity has just begun.

Republican City Caucus.

They had their caucus Tuesday evening at the court room. J. E. Rose was made chairman and W. B. Campbell, secretary. There were six candidates for marshal, and the first vote stood: Byron Rainier, 35; Bolton, 44; Frank Joliff, 41; James McDowell, 20; Dietrick, 8; Zeke Jones, 2. The second ballot, McDowell having withdrawn, showed, Rainier, 40; Bolton, 77; Joliff 32; total 149, and Bolton got it.

Geo. Clark for clerk, Bert Robbins for treasurer and D. S. Ober for trustee of the first ward, went on by acclamation. For trustee of the third ward, G. A. Bishop got 89 votes and Reuben Lockwood 31. In the fourth ward Isaac Hague got 81 votes and Samuel Culver, 21. After appointing three committeemen the meeting adjourned. Bolton is a comparative stranger, half of the voters not seeming to know him, but is said to be a good man. The others are good average citizens, but no better in any way, as far as we know, than the men on the democratic ticket. They will make no better officers and there is no reason in the world why a democrat should forsake his own ticket to vote for them.

Common School Examinations.

There were 157 applicants in the examination for Common School Diplomas; 26 from the towns and 121 from the country schools. Of the country pupils 35 reached the required grade, giving graduates to all the townships but one. 16 of the town pupils reached the grade. There will be another examination again Saturday and no doubt many more will be added to the list. There were also 51 applicants for teacher's license the last examination, making in all 208 sets of papers to be graded this month. Teachers should be patient if the reports of these examinations are a little late this month. Mr. Merica is working at them almost day and night.

AUBURN WHEELMEN.

At a meeting of the wheelmen at Auburn Cyclery Monday night, an organization was formed, to be known as the Auburn Wheelmen. R. W. Cobb was elected captain of the club, Ralph W. Moody assistant. The members are required to wear bicycle uniform and the club emblem on all club runs, to respond to calls for runs, obey orders promptly and take a personal interest in presenting and maintaining an orderly appearance at all times. Its objects are to promote road riding upon bicycles and to aid the L. A. W. in advancing the general interests of cycling and in securing the improvement in the condition of public roads and highways. New members are admitted by a two-thirds vote.

A Sensation in the Carpet Market.

Usually we buy our spring stock of carpets in January. This year we did not. We have made a good deal of money by waiting. We intend doing one very extraordinary thing this spring. We have contracted with Alex. Smith & Sons, for four hundred pieces of their highest grade Gobelin, Axminster and Moquettes, unquestionably the handsomest three carpet fabrics in the world. We shall offer these highest grade Moquettes, which we have purchased at a terrible sacrifice, for the heretofore unheard of figure of $1 per yard. These goods sold a few months ago at $1 50 per yard and were cheap at that. They have always brought about 40 cents a yard more than bodies or standard velvet carpets. Our price will make them less than either bodies or velvets. During the past year there were a good many old style Moquettes sold through the auction rooms that have been offered at retail at $1.10 to $1 25, but they were colors and patterns which nobody wanted. These goods of ours are the very choicest designs for the spring of 1894, and are not even yet all manufactured, but are being made expressly for us. We want you to put off purchasing any fine carpets until these moquettes are received. They ought to reach us within a week. Notice will be given of their arrival.

The workmen engaged in tearing down the old jail at Rochester have found several relics secreted in the cracks of the walls. In one of the cells an old pocketbook was found, which contained a number of receipts and papers bearing dates away back in the fifties and signed by one John Alexander. Above one of the windows was found one old fashioned large copper cent, which showed the date 1852.

The advertising agency of N. W. Ayer & Son, of Philadelphia, is unquestionably the largest and probably the best equipped of any in the United States. It has more and larger patrons than any other, and, taking one thing with another, it is questionable whether they are not entitled to the credit of securing for their patrons better service than can be counted on from any other. It should be and doubtless is, a great source of pride and satisfaction to Mr. Ayer and Mr. McKinney that they have been able, while remaing in Philadelphia, to build up a larger advertising business than has ever been secured before by any advertising agency in New York or elsewhere.

Ed. Baker and Mr. Bauer, have formed a partnership in the bakery and lunch business at the old stand on West eighth street, where they will always be found ready to wait on their customers, for good bread, pies, cakes, etc, as well as to serve up good lunches at a moderate cost. They will also, put in a full line of bread and baked goods into the Hebel store, in the corner window. Call on Baker & Bauer for good bread, cakes, pies, and good lunch.

Mr. Kiblinger and family are now at Thomasville, Georgia, near the Florida line and about forty miles from the gulf. A letter just received from Dr. Nusbaum who is with him, says he is improving and the outlook for his recovery is encouraging. The weather is so mild and the climate so agreeable that the Doctor hopes much from this favorable condition of the weather. The season there now is about like June here and the surroundings so delightful. The Doctor sends word to his patrons here that he will return home at as early a date as possible to attend to his practice here. Mr. Kiblinger has been so earnest in his desire to have the Doctor remain for a time till he is decidedly improved, that he felt it a duty to stay awhile rather than have a physician take charge who does not fully understand Mr. Kiblinger's condition.

The Y. P. S. C. E. Concert.

It was one of the finest ever given here, and we are proud to say, was well patronized. We published the program in full last week, and every piece named was given as well as one or two extra. The piano music was fine and the singing both of solos and choruses, was of a high order. Dr. Buchtel rendered a sweet violin solo to Mrs. Garwood's accompaniment on the piano, and the audience tried hard to "call them back," but they failed to respond. When the "Three Bumble Bees" was sung by Coates, Widney, Rafter and Scott, they were called back and gave a very entertaining piece. Helen Ralston's whistling solo was sweet, of course, and the audience was charmed by it. "Our choir," which in fact was the real Presbyterian Choir. Miss Teeters, Mrs. Yesbera, Mr. Scott and Mr. Widney, was a new feature, and carried the house into ecstasies. It was in point of dress, and way of singing and playing, a revival of the way they did many years ago. The "Sunflower Chorus" was a great treat. There was a curtain in which singing sunflowers—girls—showed the head only through an aperture, which was itself the center of a sunflower. It was done in the order and style of "ten little Indians," the heads showing or disappearing, as the numbers changed. It was very entertaing. The two recitations, Lila Baker and Mae Rose, were excellent and ably given. These young ladies are talented in that line. Altogether the entertainment was grand, and reflected great credit on the Christain Endeavor, and their able helpers, the Auburn Musical Club. Long may both wave. The receipts were something over $30 clear of expenses.

Take Notice.

Having secured the corner window in Hebel Bros.' store, I wish to say to the public generally that on and after the first of May, we will put in a full line of baked goods fresh every day, such as are kept in a first-class bakery. Fine cakes of any kind, for weddings and parties, made to order on short notice and at reasonable prices. Don't forget the old stand for a good lunch.

ED. BAKER & BAUER, Props.

IT has come to be a proverb among the apartment houses that it is a wise tenant who knows his own coal-bin.

BARRING the implied dissent of train robbers themselves, the sentiment in favor of hanging the bandits is unanimous. But this dissent is potent, and shows how the majority is sometimes at the mercy of a truculent minority.

A FRENCH aeronaut has just fallen 1,500 feet. It would not have been so bad if he had not made several feet of the distance after striking the surface of the earth. It is an awful bore to be compelled to excavate the finish of a balloon ascension.

INSTEAD of the time-honored "dearly beloved," or "brethren," in which the pulpit has always addressed the congregation, the famous Canon Body has introduced an innovation in one of the "highest" of English churches. He speaks to his hearers with the simple word "gentlemen." The change is exciting discussion and free comment.

THREE expositions are to be held in Europe in 1894, more or less international in their character. At Lyons will be held a great show of silks, velvets, ribbons, etc., and all the varied and beautiful products of the silkworm and loom. At Madrid will be held an exhibition of Spanish arts and industries. At Antwerp, in Belgium, however, will be held the only really international exhibition of the year.

A CURIOUS defect in French law was brought to light in the suit of the ex-King of Naples against his brother, Count de Bari, and Richard, the recognized son of the latter. The question was, whose son is Richard? It might have been thought that Richard's mother would be a useful witness. But, as the affair is a civil one, Richard's mother cannot be questioned; for in French law a woman is considered incapable of answering a civil question.

AN unexpected danger lurks in the trolley wire, if the blinding of a young man in Brooklyn really resulted from an electric flash when a car was passing. If a current of electricity strong enough to inflict such injury can be projected a considerable distance through the air, it is important that the public should know it. The danger from lightning at various distances from the point of impact is well known. It is remarkable, however, if the current of a trolley wire is capable of such dangerous projection.

THE Czar has issued a ukase barring out the American tontine system of life insurance from all the Russias. There is a simple directness about the Czar's methods of ridding himself of this nuisance that must command admiration. It will certainly awaken burning envy in the minds of hundreds of American business men who would fain bar out from their offices the tontine and all other methods and the agents thereof. But unfortunately the American citizen isn't a czar; he can't issue a ukase; nobody would pay any attention to it if he did. And if he kicks the exploiter of tontine or other systems of life insurance down the stairs he will be fined for assault by an unsympathetic court.

AMONG the passengers landed in Philadelphia the other day from a Belgian steamship was a French peasant woman with thirteen children. She told the immigration officials that twelve others had died in France. When the woman applied for tickets to the West it was discovered that as the result of a miscount she had only enough money to pay the fare of twelve children. A message was sent to the husband in a Western State, and the money with which to procure the additional ticket was soon at hand. Then this brave woman, the mother of twenty-five children, with thirteen of them under her wing, set out to meet her plucky husband and begin life anew in the "Great Republic."

KAISER WILHELM was determined to have peace this year, but it will strike the critical observer that he is paying a long price for it. The new commercial treaty with Russia gives the latter country immense trade advantages, for which she offers but meager returns. Germany fought one of the most sanguinary and exhausting wars of the century—that of 1870-71—to gain advantages in trade similar to those which Russia is now securing without firing a shot or losing a man. The Kaiser will find himself severely criticised, a year or two hence, for paying so heavily for peace—unless in the meantime the great European war has come, and Germany has been victorious in it.

THE Jones County calf case in Iowa bids fair to have a parallel in Missouri. John Carroll and Thomas Hancock, of Mercer County, in that State, are at law over one Berkshire hog, valued at $7. The case has already been through three courts at an expense of $800, but the litigants are only getting their second wind. They are now girding up their loins for the final struggle in the Supreme Court. By the time the case is decided, two or three generations of lawyers will have made a good thing of it, and the descendants of Carroll and Hancock will probably be in the poorhouse. As for the hog, he has been killed and eaten long ago.

BOSTON must be confounding in phantom fashion a Mrs. Jane G. Austin, announced in extended obituary from the Hub as "the novelist," with Jane G. Austen, truly the novelist, who has been dead more years than the Bostonian decedent lived. Mrs. Austin, whose most famous work is declared by fresh eulogy to be "A Nameless Nobleman," has no relationship etymological, consanguineous, or literary with the Miss Austen whose works made even Macaulay regret that she should have died so young. The author of novels as free from blot as hers might well be astonished at the species of novel which prevails to-day. The Botonian novelist wrote neither well enough nor ill enough to be known for praise or blame beyond the shadow of Bunker Hill.

THERE is no weapon so effective in political warfare as ridicule, and there is no man so susceptible to ridicule as the professional joker. Both these truisms have received redemonstration in the defeat of John Kendrick Bangs, humorist by trade and politician for recreation, for the Mayoralty of the city of Yonkers. Mr. Bangs ran on the Democratic ticket in a Democratic stronghold. No allegations of bad character, inability, or unfitness for the duties of the office were made against him, and yet he, humorist, litterateur, bon vivant, and man-about-town, met defeat by about 200 plenteous ballots at the hands of a plain, ordinary Republican politician of the name of Peene. It was a most peculiar campaign. It was not fought upon any of the established lines usually governing the conduct of municipal contests. Nor personalities nor politics entered into it to any great degree. All Bangs' opposition did was to secure numerous copies of the current number of the publication in which he is wont to print his humorous lucubrations, mark the most dismal of them, and send a copy of the magazine with an explanatory note to each voter in the bailiwick. And the wielders of suffrage saw the joke. It was a better joke than any of Bangs' making. It was a joke even the dullest intellect could comprehend in all its fullness and beauty. And the honest, joke-loving electors of Yonkers arose and went to the polls and snowed under Bangs the humorist in a way which should prove an everlasting warning to all other fabricators of mild quips and innocuous jests and diluted satires. The humor of Yonkers proved itself a superior article to the humor of Bangs. And the truisms quoted were again indorsed.

A VERITABLE craze raged in England, last year, against the substantial, heavy build of which Englishmen were formerly so proud. Edmund Yates and Labouchere, both of whom are quite shapeless and utterly guiltless of the lines of beauty, have been abusing the anti-fat people vehemently in public and private, but the anti-fat crusade goes on with unabated vigor. According to Yates and Labouchere, one-half the people of the upper circles have given up trying to get thin. About two-thirds of them have succeeded. One duke—whose name is not given, and who is probably the Duke of Portland—has taken seventeen inches off his waist measure by living on beefsteak, dry toast, and prunes. He has not varied from this diet in six months, and he now has a beautifully small waist. But he is not beautiful. Like a number of other fat people who have reduced themselves, it is found that the skin, which had been stretched by abundant avoirdupois, refuses to contract after the fat has been melted away, and the duke's face is a mass of wrinkles. So are the shoulders of a famous duchess and the cheeks of a once beautiful countess, who was once plump, and rosy, and pleasant to look upon. Now she is slightly stoop-shouldered, emaciated, and poetical; but she does not please the anti-fat reformers in any way. An essayist, who has taken up this weighty subject in the London Times, attributes all the hubbub over it to Du Maurier, of Punch. All of his men are built as though they stood six feet four in height, with a chest measure of fifty-two inches, and a waist measure of about eighteen inches. It is the ghastly struggle of the English race to live up to the Du Maurier standard that is causing all the trouble.

He Could Stand It.

A church organization in Maine intending to give a performance of some oratorio were a little alarmed about the cost of the thing. Accordingly the director of the chorus suggested to the leader of the orchestra that had been engaged:

"We've got to keep our expenses down, and I thought we might get you to leave out the trombones. You know they have only four measures in the entire oratorio, and if you leave them out we can save at least $25, and no one be the wiser."

The leader of the orchestra assumed a tragic attitude and answered: "That would be an insult to the composer."

Thereupon the chorus director observed: "Oh, never mind him; he's dead."

SEVERAL foreign governments are urging their people not to immigrate to America. Residents of the United States are prone to find fault with the management of affairs abroad, but in this instance the only comment heard resembles a rather emphatic "amen." There seem to be already here as many poverty-stricken aliens as can starve to death comfortably.

WEALTH GOES TO FEW

ANOTHER REPUBLICAN FRAUD EXPOSED.

Our Per Capita Wealth Increased 70 Per Cent. from 1850 to 1860, but Has Not Increased 1 Per Cent. Since—Concerning "True Valuations."

Juggling with Census Statistics.

Mr. T. E. Wilson, the "tariff mule" of the New York World, has exposed another great fraud which the New York Tribune and other Republican newspapers are attempting to perpetrate upon the American people. Commenting upon the recently published census statistics of wealth the New York Tribune says that Mr. J. K. Upton, special agent in charge of these inquiries, places the "true valuation" of all tangible property in the United States, in 1890, at $65,037,091,197. While discussing "true valuations" the Tribune says:

"During four prior decades the valuations shown by Census Office statistics were as follows: In 1850, $7,250,000,000; 1860, $16,250,000,000; 1870, $30,000,000,000; 1880, $43,000,000,000. The per capita true valuation wealth of the country at these different census periods is placed at $308 in 1850, at $514 in 1860, at $780 in 1870, at $870 in 1880, and at $1,039 in 1890."

Of course the Tribune loses no time in crediting all of this gain in wealth, since 1860, to protection. Probably its logic is convincing to three-fourths of its narrow-minded, mole-eyed readers. But the Tribune is juggling with statistics. It is comparing figures which represent different things—one set representing the true value of all property and the other the true value of taxable property only. Mr. Wilson says, in the World:

The wealth of the country is divided into taxed and untaxed—one-half escaping taxation. The total taxed property is assessed at 75 per cent. of its value (average in forty-four States), so that the assessed value of the whole United States is the decimal .3873 of the actual or true wealth. This was discovered in 1870 by Francis A. Walker, proved correct by Robert P. Porter in 1880, and accepted by him in 1890.

The third actual and first successful attempt to make an estimate of our national wealth was in 1850. The marshals in that year were instructed to report the assessed and actual value of taxed property only. They reported the actual value of taxed property as $7,135,780,228, and this was given in the census of 1850 as our "wealth." We know now that it was but 51 per cent. of it—but that does not matter so long as we compare similar figures. The assessed value in 1850 was $5,287,613,148, but these figures were not published, and are still in the archives, although the assessment for 1851 appears in the compendium.

In 1860 the marshals were instructed, as in 1850, and both returns are published in the 1860 census. Their totals were $12,084,560,005 as the assessed value of taxed property and $16,159,616,068 as the actual value of the taxed property, this latter being about one-half our wealth and the assessment being 74 per cent.

In 1870, Francis B. Walker saw that the wealth of the country could not be properly measured by the value of the taxed property. Inquiry showed him that about one-half escaped taxation, and his estimate was that the assessed value was .3780 of the true wealth. The assessed value of taxed property for 1870 was $14,178,986,932 in currency, or $11,342,789,366 in gold. It was actually less (on a gold basis) than in 1860. The civil war had naturally cost more than the increase in wealth would have been. But he estimated that the true wealth in 1870 was $30,068,518,507. This was the first estimate of wealth ever made that included both taxed and untaxed property, and if the estimate was correct, or near correct, then the true wealth in 1860 was $31,201,916,676, or $993 per capita in 1850, against $780 in 1870.

In 1880 Robert P. Porter followed Mr. Walker's lines, and, after very thorough investigation, found that the correct decimal relation of assessment to actual wealth was .3873, the slight variation in 1870 being caused by the mixture of gold and paper valuations. The assessed value of taxed property in 1880 was $16,902,993,543, which was .3873 of $43,642,000,000, the true wealth, or $870 per capita.

In 1890 Mr. Porter reports the assessed value of taxed property at $24,249,589,804—just double what it was in 1860. He estimates the actual wealth of the country at $62,610,000,000, of which the assessment is .3873.

Now note the protection swindle. In 1850 and 1860 the census under the head of "True Valuation" collected the figures for taxed property only. In 1880 and 1890 the census puts in this column, under this head, the figures for both taxed and untaxed property, adding them together. There was no intent to deceive the elect, for it is plainly stated and the reader fully understands that the figures for 1880 and 1890 comprise both kinds of wealth, while the figures for 1850 and 1860 are for but one kind of wealth—only 51 per cent. of that included in the later returns. The swindle lies in the way these figures are used and compared by the protectionists to gull the simple-minded and credulous Republican voters of the country—particularly by the New York Tribune.

Here is a table which it is worth while studying carefully, for these figures are from the census and unimpeachable:

Year.	Assessed value.	Population.	Per cap.
1860	$12,084,560,005	31,443,321	$385
1890	24,249,589,804	62,622,250	387

There had been no increase in the per capita value of taxed property as assessed. But the assessed property, as has been proven by Mr. Walker and Mr. Porter, is but .3873 of the true wealth. Let us see what the true wealth should have been in 1860 and 1890:

Year.	Assessed value.	Dec. of.	True wealth.	Per cap.
1860	$12,084,560,005	.3873	$31,201,916,676	$993
1890	24,249,589,804	.3873	62,610,000,000	999

There had been no increase in the true wealth per capita upon an honest comparison of similar figures. The "true wealth," as given in the census for 1890, includes both taxed and untaxed property, while in 1860 the census only gives the true values for taxed property. Now let us take the basis of 1860 and deal with taxed property only:

Year.	Assessed value.	Per cent. of.	True value.	Per capita.
1890	24,249,589,804	.75	32,352,786,404	516

In the thirty years of protection since 1860 there had been no increase in our per capita wealth, and Robert P. Porter, an able statistician and economic investigator, but an utterly unscrupulous protection advocate, was placed in charge of the census of 1890 to so manipulate the wealth figures that the Tribune and other organs of the thieves could fool the people while apparently appealing to the census for their facts.

In census bulletin 104 Mr. Porter makes a report which is absurd on its face. He gives this table as our wealth at decades:

Year.	Assessed value.	True value.	Per capita.
1860	$12,084,560,005	$16,159,616,068	$514
1870	14,178,986,732	30,068,518,507	780
1880	16,902,993,543	43,642,000,000	870
1890	24,249,589,804	62,610,000,000	996

That this table is fraudulent, that these figures do not relate to the same things, is shown in the first two lines. The census of 1870 expressly says, and Mr. Porter in 1880 repeated the warning, that the assessed valuation for 1870 is reported in depreciated greenbacks; that the average inflation is 35 per cent.; that the true figures in gold are $11,342,789,366. Now compare these two lines in gold values:

Year.	Assessed value.	Per cent. of.	True value.	Per capita.
1870	11,342,789,366	.37	30,068,518,507	780

How can anyone with sense be asked to believe that our wealth doubled in the civil war decade, when the assessed value of taxable property actually declined? These two lines explain the fraud. Mr. Porter takes the "true valuation of taxed property only," in 1860, because we had nothing else then to compare with the "true valuation of all property, both taxed and untaxed," in the three subsequent lines; and he does this deliberately, because he did not dare compare taxed property with taxed property, or true wealth with true wealth, for that would then show an enormous loss in our national wealth in 1860.

And now that the reader may have before him a clear idea of our exact wealth at different decades I append first the correct tables of taxed property:

Year.	True value.	Taxed for taxation.	Ratio of
1850	*7,135,780,228	$5,287,613,148	.740
1860	*16,159,616,068	*12,084,560,005	*.741
1870	15,183,719,154	†11,342,789,366	.750
1880	21,125,241,928	*16,902,993,543	*.780
1890	32,352,786,404	*24,249,589,804	.750

*Census figures. †Gold basis census estimate.

Now, let us compare the correct tables of true wealth, which combine the taxed and untaxed, in accordance with the lately discovered measuring rods of Mr. Walker and Mr. Porter:

Year.	True wealth.	Ass. ratio.	Taxed for
1850	$13,658,000,000	.3873	$5,287,613,148
1860	31,202,000,000	.3873	*12,084,560,005
1870	*30,068,000,000	*.3780	†11,342,789,366
1880	*43,642,000,000	*.3873	*16,902,993,543
1890	*62,610,000,000	*.3873	*24,249,589,804

*Census figures. †Gold basis census figures.

And now let us compare the per capita wealth at the five decades:

	1850.	1860.	1870.	1880.	1890.
As assessed	$229	*$385	*$236	*$338	*$387
Taxed only	*308	*514	392	421	516
Untaxed	283	479	388	349	*483
All wealth	591	993	*780	*870	*999

*Census figures.

These are the true tables of the census, showing correct comparison. Where figures are lacking in the census for proper comparison they are restored by the proper census ratios, and marked. They show that not only the assessed value of taxed property, but the actual value of taxed property, as well as the true wealth and per capita wealth, decreased during the civil war decade. The defenders of the protection thieves wish the Republican voter to believe that while the assessed wealth of the country declined between 1860 and 1870 from $385 to $295—a loss of $90 per head—there was an actual increase in the per capita wealth from $514 to $780, while the total wealth nearly doubled. The Tribune will assert that this is true—that instead of a loss of $90 per head of assessed wealth, showing a loss of $213 in actual wealth, it naturally shows an increase of $266. And nine out of every ten of its readers will believe it to be true. They will see nothing illogical in it, nor in the Tribune substituting currency values for gold values.

Based upon these and other census statistics, Mr. Wilson stated in the World that there has been no increase practically in the wealth in thirty years, although in the ten years between 1850 and 1860 the per capita wealth nearly doubled, rising from $591 to $993, of which only $21 was from the discovery of gold.

In 1860 the wealth of this country was very evenly distributed; there were no multi-millionaires, very few millionaires, few large fortunes. No special wealth statistics were collected, but the census of 1860 shows half the wealth in possession of half the people. There were no bonanza farms and no tenant farmers. One-half the male workers were on farms they owned, and the average land value of each farm was $3,251, while few went much over or under. Poverty was confined to the cities, and to small sections of them. It is perfectly safe to assert that 91 per cent. of the people held in fair and even measure 91 per cent. of the wealth, while 4 per cent. of the people owned the remaining 9 per cent., leaving not more than 5 per cent. practically paupers.

The per capita wealth is the same to-day as in 1860. Each man eats and drinks, and any great change that has come must of necessity have been by a reduction of wealth—by taking from many and giving it to one.

The census of 1890 shows that the conditions of 1860 have been reversed; that 91 per cent. of the people of the United States are to-day practically paupers, living from hand to mouth, dependent upon their daily bread, while 9 per cent. are capitalistic employers, owning 84 per cent. of the wealth.

The Senate Debate

After two months of delay the amended Wilson bill came up for consideration in the Senate, and Chairman Voorhees made the opening speech in its behalf.

No one can foretell the duration of the debate. The Democratic supporters of the bill hope to get through in six weeks. The Republicans and their assistants, the dissenting Democrats, talk of three months. If the Senate were moved by regard for the public interests and respect for public opinion its course would be substantially this:

Each party would agree upon three of its members to present its side of the question in carefully prepared and elaborate speeches. They could say all that needs to be said upon the general policy involved. This might consume a week.

There would then be a general discussion under a rule limiting the speeches to fifteen or twenty minutes. This would enable every Senator to get his views before the people of his State, which is the main object of most of the so-called debates. Upon a party question in a legislative body talk does not change votes. A week should suffice for this, with "leave to print" for Senators who are constitutionally long-winded.

The bill would then be open to motions to amend, under a rule for five-minute speeches. The purpose of every proposed amendment could be made clear in an hour or two of genuine debate under this rule. Two weeks of honest work in this way would test the sense of the Senate on every section of the bill.

The final vote on the bill could then be taken by the 1st of May. It could be sent to a conference committee, agreed to and finally passed in a week more and go into effect on the 30th of June, the end of the fiscal year.

This is the business-like way of disposing of the tariff bill. It is also the patriotic way. The country waits and pleads for an early settlement of the question. It asks for and needs certainty. Instead of patriotism, is it to have more politics? Instead of business, is it to have needless delay?—New York World.

Allison's Unsupported Assertions.

Mr. Allison opened the debate on the tariff bill for the opposition without throwing great light upon the subject. He denounced the Democrats for seeking revenue only, which is an obvious exaggeration. He figured out the increase between 1880 and 1890 of the manufactured products of the United States (69.27 per cent.) and declared that it was due to protection, which is a proposition impossible reasonably to verify and easy to refute, since a very large part of the increase is in industries for which there can be no foreign competition. He declared that all our industries, with few exceptions, would be paralyzed, if not strangled to death, by the pending bill, yet he knows that many of the duties affecting the larger part of the industries of the country are no lower in the Senate bill than those in force when the McKinley act was passed. Naturally and prudently, he took no note of the fact that in numbers of cases our manufacturers can even now undersell foreign competitors in foreign markets, and many more will be able to do so with the reduction in the cost of materials made possible by the reformed tariff. In his day Mr. Allison was a pretty good tariff reformer. It is only the exigencies of party discipline that now bring him forward rashly to condemn a measure which is in no sense radical or destructive, and no more extreme than those he has himself sustained in the past.—New York Times.

Don't Tax Raw Materials.

There is, of course, no honesty in the chatter that the policy of free raw materials is opposed to the Democratic principle of a tariff for revenue. No friend of such a tariff ever proposed to tax everything that is imported. Under a strict application of the principle, the articles to be selected for revenue duties are those the taxation of which would yield the most revenue with the least burden to the people. To tax raw materials is to handicap our manufacturers, to limit the demand for labor, and to increase the cost of all goods produced from them. The policy of free raw materials is explicitly approved in the Chicago platform.

Invading the World's Markets.

While some of the "conservatives" in the Senate are afraid of free iron ore, the Iron Age and other trade journals are discussing the capacity of our iron manufacturers to invade the markets of the world with their wares. The Iron Age, which is a stanch protectionist journal, said on March 29:

"We are sure that few Americans familiar with our resources and our methods are not convinced that the manifest destiny of the United States is to become the greatest manufacturing country in the world. What we have accomplished in some branches of agriculture and of industry is merely a forerunner of the great achievements which the next generation will bring."

The editor thinks our prices will, after one more turn, be "on a parity with the industrial market" and that then with better banking facilities, better consular service and more attention to foreign trade we may expect to hold our own in the markets of the world.

We are now, in fact, exporting millions of dollars' worth of iron and steel products, agricultural implements, stoves, sewing machines, saws, axes, and nearly all kinds of tools, locomotives and, within a few weeks, pig iron from Alabama to England. It is then no wonder that even protectionist journals are waking up to the fact that with free raw materials and our protection bands removed, we can challenge competition from all quarters in all quarters of the earth.

Coal Industry Prosperous.

It is a fact of considerable interest and significance that, notwithstanding the panic of last year, the consumption of coal was about two million tons greater than in the previous year. The Engineering and Mining Journal has taken extraordinary pains to collect statistics on this subject, and it finds that the consumption of 1893 was 183,422,710 net tons, while that of 1892 was only 180,399,017 net tons. After making account of imports and exports, the remainder shows an increase in consumption of 1,881,943 tons. From this fact the Journal draws the reasonable inference that "the depression in business through the year could not have been so great in fact as it appeared on the surface. During the first half of the year," it continues, "business men worried over and continually talked about the depression in trade, when in fact they meant in prices. The continual talk about hard times caused capital to become far more conservative than there was any real reason for, and thus affected other branches of business. The semi-panic spread everywhere and caused infinite harm to many industries, but, as the figures of coal production show, manufacturing interests throughout the country certainly have not suffered to the extent claimed and believed."—New York Post!

Betrayers of Democratic Principles.

The fundamental principles of Democracy are as sound to-day as they were when Thomas Jefferson enunciated them more than one hundred years ago. "Equal rights for all, special privileges for none" will forever be the goal of popular government. It is the essence of liberty and justice. A few traitors, masquerading as Democrats, may succeed temporarily in defeating real Democratic legislation, but they will soon be swept out of power by the tide of popular indignation, and better men will fill their places.

The study of the social and economic sciences is more general than ever before and, knowing their rights, the people will insist on being free. Real Democrats should not be disheartened. They should set to work to rid their party of all who can be tempted to vote special favors to great trusts or protected interests. Millionaires are too numerous in the Senate and all of them are interested directly or indirectly in protected interests. But some of the worst men there are those who want to become millionaires and are willing to sell themselves and their party to become millionaires. Rid the party of all such men.

Voorhees for an Income Tax.

No part of Senator Voorhees' speech yesterday had more truly the ring of earnestness than his defense of the income tax. To the claim that "such a tax cannot be collected because of the wholesale perjury which income owners will commit in order to evade the law," the Senator replied:

"I confess that I am shocked to be assured now by gentlemen of great ability and high position that the principal property-holders and income owners of the United States are ready, for the sake of defrauding the Government out of a small pittance, to blacken their souls with the detestable crime of false swearing, to render themselves fit associates for thieves, house-breakers, forgers and cutthroats in the prison houses of the world, and to become everlasting inhabitants of hell in the world to come."

The protesting plutocrats ought to be grateful for this impassioned "hurling back" of the imputation that they would perjure themselves to escape a slight tax.—New York World.

Tariff in the Senate.

BEFORE the merry month of May comes in the Senate should have passed a tariff-reform bill.—Boston Globe.

A SHORT limit in speeches should be in order. Promises must be redeemed on schedule time, else the redemption will count for but little.—Memphis Appeal-Avalanche.

THE bill ought to be amended and passed, but above all things should it be acted upon speedily. Let the debate be short and to the point—and so only can the Senate hope to recover some of its lately lost prestige.—Springfield Republican.

THE party in power is under pledge to revise the tariff, and since it has the votes necessary to pass the bill now before the Senate a failure to do so with reasonable promptness will be a confession of inability or unwillingness to make good a campaign promise.—Philadelphia Times.

WHATEVER has been done in the Senate—if anything be accomplished—must pass the ordeal of conference committees, and it is in these bodies that the great battle between protection Democrats for personal revenue and low-tariff Democrats will take place.—Boston Transcript.

THE tariff debate in the Senate is likely to be prolonged altogether out of proportion to the number or the importance of the changes in the pending measure that will be accomplished by it. These, in all probability, will be neither many nor essential—the compromisers and log-rollers having already put the bill in the form that will command the largest possible vote in the upper chamber.

NO ONE is useless in this world who lightens the burdens of another.—Dickens.

SINK IN THE STORM.

MANY VESSELS WRECKED ON THE ATLANTIC COAST.

Ships Pounded to Pieces in the Sight of Men Who Can Render No Aid—New Jersey Towns and Railroads Suffer.—Sea Hath Its Perils.

A Score of Lives Lost.

For two days last week the whole Atlantic coast from Boston to Baltimore was in the clutches of the worst storm since the never-to-be-forgotten blizzard of 1888, and not only the coast, but all the States north of the Carolinas and east of the Allegheny Mountains, including the whole of New York State, sucked in the icy blasts and drew them as far as Buffalo. It was a terrific strife of the elements, and did incalculable damage to life and property throughout the most densely populated part of the country. For twenty-four hours the winds of the ocean rushed furiously past Sandy Hook, up through Hell Gate, at the rate of sixty-nine miles an hour. This would have been disagreeable and dangerous if the wind had no companions, for such a wind not only wrinkles the sea and makes it turbulent and perilous to ships and their burdens, but it has power enough to overturn buildings, to uproot trees, and to play havoc with the means of human communication. But the wind was not alone this time. It was accompanied and assisted by snow and sleet, which made it bitter cold. Together these threw swept the sea and the land, covering the habitations of men with an icy veil, heaping the earth high with a blanket of snow, playing with mighty vessels as children play with whittled boats, lifting them high on the crest of a mighty wave and then plunging them into an abyss of churning waters and crushing them there; breaking men's limbs and beating their lives out against the jagged rocks, hurrying through the streets of cities, as a mountain torrent plunges boiling through a narrow gorge, tearing down telegraph poles as if they were toothpicks, twisting thick and heavy wires like cotton thread, and withal roaring and howling in hideous triumph, like the myriad devils of a nightmare.

In some respects this storm was more dreadful and disastrous than the blizzard which paralyzed New York six years ago. That was fiercer, but it did not diffuse itself over so great an area. Thursday every foot of ground east of Buffalo was covered with thirty inches of snow, which had been falling for more than twenty-four hours. Nearly every telegraph and telephone wire in New York, New Jersey, Maryland, Eastern Pennsylvania and Delaware was torn down by the fury of the blast. New York was practically isolated. Baltimore, Boston, Philadelphia and Washington were in a similar plight.

Terrible Work of the Storm.

The work of the storm along the Jersey coast was something terrible. Furious gales of wind and monstrous seas wrought havoc and destruction. Buildings, trees, telegraph and telephone wires, railway tracks, embankments, wharves and fences all yielded to the destructive fury of the elements. Above it all stands out the loss of human life. Many vessels, large and small, were wrecked. The crews of the Sandy Hook, Squan and Long Branch life-saving stations put out to the assistance of the disabled vessels as soon as they were reported ashore, but it was not known when the first dispatches were sent out that a single life had been saved, as the furious sea running and the blinding snow prevented any effective work upon the part of the life-savers.

Atlantic City suffered considerably. Waves dashed over the board walk, and at times this famous attraction was threatened with being carried out to sea. Gen. Earl's hotel, says a dispatch, the Normandie-by-the-Sea, is likely to be totally wrecked. At Galilee the ocean is undermining St. Peter's Church, which the tide will also probably bring down. In Morris, Bergen and Warren counties roads were impassable. Trains on railroads running into Jersey City and Hoboken were all delayed. The meadows between Jersey City and Hoboken and Newark are several inches under water and nothing is visible except telephone and telegraph poles. At Bayonne many boats and boathouses were washed away. At South Amboy a partially erected house was blown down, and at New Brunswick electric light, telegraph and telephone wires were leveled to the ground. Incalculable damage was done to the fruit crops. The peach crop suffered particularly, and it is feared that the entire crop will prove a failure. Farmers throughout the State will be heavy sufferers.

Wrecked Off Milwaukee.

A little yawl boat, nine feet long, drifted to the beach, several miles north of Milwaukee, bearing the unconscious form of Capt. William R. Wood, the only survivor of the schooner Island City. The other two men who comprised the crew of the lost boat were undoubtedly drowned when the boat went down. Capt. Wood was so nearly dead from exposure that he barely managed to crawl to a farmhouse near the shore and then became unconscious again. He arrived in the city in the afternoon and told the story of the loss of his boat.

MILLION IN SMOKE.

Big Glucose Factory in Buffalo, N. Y., Destroyed by Fire.

The American Glucose Company's two buildings in Buffalo, N. Y., were totally destroyed by fire Thursday night at a loss of $1,800,000. There were 180 men at work in the buildings. Most of these got out, it is known, but those who worked in the seventh floor of the main building, it is thought, must have been cut off and their lives lost. As near as can be learned, there are ten men missing and probably more. Seven men are in the hospitals, three of them firemen.

The loss is estimated by C. J. Hamlin, the owner of the works, at $1,800,000, with insurance for $475,000. The main building, says a dispatch, is on the north side of Scott street, the feed and starch building on the south, both connected by a bridge at the fifth story. The fire broke out in the electric light room on the ground floor. The engineer, John Coyle, saw a burst of flame, and the whole room was in a blaze. The buildings were a veritable tinder box and when the engines arrived were a mass of flame to the fifth story. Firemen with scaling ladders took out six men from the sixth story. All who were above that must have perished. The fish market on Scott street was destroyed when the walls of the main building fell in on it. Firemen Schroeder, Weber, and Kelly were buried in the crush. Schroeder and Maurice will probably die. The glucose works were the largest in this country, and the works of the company consisted of an eleven-story brick building used for the manufacture of glucose and starch, an eight-story brick building used as a powerhouse and as a place for making the cattle-feeding product, an eight-story brick building used as a refinery, and an eight-story storehouse.

There were perhaps 125 men at work. It is known that some of the men escaped by the fire escapes, and some of those on the lower stories jumped into the canal. The chances are that several men were burned to death. In twenty minutes the walls began to fall, and they fell at frequent intervals until inside of forty-five minutes there was but one corner standing. The main building was connected with the power and feed house by an elevated bridge over Scott street. The flames crept across this and ignited the feed house.

The fish market just across the street caught fire. Five firemen were sent inside to fight the flames. The building was a long, low brick structure. A portion of a blazing wall fell on it and started the roof to burning fiercely. In a few minutes the roof fell in and buried the five firemen. Three of them escaped with no other injuries than a few bruises, but John Weber and Lieut. Schroeder, of the same company, were not so fortunate. Weber was taken out unconscious. His face is badly burned, some of his ribs are broken, and he has also internal injuries. It is a question whether he lives or dies.

BIG SEASON FOR BICYCLING.

Promise of Great Sport and an Unusual Number of Meets.

THAT this will be the greatest cycling year on record in this country there seems to be no doubt. From present indications, upward of 2,000 sanctions to hold race meets will be granted by the League of American Wheelmen before the season is over. As most of the meetings last year paid expenses, it is expected that, with the greater interest now prevailing, clubs will make money this summer. The League has arrived at the dignity of having a national circuit. The fastest racing men will make a tour in the hope of obtaining a fair share of the valuable prizes offered. They are now in the South or contemplating visits there for the purpose of training. Many cities this year will have bicycle tracks for the first time. Of course the presence of a large number of racing men in the South has had a tendency to arouse interest among the Southerners, and Savannah, Charleston, Augusta, Mobile, Macon, Nashville, Birmingham and New Orleans are expected to be among the cities that will hold big race meets. The circuit will probably be opened in the South, and from there it will be continued north and then in a westerly direction. Much interest has already been shown in the meeting to be held at Denver, and a large number of Eastern men will make the trip there. It is expected also that the records in competition will be lowered, and if they are, more value will probable be attached to the records made in private by Johnson, Bliss and Dirnberger.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is Peculiar to Itself

It is peculiar in its origin, peculiar in the remarkable growth of the business of its manufacture, peculiar in the wonderful cures which it has accomplished. No other Sarsaparilla or so-called blood-purifier has made the "peculiar" record shown by the vast mass of testimony from people who have been cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Hundreds of letters are being constantly received which tell a tale of misery, with the happy sequel: "I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and it cured me."

Peculiar After the Grip

Hood's Sarsaparilla seems to be especially adapted to just those conditions where an invigorating medicine is indispensable, and to just those times when heavy doctors' bills are to be avoided. The Grip always leaves a "peculiar" weakness, which Hood's Sarsaparilla, by its "peculiar" virtues, speedily overcomes. Much sickness and unhappiness follows a neglect properly to build up the system after the Grip. Hood's Sarsaparilla will always do this, and thus it is

Peculiar In the Spring

Almost everyone feels the need of an invigorating blood purifier and reliable tonic. The business man, the house-wife, the factory operative, lawyers, doctors, ministers, all have a "peculiar" enervated, exhausted, all-tired-out feeling in the spring. Again a "peculiar" remedy is found in Hood's Sarsaparilla. It makes pure, healthy blood, throws off the impurities, gives strength to the limbs, elasticity to the step, affords refreshing sleep and creates a good appetite. Hood's Sarsaparilla does this, and thus it is "peculiar." Get only Hood's, because

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

PISO'S CURE FOR

Consumptives and people who have weak lungs or Asthma, should use Piso's Cure for Consumption. It has cured thousands. It has not injured one. It is not bad to take. It is the best cough syrup. Sold everywhere. 25c.

THE BENEDICT ARNOLD HOUSE.

An Old Historic Landmark in New Haven, Conn.

Probably one of the most historic landmarks in the grand old university town of New Haven, Conn., is at 155 Water street, a house which was for many years the home of Benedict Arnold, the famous traitor. It is a frame structure, two stories and a half high, and in the palmy days of its owner is said to have been one of the handsomest residences in the city. But to-day it has a dilapidated appearance and shows plainly the want of care. It is now used as a boarding house and on the left side of the main entrance a sign is hung which reads as follows: "Rooms to Rent. Board by the Day or Week." There is probably not a day passes but the old home of Benedict Arnold is pointed out to visitors as one of the principal points of interest in that city. The house was once the scene of a great wedding feast, when Mr. Arnold married his first wife, Miss Margaret Mansfield. She died June 21, 1775, and her tombstone is in the basement of Center Church on the green. The Benedict Arnold house was built in 1772, and occupied by the traitor until a short time before the battle of Bunker Hill. In 1812 it was sold to Capt. Frederick Hunt, one of the most prominent shipping merchants of his daay. He afterwards sold it to his son, James Hunt, and the property still remains in the family of the same name. Noah Webster, the great lexicographer, resided at one time in the Arnold house.

THE BENEDICT ARNOLD HOUSE.

MOST IMPORTANT TO MAN.

The Use of Wheat and Its Preservation Among the Egyptians.

Of all the plants cultivated wheat is the most important to the welfare of man. Its use dates to the most ancient times. The agricultural wealth of the most ancient of countries, Egypt, consisted in its wheat. Not only was her dense population supplied with a profusion of the necessities of life, but Egpyt was a granary where from the earliest times all people felt sure of finding an abundant store of corn. Seven years of plenty afforded, from the superabundance of the crops, a sufficiency of food to supply the whole population during eleven years of dearth, as well as "all countries" which sent to Egypt "to buy," when Pharaoh, by the advice of Joseph, laid up the annual surplus for that purpose.

In the preservation of wheat the

How Fashions in Dolls' Eyes Are Set.

Who would think of such a thing as a Queen deciding the color of the dolls' eyes within her kingdom. Such a thing has been done, not by royal edict, however, but simply by having her Majesty's own eyes set the fashion.

When Victoria became Queen of England, more than fifty years ago, she was fair and young, with very blue eyes, whereupon blue eyes became all the fashion, and all the loyal dollmakers of her kingdom began sending blue-eyed dolls from their factories.

In Italy and Spain, where all the great beauties have olive skins and dark handsome eyes, a blonde doll is not a common sight. Japanese dolls have twinkling, beady black eyes set in their heads aslant, while the gayly dressed dolly from Singapore looks from her copper-colored face with a pair of narrow, coquettish black eyes, quite different in expression from either the Spanish or Chinese beauties.

A Railroad Through the Sea.

An interesting experiment is about to be carried out at Brighton in the shape of the construction of a marine railway for the purpose of connecting Brighton with the little village of Rottingdean, some three or four miles to the eastward. The rails will be laid on the solid rock with concrete, and at high water will be covered by the sea, which, however, will not affect the carriages, the latter being supported on a framework that keeps them high and dry. At this part of the coast the cliffs are high, and the beach is practically inaccessible, so that no boating traffic will be interfered with. The cars will be moved by electricity, like those used along the eastern foreshore of Brighton.—London News.

Turkish Superstitions.

There is no land on earth where more superstitions prevail than that of the unspeakable Turk. Some of them are interesting. If by any chance a sparrow or swallow flies in the window and circles three times around the room it is a sign that a blood relation of some one present is about to die. There are many signs and happenings that are supposed to predict marriage. For instance, if a horse sneezes when a young girl passes in the street, she is positive that her time is nearly come. If her hair becomes unfastened she knows that she will soon be sought for, and if she goes to eat a peach and finds its kernel split she is equally certain that she will soon be wedded.

HEALTH REIGNS SUPREME.

The Home of the Sisters of Providence, St. Marys, Ind., Seldom Visited by Sickness.

Sister Ambrose Explains the Reason to a Reporter—Due to the Strictest Rules of Hygiene and to the Medicine Used—Information of Value to Everyone.

(From the Terre Haute Express.)

Four miles to the northwest of Terre Haute, as the pigeon flies, lies the beautiful and picturesque village of St. Marys. This is a Roman Catholic institution which has attained something more than national celebrity. Fifty years ago it was established by six Sisters of Providence, who came from the shores of France to lay the foundation for this great charitable order. It now consists of the home of the Sisters of Providence, known as the Providence House, a large female seminary, one of the finest chapels in the United States, and a rectory in which the priests make their home.

It is also the Mecca to which hundreds of Sisters of Charity flock each year to make their annual retreat. During these retreats a prolonged fast is maintained, and the greater portion of the time spent in religious sacrifice.

A reporter of the Express called at the institution one day this week, and asked of Sister Mary Ambrose if there was any apparent reason for the good health with which they were blessed. The answer was that particular attention is paid by the sisters in charge of the health and happiness of the students. "Bodily ailment," she said, "cannot help but have its effect on the mind. In order to keep the mind bright and active and perfectly clear at all times, the student's physical condition must be as nearly perfect as possible. Some time ago there was more or less ailment noticeable among the sisters and students, which was probably due to atmospheric causes, though of course I do not know just what its origin really was. Shortly after this became noticeable a friend highly recommended a medicine called Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and so urged upon me to give them a trial that I ordered some of them, and they have been used in the institution ever since. A few days ago the manufacturers wrote me for an opinion of Pink Pills, and my reply was as follows:

"Respected Sirs:—In answer to your kind request for our opinion of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, we are pleased to say that these Pink Pills were so highly recommended to us that we were induced to try them, and we think our repeated orders for them are sufficient evidence that we find them all they were represented, a good blood builder and an excellent nerve tonic. Yours very respectfully,

SISTER M. AMBROSE,
"Secretary for Sisters of Providence."

Medical scientists concede that weak blood and shattered nerves are two fruitful causes of nearly every disease to which human flesh is heir, and if Dr. Williams' medicine is, as Sister Ambrose says they have found it, "a good blood builder and an excellent nerve tonic," the source of good health at St. Mary's is easily traced.

When all the students assemble in the Academy Building on next commencement day, it will do one's heart good to see that brilliant array of bright faces, bright eyes and happy dispositions, which are due very largely to the extensive use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. The Sisters of Providence are never without them. Their orders are placed by the gross direct with the manufacturer.

This is certainly a high recommendation for the medicine, for there is probably no class of people that gives more attention to the physical health and welfare of its members than the Sisters of Providence. The strictest rules of hygiene are observed at all times, and they would not use anything in which they did not have unbounded faith.

An analysis of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People shows that they contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female, and all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 cents a box, or 6 boxes for $2.50)—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100—by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

He Wasn't Shoving.

A frenzied officer was trying to keep the crowd back from a horse that had fallen on Main Street, and, to add force to his frowning appearance, he howled out to the crowd in a general way: "I'll break your head if I come back there, for shoving that way."

"I ain't shoving, and you know it, so don't get fresh," came a wee voice.

It emanated from the smallest bit of humanity in the mob, a 6-year-old youngster who felt that he had been unjustly accused of exerting his strength to crowd the policeman. The laugh that followed the expression was joined in by the good-natured officer himself.—Buffalo Express.

Indians in War.

The Indians are to be mustered out of the United States Army, and the announcement serves to recall the time when the question of employing them in civilized warfare was a burning one in this land. The patriot commanders of the Revolution and their British enemies were never tired of exchanging accusations upon this subject, and the murder of Miss McCrea grew out of the employment of Indians by the British. Later, in the war of 1812, the Indians were stirred to arms against United States troops and mutual hatreds of the two nations were embittered by the ancient cause of quarrel.

Dry Humor.

As I rode by a miserably poor hillside farm in Tennessee, one day, I saw the farmer sitting on the fence, chewing a bite of long green very complacently.

"Good morning," I said; "how far is it to the mill?"

"'Bout three miles in the way you've got to go," he replied in a whisper.

"What's the matter?" I asked, "have you a cold?"

"No, mister," he whispered again. "'taint that. It's this yer farm. I've been livin' on it fer ten years, an' the land's so dern pore I hain't been able to raise my voice on it fer the last five."

Japanese Manufactures.

It is a matter of singular interest that Japan is now manufacturing modern war material for the use of Western nations. Six guns manufactured at the Japanese Government arsenal at Osaka have just been supplied to the Portuguese Government. A month or so since a British firm took the first steps in the establishment of a watchmaking concern in Japan for the manufacture by Japanese workmen of watches for Western markets.

The Cat and the Oyster Pie.

At Greenville, N. C., Mrs. L. B. Harding had an oyster pie for dinner. She concluded to warm what was left for supper and placed the baking tin in the stove. When Mr. Harding went to help himself at supper he had in place of oysters a nice well baked cat—fur and all. The cat had crept in the stove, enjoyed the oysters, and, no doubt feeling well, had coiled up in the baking tin for a nap.—Atlanta Constitution.

Not Bullet-Proof.

The alleged bullet-proof cloth, invented by a German tailor, which was much talked of some time ago, has been rejected by the German military authorities. It is three times as heavy as ordinary cloth; is difficult to manufacture into tunics; is clumsy when made up, and, finally, not bullet-proof at all, as it is easily pierced by the projectile of the Lebel rifle.

Bad Effects of the Blizzard.

It is cold weather to be without a coat, but such is the case with us. We spread our duster over our garden peas last night to keep the frost off, and it froze so hard that the cow stepped on it some time during the night and broke it all to pieces.—Hawkinsville (Ga.) Skinner.

Agreed to Dig Each Other's Graves.

The recent death of Jack Odell, the oldest grave digger in Passaic County, New Jersey, brought to light an agreement entered into fifty years ago, when Undertader Hiram Gould interred the first body in the Sandy Hill cemetery. Odell, who was then the only grave digger in the neighborhood, agreed with Mr. Gould to dig his grave and drive his hearse if the undertaker should die first. Mr. Gould made the same agreement with Odell, and also said he would pay the funeral expenses if Odell died poor. Odell visited Gould's establishment about a year ago and said he had saved money enough to pay for his funeral, and turned the money over to the undertaker. Odell died a few days ago. Mr. Gould, who is nearly 80 years old, dug the grave digger's grave and drove the hearse to the cemetery.—New York Press.

A Standard Bearer.

In the crusade inaugurated nearly half a century ago against the professional ignorance of the old school of medicine, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters was a standard bearer. Its victories over disease, when the old-time specifics proved abject failures, proved that the pseudo-philosophy which sanctioned the administration of violent remedies where the case required none, which laid down as unalterable rules blood-letting, violent purgation, the use of emetics and the employment of corrosive and cumulative poisons in simple cases of liver and malarial complaint, was in fact the worst of unphilosophy, contrary alike to the laws of true medicinal science, of hygiene and of common sense. Biliousness, constipation and chills and fever, as now treated by the Bitters, promptly yield where before they obstinately resisted old-fashioned medication. So do dyspepsia, rheumatism and kidney complaint—all surely conquerable by this safe and really philosophic remedy.

At the Theater.

Theatergoer (to lady in front, whose hat is decidedly in the way)—Madam, would you have the goodness to take your hat off? It prevents me from seeing the stage.

Lady (indignantly)—Certainly not.

Quartette of Wrathful Spectators—Take your hat off, please.

But the fair offender only tightens her lips and looks determined.

Wily Youth (in a stage whisper)—It's a blamed shame. Leave the lady alone; she has no hair.

In an incalculable portion of a second the hat is removed, exposing luxuriant abundant locks, and everyone is happy.

Time and Season.

All things have their time and season, and in the changeful temperature of a closing winter rheumatism flourishes. The best treatment is referred to in a letter from Miss Lina Gunckle, Trenton, O., Feb. 22d, 1893, who says: "I suffered for several years with rheumatism, but was cured by St. Jacobs Oil. I am now well and never feel anything of it." Better get the Oil in time and there will be no season of trouble afterwards.

"WHAT is the matter, dearest?" "Somefin' awful's happened, mamma." "Well, what is it, sweetheart?" "My d-doll baby got away fwom me and bwoked a plate out in the pantwy."

Address HOPEWELL CLARKE, Land Commissioner, St. Paul, Minn.

The subject of the above portrait is a prominent and much respected citizen, Mr. Robert Manson, of West Rye, N. H. Where Mr. Manson is known "his word is as good as his bond." In a recent letter to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Chief Consulting Physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., Mr. Manson says:

"Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the best pills I ever took for the liver. All my friends say they do them the most good."

This opinion is shared by every one who once tries these tiny, little, sugar-coated pills, which are to be found in all medicine stores. The U. S. Inspector of Immigration at Buffalo, N. Y., writes of them as follows:

"From early childhood I have suffered from a sluggish liver, with all the disorders accompanying such a condition. Doctors' prescriptions and patent medicines I have used in abundance; they only afforded temporary relief. I was recommended to try Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. I did so, taking two at night and one after dinner every day for two weeks. I have reduced the dose to one 'Pellet' every day for two months. I have in six months increased in solid flesh twenty-two pounds. I am in better health than I have been since childhood. Drowsiness and unpleasant feelings after meals have completely disappeared."

John A. H. Berry

Assist nature a little now and then with a gentle laxative, or, if need be, with a more searching and cleansing cathartic, thereby removing offending matter from the stomach and bowels, and toning up and invigorating the liver and quickening its tardy action, and you thereby remove the cause of a multitude of distressing diseases, such as headaches, indigestion, biliousness, skin diseases, boils, carbuncles, piles, fevers and maladies too numerous to mention.

If people would pay more attention to properly regulating the action of their bowels, they would have less frequent occasion to call for their doctors' services to subdue attacks of dangerous diseases.

That, of all known agents to accomplish this purpose, Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are unequaled, is proven by the fact that once used, they are always in favor. Their secondary effect is to keep the bowels open and regular, not to further constipate, as is the case with other pills. Hence, their great popularity with sufferers from habitual constipation, piles, and indigestion.

The "Pleasant Pellets" are far more effective in arousing the liver to action than "blue pills," calomel, or other mercurial preparations, and have the further merit of being purely vegetable and perfectly harmless in any condition of the system; no particular care is required while using them.

Composed of the choicest, concentrated vegetable extracts, their cost is much more than is that of other pills found in the market, yet from forty to forty-four "Pellets" are put up in each sealed glass vial, as sold through druggists, and can be had at the price of the more ordinary and cheaper made pills.

Dr. Pierce prides himself on having been first to introduce a Little Liver Pill to the American people. Many have imitated them, but none have approached his "Pleasant Pellets" in excellence.

For all laxative and cathartic purposes the "Pleasant Pellets" are infinitely superior to all "mineral waters," sedlitz powders, "salts," castor oil, fruit syrups (so-called), laxative "teas," and the many other purgative compounds sold in various forms.

Put up in glass vials, sealed, therefore always fresh and reliable. One little "Pellet" is laxative, two gently cathartic.

As a "dinner pill," to promote digestion, take one each day after dinner. To relieve distress from over-eating, nothing equals them. They are tiny, sugar-coated, anti-bilious granules, scarcely larger than mustard seeds. Every child wants them.

Then, after they are taken, instead of disturbing and shocking the system, they act in a mild, and natural way. There is no reaction afterward. Their help lasts.

Accept no substitute recommended to be "just as good." They may be better for the dealer, because of paying him a better profit, but he is not the one who needs help.

Especially for Farmers, Miners, R. R. Hands and others. Double Sole extending down to the heel. EXTRA WEARING QUALITY. Thousands of Rubber Boot wearers testify this is the best they ever had. Ask your dealer for them, and don't be persuaded into an inferior article.

Gave Pain Balm a Trial.

My wife was confined to her bed for over two months with a very severe attack of rheumatism. We could get nothing that would afford her any relief and as a last resort gave Chamberlain's Pain Balm a trial. To our great surprise she began to improve after the first application, and by using it regularly she was soon able to get up and attend to her house work. E. H. Johnson, of C. J. Knutson & Co., Kensington, Minn. 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

Cured of Rheumatism.

The many cases of rheumatism cured by Chamberlain's Pain Balm during the past few months have given the people great confidence in its curative properties, and have shown that there is one preparation that can be depended upon for that painful and aggravating disease. Honaker Bros., Lorain, Ohio, say: "Mr. Moses Price, of this place, was troubled with rheumatism for a long time. Chamberlain's Pain Balm has cured him. He says that the Balm has no equal." For sale by Robbins & McCord.

McNagny's Last Blunder.

McNagny has got into another piece of foolishness. At Ligonier, after fooling around for several months and letting the democrats get to quarreling, he, without consulting them, went out into the country and coaxed Dave Hough, a farmer, to agree to take the postoffice, although he did not want it and no one in Ligonier asked for his appointment. When McNagny came back from the country and announced to the democrats in town that he had secured a postmaster for them, they were astonished and indignant. Now, after waiting four months longer, Hough decides he does not want the place, and writes McNagny to that effect. The latter, it would appear, did not even stop to consult his friends of the Garrett Clipper, who have been, as they claim, controlling him by "snapping their fingers," but at once wrote to the committeemen at Ligonier directing them to call an election and go through the farce lately seen at Kendallville. The democratic committee, however, remembering the Kendallville fiasco, refused to do this, and unanimously requested McNagny to select a man himself. And so the matter stands. We do not believe there ever was a man who was called to the honorable office of congressman, who showed so little sense and judgment in filling these places as McNagny has, or who put himself bodily into the hands of the least desirable element of the party everywhere. Go where you will it is the same story of weak or unsatisfactory appointments, and that, too, of men for whom no one had asked. He has all over the district acted as if the people had no rights whatever, but that he alone, with now and then two or three would-be local bosses, owned everything in sight. The people and their wishes were not considered. People might forgive him all these weaknesses if he amounted to anything in the proper duties of the office. But just now, when this strongest district in the state should have a strong man in congress to help the party and the people out of the hole into which eastern democrats have got us, we find ourselves represented by one who either cannot or will not lift a hand. We are one of those democrats who sincerely believe that what is good for the democratic party is good for the country. But as long as we fill up the seats in congress with weak men, or worse, we cannot expect to accomplish much. And while speaking of this and the weakness of our own district, it might not be amiss to say that it looks as if quite a number of other democratic districts had made as big fools of themselves as has the Twelfth Indiana. Every democrat who cares for his party or his country should wake up and realize the condition to which his thoughtlessness has contributed.

Oranges Cheaper than Apples.

Hicksville News.

For the first time in the experience of fruit dealers oranges are cheaper than apples. At least at no time during the past fifteen years have oranges sold so low as apples. A barrel of apples is worth more money to-day than a barrel of oranges, and three times as many apples can be sold with this discrepancy in price existing. The fallacy of orange growers and shippers that ascarcity of apples advances the price or the value of the orange is more cleary demonstrated this year than ever. A man who calls for a barrel of apples will not accept a similar quantity of oranges at the same price and very rarely can the orange be placed as a substitude, cheap as it may appear. Briefly the orange is a luxury and as such is neglected, while the apple can be utilized in so many various ways as to be considered almost a necessity. With these facts before us a careful observer must be impressed with the belief that in the future the apple orchard promises more than the orange grove.

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especially attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Nerve force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health. The pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, etc., with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the cut the long nerve descending from the base of the brain and terminating in the bowels is the pneumogastric, while the numerous little branches supply the heart, lungs and stomach with necessary vitality. When the brain becomes in any way disordered by irritability or exhaustion, the nerve force which it supplies is lessened, and the organs receiving the diminished supply are consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fail to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the organ itself instead of the cause of the trouble. The noted specialist, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the unrivaled brain and nerve food, is prepared on the principle that all nervous and many other difficulties originate from disorders of the nerve centers. Its wonderful success in curing these disorders is testified to by thousands in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs. It is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

Jokes on Republican Editors.

The COURIER has repeatedly said that republican editors were the worst informed men on earth on political matters. If proof were needed, we call attention to some items of last week. The Auburn Dispatch says that C. A. Yotter is a candidate for the republican nomination for prosecutor. The facts are, that Mr. Yotter, being a man of more than ordinary intelligence and finely educated, is, of course, a democrat. Then comes the Garrett Republican with a cute little republican article on the "Butler Record, democratic," in which it says the Record helped to vote for the conditions that "leave houses vacant," etc. This may be true, for the Record, an ultra high tariff republican paper, had done all it could to bring on these hard times by advocating the vicious republican legislation that has gradually ruined the business of the country. And here, again, we say that ignorance did it, for we are inclined to think that Bro. Smith, like most other republican editors, never stopped to think or to investigate, but let the Indianapolis Journal think for him. That is the way republican editors do, except at times when they have a central committee in working order to furnish "original political editorials" for them. And as for the Waterloo Press, we believe it never attempts to climb dizzy hights of politics unaided by the central committee. And their papers in other counties are run in the same way. But the one satisfying thing that never leaves them is the belief that they do "know a heap."

Since writing the above, we find the following in the Angola Magnet:

The Auburn Dispatch says: "Chas. Yotter, of Angola, wants the republican nomination for prosecutor." People up this way all knew Charlie Yotter—who is chairman of the Pleasant township democratic committee—wants the democratic nomination for prosecutor, and that he "wants it bad," but no one suspected that he had been trying to palm himself off as a republican upon the credulous editors of the Dispatch. The latter are astute politicians, they are!

This also reminds us of the desire of the Waterloo Press to run J. D. Leighty for commissioner, though he lives in a district whose commissioner holds over.

Well, while we are about it, we might also introduce the following bright item from a democratic source. The Ft. Wayne Journal says:

Judge Powers, of the DeKalb-Steuben circuit, declines to be a candidate for re-election to the bench. Cyrus Cline, of Angola, is mentioned as a republican candidate.

And the Garrett Clipper, which never knows which side of the fence is its side, tearfully asks as to the advisability of supporting "B. B. Long for Commissioner" and wants to know if it is generally known how Mr. Long votes. We can assure the Garrett "Contango" that B. B. Long has been elected J. P. and to other positions by republicans for twenty-five years, off and on. But as he never was mixed up with the rape and seduction industry, the G. O. probably never heard of him.

From all this, it would appear that newspaper men ought to pause for a brief time in their mad rush after wealth and fame, and inform themselves as to "where they are at" politically.

Four Big Successes.

Having the needed merit to more than make good all the advertising claimed for them, the following four remedies have reached a phenomenal sale. Freedman's Aid and Southern Education	1,837

There has been raised this year for benevolences $38,804.

PUNISHED THREE MINISTERS.

The Bluffton conference was enlivened by charges that had been preferred against three of its most prominent members. Each was found guilty. Rev. G. S. V. Howard, charged with forgery, was expelled from the church. Rev. W. M. VanSlyke, charged with unchristian conduct for acting as agent for the Guarantee Investment company, said by the courts to be a lottery concern, is to be reprimanded by the Bishop at an executive session of the members of the conference. Rev. D. C. Woolpert, D. D., charged with plagiarism, was sentenced to one year's suspension from the ministry.

MINISTERS' SALARIES.

The North Indiana conference comprises 167 pastoral charges, 51 of which are stationed in cities, the remaining 116 being circuits with 409 churches. Among the best salaried churches are:

Wayne Street, Ft. Wayne	$1850 00
Elkhart	1500 00
Mulberry Street, Kokomo	2000 00
Broadway, Logansport	1500 00
Peru	1500 00
Anderson	1575 00
Muncie	1900 00
First Church, Richmond	1500 00
First Church, Marion	1800 00
Wabash	1700 00
Goshen	1700 00
Bluffton	1700 00

The conference last year paid $36,476 for benevolence, and the Sunday school paid $2,671 into the missionary fund.

Surprised Her.

It was Mrs. M. E. Barton, wife of George Barton, this time, down in Butler township. George himself was one of the "guilty ones," and took his wife to Garrett to do some trading Saturday evening. But on their return they found the house closed and dark. They went in, and when George struck a match, Mrs. B. nearly fell paralyzed to see the house "even full" of friends. There were 56 in all, among them being the following and their wives: Jacob Miller, Madison Gump, Jas. Harter, Perry Fitch, Gene Bradley, Harrison Miller, Frank Draime, Charlie Emerick and Jacob Bishop. Of others we name Nate Beber, Bina Frank, Flossa and and Edna Fansler, Bert and John Fitch, Henry and Clara Bradley, Willie and Tina Gump, Mike Walter, Claude Miller, John Beck, Alpha and Jennie Pence, Oscar and Willard Clark, Howard and Perry Hall, Mamie Ervin, Gay Simon, Ed. and Tom Long, Willie and Cary Heitz, Henry Boger, Lewis and Dell Garman, David and Willie Myers, Clint and Orrin Feagler, M. Wilderson, Abe Littler and last but not least, Jacob Fansler. He was a little late, but he always gets there, especially if there are any good looking single ladies, such as Butler township always has in plenty. But Jake is too jolly for us to get along without him, anyway.

The Auburn Church Furniture Company.

The Church Furniture Co., of this place, at least what is left of it after the fire, was sold last week to the Ft. Wayne Furniture Co. This includes the various patents owned by the Auburn company and carries with it the contracts the Auburn company has already on its hands to complete. W. H. Keeran will move to Ft. Wayne, we believe, and become the active manager of the consolidated company. The president is D. N. Foster. The works of the Ft. Wayne company on East Columbia street are to be greatly enlarged. We dislike to see the Auburn Church Furniture Company leave us, but under the circumstances, we suppose it cannot be avoided. We hope the change may prove mutually advantageous.

Hicksville News.

A telegram from Indianapolis, Ind., dated April 5, to the Chicago Inter Ocean says:

"Rev. W. H. Mygrant, from Hicksville, O., attending the missionary conference of the Evangelical Society, was arrested today for defacing the soldiers and sailors' monument. He scratched his name on the stonework. He was fined $10 and costs, amounting in all to $20."

Mr. Mygrant was the victim of circumstances surely in this matter. He had walked to the top of the monument, and there, he carelessly marked his name on the white stone with the brass tip of his knife handle; he did not scratch the stone, and the mark could have been easily erased with the palm of his hand. He says there were no less than forty other names scratched and gouged in the stone, but unfortunately for him the authorities had but recently taken prohibitory measures against such inscriptions and had not so much as posted a notice of warning. Mr. Mygrant carelessly wrote his name, without a thought of wrong-doing, and was much surprised and shocked later to see an article in an Indianapolis paper stating that he had been arrested for the act. He hastened to the authorities, stated his case, and said if he had done wrong he wished to settle and save publicity which privilege was denied him, and the matter was suffered to go through the regular course of procedure.

A Milion Friends.

A friend in need is a friend indeed, and not less than one million people have found just such a friend in Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds.—If you never used this great cough medicine, one trial will convince you that it has wonderful curative powers in all diseases of throat, chest and lungs. Each bottle is guaranteed to do all that is claimed or money will be refunded. Trial bottles free at Robbins & McCord's drug store. Large bottles 50c. and $1. 1

Nothing rattles a timid belle like a great ring.

What makes a house a home? The mother well, the children rosy, the father in good health and good humor. All brought about by the use of DeWitt's Sarsaparilla. It recommends itself.

Pure blood means good health. Reinforce it with DeWitt's Sarsaparilla. It purifies the blood, cures eruptions, eczema, scrofula and all diseases arising from impure blood. It recommends itself.

For a Complete Schedule.

Of all the games to be played by the National Base Ball League for season of 1894, apply to A. J. Smith, G. P. & T. A., L. S. & M. S. R'y, Cleveland, O., enclosing two-cent postage stamp. This schedule contains the dates, names of contesting clubs, places for scoring total runs, hits, errors and pitchers' names, together with tables of standing of clubs and averages for last season.

It cures blood and skin disorders. It does this quickly and permanently. Is there any good reasons why you should not use DeWitt's Sarsaparilla? It recommends itself.

We Guarantee

That no horse will ever die of colic, bots, or congestion of the stomach if Morris' English Stable Powder is used regularly two or three times a week. If fed to cows it will increase the quantity of milk and cream one-third, and will keep both in good healthy condition. 25 cts. Sold by Matheny & Gerke.

Another Democratic Law.

The new school book law is still working to save money for school patrons and taxpayers generally. The Indianapolis News, independent, says: Several new books will be placed in the public schools of Indiana at the opening of the term next fall. The state school commissioners have ordered a revision of the geographies and arithmetics. The writing books and first, second and third readers will also be modified. These changes will be made without additional expense to school patrons, as the scholars will take them up only as they are promoted from one grade to another. The changes will be made at the expense of the contractors.

Live and Learn.

It is estimated that there are two million chickens hatched in the United States every year, but not more than one-half of these reach the size for market. Cholera, gapes, pip, etc., kill millions every year. All these diseases are quickly cured by the use of Wells' Hoosier Poultry Powder. Price 25 cents. Sold by Matheny & Gerke.

A Merciful Man

Is merciful to his horse, and every horse owner should have a bottle of Morris' English Stable Liniment as a part of his remedy and useful outfit. A safe and speedy cure for barbed-wire cuts, wounds, galls, scratches, sore shoulders and back, sweeney, puffs, pollevil and all blemishes. There is nothing else like it. Price 50c and $1. Sold by Matheny & Gerke.

A Train of Thought.

Is frequently the result of contemplation of a summer outing and where it should be spent, and if properly followed it will lead to your taking a train of the Wisconsin Central from the Grand Central Passenger Station, Chicago, for Lake Villa, Antioch, Burlington, Mukwonago, Waukesha, Waupaca, Ashland or some other equally popular resort where rest, enjoyment, recreation and sport are to be had in all their plentitude. For descriptive pamphlet, "Along the Line," write JAS. C. POND, General Passenger Agent, Milwaukee, Wis.

Nothing Succeeds Like Success,

And that accounts for the wonderful sales of Infallible Scotch Cure, for rheumatism, gout, lumbago, sciatica, neuralgia, etc. Just introduced in America by the Hall Medicine Co., Toledo, Ohio. An infallible cure in Scotland, is proving itself an infallible cure here. A fair trial will convince you. For sale by Matheny & Gerke.

The Talk of Europe.

Is worth listening to if you are suffering with any form of nervous trouble, lassitude, mental depression, or any of the train of a thousand evils following LaGrippe. Whatever the cause, all nerve affections are cured by Vitaline and Nervetone. It is the talk of Europe. The world does not contain its equal. Beware of dangerous imitations. Prepared only by the Hall Medicine Company, Toledo, Ohio. Ask your druggist, and take no other. For sale by Matheny & Gerke.

Elder. S. S. Beaver, of McAllisterville, Juniata Co., Pa., says his wife is subject to cramp in the stomach. Last summer she tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy for it, and was much pleased with the speedy relief it afforded. She has sinced used it whenever necessary and found that it never fails. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Something wrong when you tire too easily. Something wrong when the skin is not clear and smooth. Something wrong when the blood is impure. Everything right when you take DeWitt's Sarsaparilla. It recommends itself.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its beneficial effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSCOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

CORRESPONDENCE

BUTLER.

Dr. Theodore Wood, of Angola, was calling on his brother physicians of this place last Sunday.

Our people were a little surprised to see Dick Abrams back on our streets again. The lesson may do him good.

Mr. Husselman, brother-in-law of Postmaster Jones, and son Oak, of Wichita, Kansas, are visiting in town. Little Oak, a lad of about five years, says they are going to stay here, that he is ten years old, but most people don't know it.

Bro. Cain is among us again. His coming seems to give general satisfaction. The church and Sunday school are in a healthy and prosperous condition. Some of the classes last Sabbath exceeded in numbers any Sabbath for the past four years.

Death has been busy in Butler and vicinity the past week. A man named Mattock, a recent arrival from near Moores Station, died very suddenly on Friday. Sophia Bowman, relict of Peter Bowman, aged 77 years, died Saturday morning and was buried Sunday. Services were at the M. E church, Rev. Stone officiating. Edwin Lowe, son of John Lowe, living near Hamilton, died Saturday. Catharine Rogers, whose obituary appears elsewhere, died Sunday morning. A man named Smith is reported dead at Pattee's, one mile east.

Died, at her home in Butler, Ind., on Sunday morning, April 15, 1894, in the 78th year of her age, Catherine Rogers. Catherine Champion was born in Beaver county, Pa., March 29, 1817, and with her father's family removed to Richland county, O., in [illegible]. In March, 1839, she was [illegible] in marriage to Henry F. Hiles, whose death occurred about three months [illegible]. On the 20th of February, [illegible] she was again united in marriage to William W. Snyder. To this union were born three sons, one of whom, William of this place, alone survives her. Mr. Snyder, who had previously married her sister whose death had occurred some time before this marriage, died June 16, 1850. On August 3d, 1856, she was again married to Samuel Rogers, who died June 19, 1873. Mr. Rogers removed to Indiana, settling near Otsego North, about 1865, living there three years, when he removed to Norwalk, O., where his death occurred. Mrs. Rogers came to Butler to live in 1882, since which time she has been a well known person in our place. Her funeral took place from the M. E. church last Monday, Rev. Cain officiating. She has been an active member of this church sixty-two years. She leaves a single brother, a single son and two grand-children to mourn her departure.

CONCORD.

Maud Baker has been quite sick, but her physician pronounced her out of danger Sunday.

Ed and Blanche Leighty, of St. Joe, drove up to Tell Elson's Sunday.

G. W. Draggoo and daughter Alice drove over to Auburn Saturday.

Henry Milton and daughter Belle, visited in St. Joe Friday.

Will Pence moved into G. W. Morr's property Thursday.

Charles Dunn, of Ohio, is now a resident of Concord.

Harlow Ulm cut his right foot Friday.

A few days ago a tramp entered the house of Wm. Knight in the absence of the family and stole $20 of his tax money and some other money he had in charge, beside some notes. No clue.

Last Monday John Fetter's two boys were hauling gravel and stopped on the bridge to rest the horses. In starting up L. J. was jerked off and badly stunned, but not seriously hurt.

J. W. Dills was out driving his newly purchased horse Sunday. He is evidently of the Alexander breed—while his feet were on the ground his ears could touch the skies.

Lancaster and Ella Morr, of Union Chapel, were the guests of their cousin, Mary Morr, last Sabbath.

UNION CHAPEL.
(LAST WEEK.)

The wet weather is making the farmers late with their oats.

Miss Ettie Pugsley was the guest of Mary Grimm last Sabbath.

The Union Chapel Sabbath school was reorganized April 1, the following officers were elected Mr. Blaker superintendent; Mr. Wise assistant; Mrs. Wise chorister; Mrs. Cramar assistant; Philip Carper secretary; Mr. Morr treasurer; teachers are Mr. Blaker, Philip Carper, Mr. Maurer, Mrs. Hoodlemier, and Mrs Blaker.

Mr. and Mrs Blaker, Mr. and Mrs George Pugsley, and Mr. and Mrs Ed Pugsley were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Cramar last Sabbath.

School closed at the Cobler school house last Thursday and the people of the neighborhood gave the teacher quite a surprise. Nearly all the parents of the school and a great many others came out with baskets well filled and prepared for a big dinner and a good time which they seemed to have. The teacher knew nothing of this and it gave her quite a surprise.

Protracted meeting commenced at this place Monday, April 8. We will [illegible] success.

Mrs. Samuel Morr and Miss Rose Shoff are on the sick list.

FARMS FOR THE MILLIONS.

The marvelous development of the States of Minnesota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, and Wyoming, within the last few years, has attracted attention in all parts of the world. It is not necessary, however, to search far for the causes of this wonderful growth, for this entire region, which is penetrated by The North-Western Line, teems with golden opportunities for enterprising farmers, mechanics and laborers who desire to better their condition. Here are lands which combine all varieties of soil, climate and physical feature that render them most desirable for agriculture or commerce. Rich rolling prairies, capable of raising the finest quality of farm products in luxurious abundance, can still be secured at low prices and upon most liberal terms, and in many cases good productive farms can be purchased for scarcely more than the yearly rental many eastern farmers are compelled to pay. Reaching the principal cities and towns and the richest and most productive farming districts of this favored region The North Western Line (Chicago & North-Western R'y) offers its patrons the advantages of ready markets, unexcelled train service, perfect equipment and all the comforts and conveniences known to strictly first-class railway travel. Maps, time tables and general information can be obtained of ticket agents of connecting lines, or by addressing W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent Chicago & North-Western R'y Chicago, Ill.

WATERLOO.

Rev. U. S. A. Bridge goes from Waterloo, to Silver Lake for the coming year. Rev. A. L. Weaver from Wolcottville, takes his place as pastor of the M. E. church here.

Katie Ahrent has gone to Silverton, Oregon, to visit the family of J. W. Sinclair. She may prolong her stay, and go into business there, if the prospect is favorable after her arrival.

Mrs J. A. Boozer made a trip to the county seat Tuesday.

Dr. George Kennedy is home from Cleveland, until time to go for the next year. His presence and his voice will be welcome in the choir at the Presbyterian church, and by a host elsewhere. He has many friends.

Mrs. Tillie Morel has a position in Mrs. Johnson's millinery department, through the busy season.

New families are moving into town, and houses filling up. They will find it an unusually healthy place.

The brick house on Center St. at the head of Railroad St. is occupied by Scott McCollough and family, new comers. From the variety of musical instruments in the yard, when moving and settling was in progress somebody has a taste in that direction. Music is popular in Waterloo.

Miss Ella Phillips went last week to Hicksville, where she has a position in a millinary establishment, and has had for at least several years past.

Rev. C. M. Pierce will fill the pulpit of the Evangelical church the coming year, in the place of Rev P. L. Brown, who is assigned to Lancaster Ill.

The portico trimmings and blinds of the Morel residence have been newly painted, and present an attractive appearance. George Morel was the artist, and may be proud of his work. Mrs Edge has also painted the front of her hotel.

The L. M. C. hold their regular session Tuesday evening, April 24. at the home of Mrs. Josephine Willis.

Your correspondent omitted last week to note the death of London Eichelberger which occurred a few days ago. He was 77 years of age. He came from Pennsylvania, and became a resident of Waterloo, many years since. His wife died in Uniontown over twenty years ago, leaving a family of small children, for the husband and father to care for.

Dr. Wm. Bevier and wife are making arrangements to move back in the brick building, where they were so comfortably settled and so convenient for the Dr's business. Mrs. Buss, the widowed daughter, will remain where the family now are on Franklin St. and keep house there.

Mrs. E. P. Dickinson and children went to Angola last Saturday for a few days. On Sunday the little daughter Harriet became quite ill, and at last account was not well enough to be brought home.

The W. C. T. U. ladies will give a social supper at the hall Saturday night.

Mrs. Lilly Brysland is or has been in Waterloo, your correspondant understands she is contemplating a trip West, where her sister resides, and where her mother, Mrs. Spencer also lives. Mrs. Brysland's present intention is to remain there likewise.

Milton Randell, who has been sick for a few weeks, died Tuesday morning April 17, about 10:30

Sam Beck is still quite poorly.

Last Tuesday the rain came down the greater part of the previous night, and more or less during Tuesday, but this did not prevent the members of the L. M. C. from assembling promptly on time at 5 o'clock P. M. at the pleasant home of Mrs. Mary Boozer. Three only were absent, two not in town, and one not well enough to brave the weather. It would be too tantalizing to begin to describe the numerous dishes going to make up the perfectly prepared and served supper, to which Mrs. B. seated her guests. That it was appreciated, and thoroughly enjoyed is unnecessary to say. The program for the evening was afterwards carried out, then adjournment on time.

SUMMIT.

Mrs. Herb Cramtom was the guest of Mrs. Violo Snowberger one day last week.

Ed. Huffman and wife of Hudson, visited Mr. H's mother, Mrs. Frank Hilt. in this place last Thursday.

Noah Mortorff of Arie Pa., visited his son Fredrick here last Wednesday.

Born to the wife of S Grear, April 10, a boy. The mother and child are both doing well.

Mrs. Kate Hilt was in Chicago the past week with her brother Wm. Kynette.

G. D. Conrad and wife visited their daughter, Mrs. Dock Boyer, near Hamilton last Sunday.

Mr. John Zimmerman and wife from west of Hudson took supper with their niece, Mrs Henry Lawson, last Saturday evening.

Mr John Moore and wife of Hudson, were in town one day last week.

Margaret McDongle and her little grand son Georgie Lawson, visited Wes. McDongle and wife in Pleasant Lake last week.

Rollie McDongle of Pleasant Lake visited his sister, Mrs. H. P. R. Lawson, last Sunday.

Fresh fish were so plentiful in Summit last week that they sold for 4 cts. a pound. Sam Forney our fisher, declares that all shall be supplied with fresh fish this season as long as the almighty dollar holds out.

GARRETT.

Mrs. Dr. Nusbaum, of Auburn, was in the city Monday.

E D Hartman, of Auburn, was here last Thursday.

P. K. David & Son have repainted their grocery.

J. J. Burns is working at Whiting, Indiana.

P. C. Sneed was in Chicago Thursday.

Mrs. D. B. VanFleit is visiting her mother near St. Joe.

House cleaning time is here.

John Ansbaugh, of Albion, was in the city Thursday.

Charley Vanscoik was at Walkerton last week.

Attorney J. E. Rose, of Auburn, was in the city Monday on professional business.

F. P. Seiler, of Fairfield, was in the city Monday. He is a candidate for Auditor, subject to the decision of the democratic nominating convention.

Tracy Little of Waterloo, was in town Sunday.

Mesdames Ella Vivian and J. G. Phillrick were in Chicago the latter part of the week.

The democracy of the city of Garrett met in mass convention at Hunsel's hall last Saturday evening and placed in nomination a ticket for the spring election. H. W. Thomas was chosen chairman of the covention and he proposed that all voters register before casting their ballots. He then called the candidates together and compelled them to pledge their support to the successful candidate. It is the opinion of all democrats that the ticket nominated on that evening was the best ever placed in the field in Garrett and that it should receive the hearty support of every voter in town. Following the are names of the gentlemen placed in nomination: For Mayor, W. J. Fredeick; Clerk, Alva Widmer; Treasurer, Bernard Hunsel; Marshal, J. J. Schreiner; For Council man 1st Ward, Wm. Hershberger; Councilman 2nd Ward, A. C. Cobbler; Councilman 3rd Ward, Amil Hilt. L. J. Gengler, E. P. Fitzgerald, and H. W. Thomas were chosen committeemen.

The republicans met in convention at Wagner's opera house and placed in nomination the following ticket: Mayor, Chas. W. Camp, Clerk, Wm. J. Martin; Treasurer, Edward P. Kenyon; Marshal, David W. Dare; Councilman 1st Ward, Jno. D. Paul; Councilman 2nd Ward, Dr. J. A. Clevenger; Councilman 3rd Ward, Elmer E. Clark.

A CLOSE CALL.

A Few Minutes More and Alfred Griswold Would Probably Have Been Sent to the State's Prison for a few Years.

Yesterday morning the case of Alfred Griswold vs the State of Indiana was commenced in the Whitley circuit court. The defendant was charged with stealing a large rope from Geo. Lawrence's barn and afterwards selling the same to G. H. Diffendarfer. I. B. McDonald was appointed by the court to defend Mr. Griswold who pleaded "not guilty." The jury was empaneled and the case was soon in progress. The witnesses were examined and the arguments for the state and defendant were made. The jury was carefully charged by the judge and they were then permitted to retire and agree upon a verdict. The general opinion of those who heard the case was that Griswold would receive a few years in the state's prison.

The rope which was supposed to have been stolen, was one that belonged to the county and when not in use was kept at the county jail. After the jury had been out for some time the sheriff happened to think that there was a rope about the same size and quality hanging in the cow stable at the jail. It was discovered in the trial that the county owned but one rope of that description, and he could not understand it, so he spoke to the judge about it, who at first thought the sheriff might be mistaken. Investigations were made and it was found that the supposed stolen rope was still in the cow stable. The jury was called in, the sheriff made his statement of the facts concerning the rope. Prosecutor Heller then made a motion that the case be dismissed, which was sustained by the court and Alfred Griswold who but a few minutes before could almost imagine seeing himself with the stripes on, serving a sentence for a crime that he was innocent of, was then a free man. The rope that Mr. Griswold took from Mr. Lawrence's barn was one that belonged to himself and his father and he had a perfect right to do with it as he pleased.—Columbia City Commercial.

Obituary.

JOHN HOOK has been a resident of DeKalb county thirty-nine years. He was born in June 14, 1840. When fifteen years of age, he came to DeKalb county, Ind., with his parents and on the farm near the old site of the Webster Mills, now owned by Jacob Christoffel, his brother-in-law. He is one of a family of five children, of whom one, a sister, survives. He was first united in marriage to Amanda A. Strole in September, 1862. To this union five sons and three daughters were born: Jacob M., Etta, Della, Nellie, Charlie, Cecil, Orna and Jeffie, of whom three sons and three daughters survive him. The mother of these children departed this life, October 22, 1882. January 15, 1884, he was united in marriage to Rose Ella Wanamaker daughter of E. A. Wanamaker, with whom he lived on his farm in that neighborhood, until, broken down in health, he moved to the town of Butler one year ago, living here until the time of his death Friday, April 6, 1894, at 5 p. m. He was a loving husband, an indulgent father and a kind neighbor, and was held in high esteem by all who knew him, as was attested by the large concourse of people assembled to pay their last tribute of respect to his memory. He was tenderly cared for by his venerable wife, his daughters, other relatives and kind neighbors during a prolonged illness of over one year's duration. Funeral services were conducted Sunday, April 8, by Rev. John A. Hootman—an old friend and neighbor—of the Christian church. The remains were laid to rest in the Wartenbee cemetery, formerly known as the Webster cemetery.

Stand by Your Guns.

In the midst of these conditions a studied attempt is made on the part of the opposition to create in the minds of the weak and timorous belief that the unfortunate situation of the past year was brought about by the return of the democracy to power and the legislation which it proposes to enact. Let no thoughtful citizen be deceived by such statements or be frightened through such assertions. Nothing could be further from the truth or less in accord with the facts. The Sherman silver act was not of democratic orgin, but found its birth with the oposition, its sanction in their caucuses, its enactments through their votes, and its vitality through the approval of it by their executive. Only in the erasement from the statue book and its removal as a source of weakness to the financial interests of the country has any democrat had aught to do with it.

So, too, the McKinley measure, yet the law of the land, the resultant effect of whose operation has been but to increase the ruin wrought by the Sherman law

The late administration found a treasury full to overflowing; they left it almost barren. They found gold coming into the country; their act sent it out. They found business confidence complete; they left it shaken and uncertain. In fine, that administration, and not the present one, must stand sponsor for the record of disasters of the year closed. If, as the junior senator from Massachusetts stated in his speech of Tuesday, "There is darkness before, and danger's voice behind." it finds its source in the legislation which he prompted, and which, because of hope for partisan advantage, he is unwilling to have speedly repealed.

Democrats may well feel solicitous for the party's future, and ask of the party's leadership such consecration to its interests as will meet the emergency which confronts it. Never was greater need of harmony of action or unity of purpose. It is now within the power of the democracy to crystalize into law the great reform to which its leaders and its rank and file have given so much of time, so much of energy, so much of thought. If it but accomplish this reform, none need doubt the glory of its future. Its return to the full control of government will then have been of substantial benefit to the American people, and upon its acts will be placed the stamp of popular approval. It cannot afford to hesitate or fail in accomplishing the desired end.

If there be those who have lost heart because of the reverses of the past months, let them remember that no great reform has ever yet been free of strenuous opposition and willful misrepresentation; no favored class has ever yielded the bounties and immunities granted without a struggle, and none ever will. Seeming darkness may crowd upon us and the cause we represent, but so long as the democracy shall have the wisdom, the courage, and the honesty "to ask for nothing which is not clearly right, and yield to nothing which is wrong." it cannot forfeit the confidence of the American people.—Comptroller Eckels at Boston, April 12.

Angola Magnet:—Some time ago, the United States Government decided to try the experiment of introducing and breeding reindeer in Alaska. Four hundred of these animals were accordingly purchased in Siberia, and transported to Alaska, where they were divided into herds of 100 each, and placed in charge of four missions. A recent report made by a Government agent, Dr. Sheldon Jackson, who had visited the missions and inspected the herds, pronounces the experiment a gratifying success. He recommends legislation for the protection of the reindeer, and for placing them under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury.

AROUND THE WORLD.

INTELLIGENCE FROM ALL PARTS OF THE GLOBE.

Proclamation Issued by the District of Columbia Commissioners to the Coxeyites—A Saloon Murder at Muncie, Ind.—Indiana Apportionment Act Held Constitutional.

THE COXEYITES

Are Warned Away from Washington.

President Cleveland is disturbed over the coming of Coxey's commonweal army, and has sought advice on the subject from members of his cabinet, prominent congressmen and others in authority. He had a long conference at the White House with the Chief of Police, Maj. Moore, and, acting upon the advice of those whom he has consulted, the President has practically decided to issue a semi-official proclamation admonishing all persons who contemplate visiting the national capital that they must respect the laws and conduct themselves in a peaceful and respectful manner or suffer the consequences. The executive warning will probably be given out as a statement, through the press associations, under the guise of an interview.

After a conference with Mr. S. T. Thomas, the attorney for the district, and Col. Moore, the chief of police of the city, the district commissioners issued a proclamation citing the futility of the effort of organized bodies now marching on Washington to influence congressional action, predicting many hardships and advising the men to reconsider their determination to come into the District of Columbia.

The commissioners declare there are no means for the maintainance of unemployed, that the law does not permit the soliciting of alms in our streets, and forbids parades, assemblages or orations in the capitol grounds and the obstruction of any public grounds, streets, highways, or avenues and the approaches to public or private buildings.

Prize Fighting Upheld.

The Olympic Club of New Orleans won a big victory in the Louisiana Supreme Court which affirmed the decision of the lower court, and the result of which means that the club may give fights again. The Olympic had arranged for a battle between Bowen and Abbott and the Attorney General entered proceedings for an injunction. The State held that the Sullivan-Corbett and similar affairs were not boxing contests but prize fights. The club contended that fights were fully authorized by the terms of the law. Before a jury in a civil court, a verdict was given in favor of the club. The State appealed to the supreme court. Chief Justice Nicholls dissented from the opinion.

A Saloon Murder.

Muncie (Ind.) special: Lemuel Bailey, an attorney, who recently moved here from New Corner, was found dying in the rear of a saloon here the other night. He was taken to his home and soon expired. He had been in the saloon all day, it is said. The verdict of the coroner's jury was to the effect that Attorney Bailey was murdered and that the crime was committed by Frank Benadum, William Watson, and Mike Gorman. Benadum is proprietor of the saloon where Bailey was found and Gorman is his bartender. Watson is a friend of Benadum from St. Louis, Mo. The trio were arrested on the charge of murder in the first degree and refused bail.

Seems to Be Contagious.

Gertrude Morse, daughter of Prof. Morse of Hanover College, has entered suit at Madison, Ind., for $10,000 damages for breach of marriage contract against Paul B. Scarff of Burlington, Iowa, a student at the college. Scarff is a member of the senior class, stands high socially, and is wealthy and brilliant.

Legislative Apportionment.

In deciding the complaint of A. W. Wishard to set aside the Legislative apportionment in Indiana in 1893, Judge Brown, of the Circuit Court, sustained the demurrer of the State, holding that it was not within the jurisdiction of the Court to review the action of the Legislature.

Fearful of Poverty.

Mrs. Amelia Mueller, a widow living on Central Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, took carbolic acid and tried to murder her father and mother in bed with a hammer. She was a dressmaker and fear of poverty has been preying on her mind. She died but her parents are not badly hurt.

Michigan Town Burning.

A Toledo, Ohio, special says: A terrific conflagration is raging in Blissfield, Mich., twenty miles from this city. The authorities of the town telegraphed for assistance and several engines were at once loaded on a special train and started for the scene.

Women Took a Hand.

The sheriff's deputies at the Oliver Works, Uniontown, Pa., arrested a man for stoning a workman. Fifty women assaulted the deputies furiously. The mob was not quelled till several women were knocked down. The situation is alarming.

Wouldn't Let Them Work.

Lasalle (Ill.) special: One thousand five hundred striking miners from this vicinity marched here to prevent the miners going to work, and caused a mob riot in which several were hurt. The miners were prevented from going to work.

Jerry Simpson May Die.

A special from Washington says: The illness of Representative Simpson of Kansas, has assumed an alarming phase.

Business Outlook.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Review of Trade says: New orders for future distribution are still materially restricted by uncertainty about action at Washington, and about the extent and outcome of labor difficulties. Most of the recovery realized in business has been made possible by the consent of the workers to accept lower wages for a time. If they insist on a restoration of wages before consumption is increased and prices restored, many works must stop. The great strike threatened by bituminous coal miners and the strike of associated employes on some railroads make the future less hopeful. The exports of gold had some influence and continuing loss in earnings some.

A RIOT AT DETROIT.

Two Dead and Fifteen Seriously Wounded.

Detroit special: A riot occurred at noon Thursday, at Connor's Creek, Hamtramock Township, four miles from the city, between strikers and regular city workmen. Pistols were freely used. Two men were shot dead and fourteen others were more or less seriously wounded.

At 5 o'clock an angry looking mob began to gather at the scene and when 7 o'clock arrived more than 500 men carrying pick axes and spades were patroling the road. Four policemen were sworn in as deputy sheriffs and a force of eighteen men were put to work. The strikers threatened to kill the first man who dared to attempt to do any work, and when one of the men, more daring than his fellow workmen, jumped into the ditch, he was savagely assaulted. The handful of deputies were overpowered and the strikers were left in possession for the time being. At 10 o'clock the mob further armed itself with clubs and cudgels, and it seemed as if it would be impossible to avoid trouble. Sheriff Collins was telephoned for and hurried to the scene, taking with him half a dozen deputies, and after a conference with the water board, about noon it was decided to abandon work for the day, and then the clash came. When Engineer Williams attempted to withdraw his men peacefully the strikers became furious and made an onslaught on one of the men. Sheriff Collins ordered the mob to disperse, threatening to shoot if the order was not obeyed. The mob appeared maddened, however, and continued the attack. Then the Sheriff ordered his posse to fire. He suited the action to the word, and fired three shots from his revolver in rapid succession. This was a signal for a volley from the deputies, who emptied their revolvers at the advancing mob. Two strikers were shot dead, and at least fifteen others are more or less dangerously wounded.

The slaughter had a demoralizing effect on the mob, and it fell back. Police headquarters were notified and a large force of policemen hurried to the scene.

TOOLS LAID DOWN.

The Great Strike of the Coal-Diggers Is On.

Columbus (Ohio) special: The hour of 12 Saturday marked the beginning of one of the greatest strikes in the history of the world. In accordance with the program of their national organization fully 130,000 men left the mines in every bituminous region in the United States.

President John McBride, of the United Mine Workers of America, is in receipt of telegrams from nearly all the doubtful districts, and the information conveyed him proves that the order to lay down the pick was generally obeyed. The word received by President McBride was from Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, Colorado, and the Indian Territory. In all of the doubtful sections of these States the miners ceased to work to a man. Every report indicates uniform action of the miners, and President McBride states that the movement is fully as general as he expected.

The miners are striking for the restoration of the inter-state wage agreement which was abandoned during the summer, first voluntarily by a small number of miners in the Pittsburgh district, and thus forced a reduction in every competitive district in the United States.

Four Men Drowned.

San Francisco special: News has been received here of the loss of the fishing schooner Dauntless and the drowning of four men at the mouth of Klamath River, on the North California coast. The schooner was completely wrecked. All on board perished with her.

The drowned are: Capt. C. Marques, two seamen named Thompson and Brown, and Avery Edson, a youth, whose parents live at Crescent City. The bodies of Capt. Marques, Avery Edson and one of the sailors have since been caught up on the beach. The disaster resulted through an attempt to put at sea from the Klamath River during a gale.

Fatal Act of Will Eaton.

At Marshall, Ill., Will Eaton, aged 20, was killed under remarkable circumstances. Mrs. Brown, a wealthy lady, received a note through the postoffice demanding that she leave $200 at a certain place near her residence, or her house would be blown up. The officers were notified, and an envelope containing a lot of paper was placed as demanded. At the appointed time a man was seen taking it, and was ordered to surrender. He started to run, and several shots were fired, the fugitive falling dead. He was found to be the son of John Eaton, one of the best and most respected men in the city.

For the Unemployed.

Representative Davis, (Pop.) of Kansas has introduced in the House a long bill reciting the woes of the unemployed, and directing the Secretary of War to immediately enlist 500,000 men in an industrial volunteer army to serve a period of one year after enlistment. The army is to be clothed and fed and paid as regular soldiers. Instead of drilling they are to be employed on public works, such as canals, rivers, and harbors, public highways, etc. To defray the expenses of this army, the Secretary of the Treasury is to issue $50,000,000 of legal tender notes and certain other forms of currency.

Fatal Wreck.

A bad wreck occurred on the Bay City division of the Michigan Central, by which two men were killed and another fatally injured. The train consisted of thirteen cars, and left Detroit at midnight. When half a mile from Vassar, Mich., a flat car next to the engine jumped the track and was followed by six other cars, all of which were badly smashed. Three tramps were riding on a flat car and fell under a heavily loaded merchant's car. Two of them, named Brown and Delabo, were instantly killed. James Cook was taken out alive, but will die. None of the trainmen were injured.

A Deserted City.

A special from Lapini, Mexico, says the reported discovery of a wonderful deserted city in a remote and almost inaccessible section of the Sierre Madre Mountains, in the State of Durango, has been completely verified by Maurice Lentow and a party of explorers, who left here about a month ago for the express purpose of verifying the report. Mr. Lentow states the population of the city could not have been less than 25,000. They bring back many curiosities taken from the abandoned residences and temples of worship.

A Floating Bottle's Story.

A bottle was found on Clatsop beach near Astoria, Oregon, containing a small piece of blotting paper on which was written: "Ship Mary Brown stranded off Alaskan coast and all hands lost. Anyone finding this, please notify San Francisco papers." The communication was written with a pencil, and was signed C. D. Cummings, New York; C. L. Buslush, San Francisco, and T. J. Peabody, Pennsylvania.

Rolled Him Like a Barrel.

Thomas Burch, aged 60, weighing 220 pounds, was struck by a Big Four switch engine at Muncie, Ind., and fatally injured. He would have been ground to pieces only for his shape. The step of the engine where the cowcatcher belongs rolled him fifty feet like a barrel, until the engine stopped. One arm was nearly torn off, and he received internal injuries.

Lieut. Maney Acquitted.

Lieut. James A. Maney, of the Fifteenth Infantry, U. S. A., stationed at Fort Sheridan, Ill., was found by a United States jury at Chicago, not guilty of the charge of murdering Capt. Hedberg, of the same regiment, last October, at the garrison. He pleaded self-defense and the charge of Judge Grosscup to the jury sustained the plea.

Dreadful Earthquake Shock.

Athens special: The severest earthquake of the last ten years shook Athens, Thebes, Atalanta and several other cities recently. Many houses were damaged. Thebes was almost destroyed. Two-thirds of the houses in the town were damaged and most of them were ruined. Scores of families are homeless.

A Banker Indicted.

Four new indictments have been returned by the Grand Jury at Terre Haute, Ind., against John S. Beach, whose private bank, the Prairie City, failed last August with $140,000 deposits and no cash assets, worth only 10 cents on the dollar. The fight to bring Beach to trial is being stubbornly resisted.

Big Fire at St. Louis.

Fully $125,000 went up in smoke at St. Louis in a fire that destroyed the building known as the Crown Linseed Oil works, at Sixteenth street and Clark avenue, but lately used as a grain warehouse by the Ryan Commission company, who own an elevator adjoining the burned building.

Mexico Shaken.

Oaxaca, (Mex.) special: An earthquake shock has been felt in this city and other parts of Southern Mexico. The shock came in the usual undulations, and lasted several seconds. No particular damage was done, although tall buildings and church towers were made to rock somewhat.

Wrecked by a Cow.

In a wreck on the Chesapeake, Ohio and Southwestern near Keysey's Station, Ky., Charles Morrison, colored brakeman, was instantly killed and two tramps injured. A number of cars were demolished. The train was on a steep grade and struck a cow, which fell under the wheels, derailing it.

Fighting a Pest.

A secret meeting of representatives of the health departments of Wisconcin, Indiana, Minnesota, Michigan, and Illinois, was held recently to consider the small-pox epidemic raging in Chicago. The question of declaring a quarantine against the city was discussed.

A Bold Thief.

An unknown robber entered the office of the County Treasurer of the courthouse at Portland, Ore., shot the cashier in charge, Charles B. Mallarkey, and then, jumping through a window, made his escape with about $2,000 of the county's funds.

Will Not Strike.

The Indiana block coal miners, in delegate convention at Brazil, notwithstanding the demand of the officers to the contrary, decided by a vote of 2 to 1 not to strike, but to carry out the contract with the operators, expiring May 1.

Jason Brown Dying.

Seymour (Ind.) special: Congressman J. R. Brown, who has been suffering for some months from a cancerous growth on the lower lip, is greatly prostrated, and his condition is regarded as exceedingly serious.

Killed by Lightning.

Lightning struck a house on the farm of E. M. Spencer, near Mt. Vernon, Ind., instantly killing James Jenniler and severely shocking George Kirk.

A New Senator.

The Hon. Thomas J. Jarvis has been appointed and has accepted the United States Senatorship to succeed the late Senator Vance from North Carolina.

Toledo After the Jackson-Corbett Fight.

A Toledo, Ohio, Athletic club is to be incorporated with a capital of $100,000, for the express purpose of securing the Corbett-Jackson fight.

Ended Her Trials.

Mrs. R. Ward, living three miles south of Oberlin, Ohio, committed suicide by hanging herself to an apple tree in the back yard.

Farmer Assassinated.

Henry Worley, a Murray County, Georgia, farmer was shot dead in his field by White Caps.

RIOTING AT OMAHA.

GEN. KELLY'S SYMPATHIZERS SEIZE A TRAIN.

The Commonwealer Fears the Government and Refuses to Accept—Railroad Officials Order Tracks Torn Up—Coxey Movement Becoming Serious.

For ten hours Friday 25,000 men of Omaha, Council Bluffs and South Omaha stood ready to go to any end to help Kelly's army. Mass-meetings were held in all three cities, men marched from one to another, appeals were made to the railway officials, to Gov. Jackson and to other sources, and finally a train was taken by a committee of railroad men to the camp at Weston. The Rock Island agent at Weston and a man named Chittenden sent section hands outside the switches to tear up the track. The fact that a train of ten cars with a couple of hundred men on board would be ditched was overlooked in the desire to prevent any aid from reaching Kelly. Kelly's army was anxiously waiting for results of the efforts of friends in Omaha and Council Bluffs. The people near the place imitated the example of Omaha's citizens and gave the army food. Twenty-one citizens of Persia filled several wagons with provisions and drove over to the place. They could not get the railways to move the provisions. The citizens of Underwood sent over a load of comforters and blankets. The Milwaukee Company ran all their trains and cars out from the Bluffs in the afternoon, and then pulled up the tracks near Neola, so that if the men captured a train they could not go far.

About 3 o'clock word was passed around that unless something was done before 4 o'clock a move would be made on the railroads. The throng which was packed about Bayless Park in Council Bluffs had been getting cold and was gradually fading away when the beating of a drum was heard on the west side of the square, and a crowd of 200 women headed by Mrs. Herman was seen on the march to the depots. The line was made up of well-clothed mothers and wives, and at almost every corner an accession was received.

When the Rock Island depot was reached there were nearly 1,000 women in line. Arrived there a committee was detailed to make an inspection of the neighboring roundhouses. This was done, but not an engine was found. While the throng was in deliberation another drum was heard and a few blocks west was seen a line of fluttering flags. These were carried by the main body of men on the way to the transfer. These were joined by the women and a procession of over 2,000 wound its way down over the tracks toward the depot. On the walk to the depot an engine labeled Union Pacific, No. 1268, was met, and answering to the argument of railway ties on the rails it came to a stop. Nick Wicks, a veteran engineer, was in charge, and as he looked out of the cab window in surprise half a dozen women and a lot of men climbed into the cab and on the tender. Dozens of others boarded the pilot and ranged themselves on the sides of the boiler. Then a youthful-looking man wearing a tall silk hat and giving his name as George Wicks climbed into the cab and said: "Papa, you had better get off," and papa got off. The young man with the tall hat evidently knew his business, and after shooting the engine up and down the tracks for half an hour, had attached to his engine twenty-seven cars with which he pulled out for Weston.

Desperate Effort to Stop the Train.

When the news reached Weston that a train was coming over the Rock Island and tracks to rescue Kelly, Agent Chittenden sent for the section boss. This individual was ordered to take his men and tear up enough track west of the west switch to prevent the train from reaching town. Work was begun at once, but before it proceeded far the Kellyites had surrounded the section men and persuaded them to desist. The section men threw down their tools, one rail having been removed. Kelly's men quickly replaced the rail and drove home the spikes. Then Agent Chittenden came up and ordered the section boss to tear up the track again. His deliberate attempt to wreck the train aroused the wrath of the Kellyites. Their demonstrations were such that the agent fled back to the depot, followed by the section men. The attempt to ditch the train was abandoned and in a moment the headlight shone along the frosty rail and a scream from the whistle announced the coming of relief. Gen. Kelly was up-town at the Lemen meeting, but came to the depot, when a big engineer came forward and said: "Gen. Kelly, we have here a train of cars to take you back to Council Bluffs. Come, get on board."

Kelly, after a consultation with his friends, declined to take the train. It would put his men in the light of lawbreakers. Besides, the train was the property of the Union Pacific, and that road being in the hands of the Federal courts Kelly was afraid he would bring the United States authorities down upon him if he took the train.

Wire to Railroad Presidents.

While these scenes were being enacted, committees were besieging the telegraph offices with messages to the presidents of the Iowa trunk lines.

The following, signed by the Hon. W. H. M. Pusey "and 5,000 others, was sent to Marvin Hughitt, President of the Chicago and Northwestern; R. R. Cable, President Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific; Roswell Miller, President Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway, Chicago:

Kelly's army is at Weston exposed to the elements, with provisions for two days; are suffering terribly, but patient and united in their determination to go through. Have thus far committed no trespass whatever; are orderly, obedient to all commands of their leader, and are being furnished with provisions and transportation for the same by the charity of the people of Iowa. We have thrown the responsibility upon our State authorities for the great gravity of the situation. Cannot you, gentlemen, for the great corporations you represent assume, to do, in the interests of humanity, what you would not be justified in doing except in this great emergency?

This was followed by several others in the same strain, and then the committee of six of the workingmen's army sent the following:

To R. R. Cable, Marvin Hughitt, Roswell Miller, Chicago:

Omaha and Council Bluffs request immediate transportation for Kelly and his army from Council Bluffs to Chicago.

Replies were received from the messages to the railway presidents denying the request, and then the conference between the citizens' committee and the railroad officials ended. Chairman Tichnor announced the result of the conference, and it was greeted by a roar of howls, jeers and hisses. President R. R. Cable, of the Rock Island, stated that their company could not carry Kelly's army, and gave as a reason that such a movement would only be transferring the scene of trouble from one city to another. He says Gov. Jackson is in full possession of the railway company's views of the situation and he is the one to look to for relief. The replies of President Hughitt, of the Chicago and Northwestern, and General Manager Earling, of the C., M. & St. P., were similar in substance.

WANTS AN INDUSTRIAL ARMY.

Bill for the Enlistment of 500,000 Men—Precautions at the Capital.

Washington, D. C.—Representative Davis (pop., Kan.) has introduced in the House a bill reciting the woes of the unemployed and directing the Secretary of War to immediately enlist "500,000 men in an industrial volunteer army to serve for the period of one year after enlistment." The army is to be clothed and fed and paid as regular soldiers. Instead of drilling they are to be employed on public works, such as canals, rivers, and harbors, public highways, etc. To defray the expenses of this army the Secretary of the Treasury is to issue $50,000,000 of legal-tender notes and certain other forms of currency. The bill specifies the following issues of money to pay the army: Fifty millions to replace the waste and destruction of notes under the act of 1878; $150,000,000 to replace national-bank currency retired; $100,000,000 annually hereafter to keep up the volume of money.

The Peffer resolution for the appointment of a reception committee for Coxey's army of the commonweal, to be known in Senate parlance as "the committee on communications," came up in the Senate and received some very rough handling. Senator Hawley, who dealt the blows, said he would have preferred to have some member of the dominant party in the Senate take the floor, for certainly the speech of Senator Allen, of Nebraska, ought not to be allowed to go forth to the country as representing in any degree the views of the Senate.

Provision for the accommodation of the army of the commonweal is contemplated in a resolution introduced in the House by Representative Boen (of Minnesota. This resolution instructs the Secretary of War to provide within the District of Columbia a camping ground and tents for all organized bodies of laboring people who may come within the District, and to see that their rights as citizens are respected and protected during their stay here. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Coxey Has to Pay Tolls.

Hagerstown, Md.—The march of the commonweal over from Williamsport was made under most favorable circumstances. The pike was dry but dustless and the trees and fields green with the recent rains. At the toll gate, a mile outside of Hagerstown, there was a delay, the old, white-haired gateman refusing to let the army pass without paying tolls on the horses. Browne declared that this was another extortion of monopolists, and ordered forward the flag. The old gateman respectfully doffed his hat to the stars and stripes, but shut down the bars tight on the horsemen and carriages. Coxey was forced to pay 98 cents toll. The army was accompanied into town by a constantly growing crowd of cyclists, horsemen and pedestrians, and the march through Hagerstown to the camp was, relatively, equal to an inaugural procession in Washington.

With Hogan in Command.

Helena, Mont.—Coxey's army, under command of Hogan, have started from Butte, 500 strong, to march to Washington. Two miles out they attempted to capture a Northern Pacific freight train. Officers of the railroad company wired Gov. Richards, demanding protection and intimating that they would hold the State responsible if the men compelled them to grant transportation.

Recruits at Indianapolis.

Indianapolis, Ind.—A hundred Indianapolis men have joined the branch of "Gen." Frye's army being organized in this city by "Col." Aubrey and "Lieut." Salisbury.

LIQUOR TO GIVE AWAY.

Supreme Court Settles the South Carolina Dispensary Law.

A Columbia, S. C., dispatch says that Gov. Tillman has decided not to fight any further the decision of the Supreme Court declaring the South Carolina dispensary law unconstitutional, and every dispensary in the State will be closed. The State Board of Control will meet and issue orders closing the dispensaries. There are at least three hundred dispensary employes in the State and they were all paid off in anticipation of the State going out of the liquor business.

Attorney General Buchanan, who is also a member of the Board of Control, says that as there is considerable doubt among lawyers as to whether the decision of the Supreme Court really inaugurates prohibition or not, the State authorities in the course of a day or two will institute proceedings by a test case in order to get the court to declare itself explicitly on the subject. He is of the opinion himself that the effect is to absolutely prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the State. The State now has on hand about $50,000 worth of liquors which cannot be disposed of except by act of the Legislature. The general opinion is that an extra session will be called in a short time and some disposition made of this immense stock. In case it is determined that the State is really under prohibitory law by reason of the decision, it is quite likely that the Legislature will pass some stringent law looking to its enforcement. The Attorney General intimated that in such case about 300 constables will be appointed to see that the law is enforced. The general opinion of the people is that the Governor is glad to get rid of the dispensary law.

CONDITION OF THE TREASURY.

A Loss of $10,000,000 Looked For on the April Balance.

A loss of nearly $10,000,000 is expected in the general balance of the national treasury for the month of April. Five million dollars of this will be due to the payment of interest on the 4 per cent. bonds and $5,000,000 to the excess of current expenditures over receipts. The loss thus far, says a Washington dispatch, without including interest, has been $3,479,031, the total receipts having been $12,149,968, and the expenditures $17,629,000. The customs receipts still lag behind and do not seem likely to exceed $10,000,000 for the month. The internal revenue receipts have already reached $6,936,443, and will be nearly $13,000,000 for the month. The pension expenditures thus far have been $7,925,000 and will be about $12,000,000 for the entire month of April. The expenditures for April, 1893, were $12,871,761, and for the first twelve months of the fiscal year, $13,678,345. The figures for the corresponding ten months ending April 30, 1894, will be about $119,000,000. The general cash balance on May 1 will be between $124,000,000 and $125,000,000. The Treasury gained $28,000 in gold Wednesday and no fear is felt for the gold reserve, while foreign exchange shows no permanent advance and the excess of exports of merchandise continues to be large. It is expected that favorable crop reports, with the early summer shipments, will make the situation still more favorable to this country and that such small shipments of gold as occur will be partly supplied by the New York banks.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crimes, Casualties and General News Notes.

Condensed State News.

W. R. MORRIS' farm residence, near Shelbyville, burned.

RICHMOND police have been decked out in new uniforms.

CRAWFORDSVILLE people are advocating municipal ownership of their water works plant.

CONTRACT for the construction of the Yellow River ditch, near Warsaw, has been let for $21,000.

ELKHART REVIEW calls on the State Fish Commissioner to protect fish in lakes and streams near that city.

WARDEN PATTON, of the Prison South, shot Chas. Houston, a stubborn convict, in the arm. Houston refused to work.

THE 2-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Wardwell of Elwood was fatally kicked in the forehead by a vicious horse.

AN attempt was made to assassinate John Grift at Elwood the other night. Some unknown person shot at him, but the bullets flew wide.

MOSES SKINNER'S family, near Petersburgh, was stricken with diphtheria a few days ago and five out of eight children are dead.

JAMES RHODA, a drayman, crossing the Lake Shore tracks in a wagon at Chesterton, was killed by the fast train. Both horses were killed.

FRANK LACKEY, brother of J. S. Lackey, the well known Cambridge City horseman, was seriously injured in a runaway at Richmond.

RESIDENTS of West Lafayette, where Purdue University is situated, have decided to raise $5,000 toward the rebuilding of the destroyed Haivelon shops.

MRS. ELIZABETH SCHLETTNER, who was knocked from a Big Four Railroad bridge at Yorktown by a freight train, died from her injuries. She was 60 years old.

WILLIAM BLACK, a farmer near Decatur, uncovered a skeleton while plowing. The evidence points to a foul crime years ago, when an old house stood on the spot.

MUNCIE police were supplied with whips to drive tramps out of town. They found a gang of hobos and used the lash with telling effect. The blood poured out of one man's back.

TWO FARMERS near Anderson had a dispute over settling the cost of a fence, damaged by a son of one of the men while "breaking" a colt, and up to date the lawyers' fees and court costs amount to $600. The case is not yet settled.

THE State Militia Encampment this summer will be held at Fairview Park, Indianapolis. It is expected that 2,300 soldiers will be in camp, and the expenses of the encampment will be reduced by holding it in the center of the State.

HORACE DUSHARP, an employe at the glass factory, was killed at the Panhandle crossing of High street, Hartford City. Dushart is a Belgian, aged 45, and, it is thought, walked to the point where the train struck him in his sleep.

A TRAMP caused consternation at the South Bend police station a few days ago by exhibiting his chest, which was covered with eruptions that looked like small-pox sores. He quieted the police by telling them that they were artificially produced to excite sympathy.

THE Wabash Railroad has settled all damages and claims caused by the great wreck at Kingsbury, last September, wherein twelve passengers were killed. The amount foots up $360,000. Of this sum $160,000 was paid the families of the killed and to the injured.

JAY BARNES, a book dealer of Valparaiso, is the possessor of a German Bible printed in Strasburg, Germany, in 1556, for which he has received an offer of $500 from a collector in Chicago. The book passed through the Chicago fire, and was bought by Mr. Barnes for $1.

MOSES GROOMS, of Richmond, has been notified that he is one of the heirs to an estate valued at $600,000 left by his uncle, Reuben Mockaley. The chief part of the property lies in Western Missouri, a short distance from Kansas City and Independence. Mr. Grooms has a brother at Greencastle who will also share in the estate.

SOME few weeks ago Dr. Hindsman of Indianapolis, opened up dental parlors at Sheridan. The other day he was vulcanizing a set of teeth and was using an old vulcanizer without a steam register. While out of the laboratory the machine let loose and blew a hole in the ceiling and iron roof large enough to throw a good sized dog through. The report was equal to that of a small sawmill. The damage was considerable in the laboratory.

HENRY HAWKINS, who is dying from consumption in the Prison North, has been pardoned by Gov. Matthews. Hawkins was sent from St. Joseph County last June for two years for burglary. He is only 19 years old, and up to the time of the burglary was an honest, hard-working boy. Though not a robust boy, he did not appear to have consumption when he entered the prison, though he was probably predisposed to it. The disease developed with confinement, and the prison physician says Hawkins is liable to die any day, and that his death is but the question of a very short time. His pardon was urged by the Judge, Prosecuting Attorney, many citizens and the leading newspapers. It appears to have been a case deserving of executive clemency.

THE other night Otto Gustafson, a prominent young man of Porter, went to a dance in the country. Next morning his mangled remains were found along the Michigan Central tracks west of town. His head was the only part of him recognizable. How he met his death is a mystery.

OLIVER SONGER and Miss Samantha Wright were married at Anderson and went to visit the bride's mother, Mrs. Jennie Riley, near that city. Mrs. Riley is at times a raving maniac, and while Songer slept, she took a beer bottle and crushed his skull. He will die. Mrs. Songer is prostrated.

MRS. CAROLINE WAHLER, who died at Terre Haute, bequeathed $5,000 to the Concordia colleges at Fort Wayne and St. Louis.

THE other night burglars entered the store of T. J. Reece & Co., at Kempton, twelve miles west of Tipton, and stole about $500 worth of merchandise. Next morning a farmer found the plunder in his hay mow and notified the officers. They laid in wait for the thieves, who returned at night. There were three, but the officers captured only one. The burglar was taken to Tipton and lodged in jail. The prisoner refuses to tell who his accomplices were and refuses to give his name, address, or residence.

CURRENT COMMENT.

The Breckinridge Verdict.

The misfortune of the case is that it was impossible to take money from the defendant without giving it to the plaintiff, who was quite as undeserving.—New York Times.

Madeline's chances of collecting $15,000 from Willie are not brilliant. If that offer of $5.00 a week to join an opera company is still open she should accept it.—New York Advertiser.

Col. Breckinridge is not likely to succeed in any appeal from the verdict, and Miss Pollard is not likely to succeed in obtaining its payment, for the famous defendant is without property.—New York Press.

The jury gives Miss Pollard a verdict and $15,000 damages. It is a righteous verdict and a very just one. It shows that the testimony made the same impression upon the jury that it made upon the minds of just men and women everywhere—New York World.

Opinions may differ as to the amount of damages which should have been awarded the plaintiff, but few of the many thousands who have read the reports of the trial as it proceeded will dissent from the conclusion of the jury in favor of the plaintiff.—New York Tribune.

The question is not the particular issue decided by the Washington jury, or whether Miss Pollard was entitled to her damages for breach of promise of marriage; but whether such baseness as Breckinridge has confessed unblushingly shall go unpunished by the jury of all society.—New York Sun.

From the moment that Breckinridge took the witness stand and cried out, like Adam in the Garden of Eden, that the fault was all the woman's, he became an object of universal contempt. So far as public opinion is concerned, the defendant was found guilty long before the trial ended.—New York Recorder.

UNITED AT LAST

BY

MISS M E BRADDON

CHAPTER IV.

"OFFEND HER AND SHE KNOWS NOT HOW TO FORGIVE.

Three days after the little dinner in Half-Moon street, Mrs. Walsingham sat at her solitary breakfast-table rather later than usual, dawdling over the morning papers, and wondering drearily what she should do with the summer day before her. She had seen nothing of Gilbert Sinclair since the dinner, and had endured an agony of self-torment in the interval. His name appeared in one of the morning journals among the guests at a distinguished countess' ball on the previous evening, and in the list of names above Mr. Sinclair she found those of Lord Clanyarde and his daughter. There had been a time when Gilbert set his face against all fashionable entertainments, voting them the abomination of desolation. He had changed of late, and went everywhere, raising fond hopes in the breasts of anxious mothers with large broods of marriageable daughters waiting for their promotion.

Mrs. Walsingham sat for some time looking vacantly at the long list of names, and thinking of the man she loved. Yes, she loved him. She knew his nature by heart; knew how nearly that obstinate, selfish nature verged upon brutality, and loved him nevertheless. Something in the force of his character exercised a charm over her own imperfect disposition. She had believed in the strength of his affection for herself, which had been shown in a passionate, undisciplined kind of manner that blinded her to the shallowness of the sentiment. She had been intensely proud of her power over this rough Hercules, all the more proud of his subjugation, because of that half-hidden brutishness which she had long ago divined in him. She liked him for what he was, and scarcely wished him to be better than he was. She only wanted him to be true to her. When he had asked her, years ago, to be his wife, she had frankly told him the story of her youth and marriage. Her husband was five and twenty years her senior, a man with a constitution broken by nearly half a century of hard living, and she looked forward hopefully to a speedy release from a union that had been hateful to her. She had believed that it would be possible to retain Gilbert's affection until the time when that release should come without sacrifice to her reputation. Had she not believed and hoped this, it is impossible to say what guilty sacrifice she might have been willing to make rather than lose the man she loved. She had hoped to keep him dangling on, governed by her womanly tact, a faithful slave, until the Colonel, who led a stormy kind of existence about the Continent, haunting German gambling tables, should be good enough to depart this life. But the Colonel was a long time exhausting his battered constitution, and the flowery chain in which Mrs. Walsingham held her captive had faded considerably with the passage of years.

A loud double knock startled the lady from her reverie. Who could such an early visitor be? Gilbert himself, perhaps. He had one of those exceptional constitutions to which fatigue is a stranger, and would be no later astir to-day for last night's ball. Her heart fluttered hopefully, but sunk again with the familiar anguish of disappointment as the door was opened and a low, deferential voice made itself heard in the hall. These courteous tones did not belong to Gilbert Sinclair.

A card was brought to her presently, with James Wyatt's name upon it, and "on special business, with many apologies," written in pencil below the name, in the solicitor's neat hand.

"Shall I show the gentleman to the drawing-room, ma'am, or will you see him here?" asked the servant.

"Ask him to come in here. What special business can Mr. Wyatt have we me?" she wondered.

The solicitor came into the room as she asked herself this question, looking very fresh and bright, in his careful morning costume, with a hot-house flower in the button-hole of his perfectly fitting coat. He was more careful of his toilet than many handsomer men, and knew how far the elegance of his figure and the perfection of his dress went to atone for his plain face.

"My dear Mrs. Walsingham," he began, "I owe you a thousand apologies for this unseasonable intrusion. If I did not think the nature of my business would excuse——"

"There is nothing to be excused. You find me guilty of a very late breakfast, that is all. Why should you not call at half-past ten as well as at half-past two? It was very kind of you to come at all."

"I hold it one of my dearest privileges to be received by you," he replied, with a certain grave tenderness. "There are some men who do not know when they are happy, Mrs. Walsingham. I am not one of those."

She looked at him with a surprise that was half scornful.

"Pray spare me the pretty speeches which make you so popular with other women," she said. "You spoke of business just now. Did you really mean business?"

"Not in a legal sense. My errand this morning is of rather a delicate nature. I would not for the world distress or offend you by any unwarranted allusion to your domestic relations, but I believe I am the bearer of news which can scarcely have reached you yet by any other channel, and which may not be altogether unwelcome."

"What news can you possibly bring me?" she asked, with a startled look.

"Would it distress you to hear that Colonel Walsingham is ill—dangerously ill, even?"

Her breath came quicker as he spoke.

"I am not hypocrite enough to pretend that," she answered. "My heart has long been dead to any feeling but anger—I will not say hatred, though he has deserved as much—where that man is concerned. I have suffered too much by my alliance with him."

"Then let me be the first to congratulate you upon your release from bondage. Your husband is dead."

Clara Walsingham's cheek blanched and she was silent for some moments, and then she asked in a steady voice, "How did you come by the news of his death?"

"In the simplest and most natural manner. My business requires me to be au courant as to continental affairs, and I get several French and German newspapers. In one of the last I found the account of a duel, succeeding upon a quarrel at the gaming-table, in which your husband fell, shot through the lungs. He only survived a few hours. His opponent was a Frenchman and is now under arrest. Shall I read you the paragraph?"

"If you please," answered Mrs. Walsingham, with perfect calmness of manner. Her heart was beating tumultuously, nevertheless. She had a dismal conviction that no advantage—that is to say, not that one advantage for which she longed—would come to her from her husband's death. How eagerly she had desired his death once! To-day the news gave her little satisfaction.

Mr. Wyatt took a slip of newspaper from his card-case, and read her the brief account of the Colonel's exit from this mortal strife. Duels were common enough in Prussia, and the journal made very little of the sanguinary business.

"As many of my friends believe me to have been left a widow long ago, I shall make no fuss about this event; and I shall be very grateful if you will be good enough not to talk of it anywhere," Mrs. Walsingham said, by and by, after a thoughtful pause.

"I shall be careful to obey you," answered the lawyer.

"I wonder how you came to guess that I was not a widow, and that Colonel Walsingham was my husband. He took me abroad directly after our marriage, and we were never in England together."

"It is a solicitor's business to know a great many things, and in this case there was a strong personal interest. You accused me just now of flattering women; and it is quite true that I have now and then amused myself a little with the weaker sex. Until about a year ago I believed myself incapable of any real feeling—of any strong attachment—and had made up my mind to a life of solitude, relieved by the frivolities of society. But at that time a great change came over me, and I found that I too was doomed to suffer life's great fever. In a word, I fell desperately in love. I think you can guess the rest."

"I am not very good at guessing, but I suppose the lady is some friend of mine, or you would scarcely choose me for a confidante. Is it Sophy Morton? I know you admire her."

"As I admire wax dolls, or the Haidees and Zuleikas of an illustrated Byron," answered Mr. Wyatt, with a wry face. "Sophy Morton would have about as much power to touch my heart or influence my mind as the wax dolls or the Byronic beauties. There is only one woman I have ever loved, or ever can love, and her name is Clara Walsingham."

Mrs. Walsingham looked at him with unaffected surprise.

"I am sorry that I should have inspired any such sentiment, Mr. Wyatt. I can never return it."

"Is that your irrevocable reply?"

"It is," she answered, decisively.

"You reject the substance—an honest man's love—and yet you are content to waste the best years of your life upon a shadow."

"I don't understand you."

"Oh, yes, I think you do. I think you know as well as I do how frail a reed you have to lean on when you put your trust in Gilbert Sinclair."

"You have no right to speak about Mr. Sinclair," answered Clara Walsingham, with an indignant flush. "What do you know of him, or of my feelings in relation to him?"

"I know that you love him. Yes, Clara, it is the business of a friend to speak plainly; and even at the hazard of incurring your anger, I will do so. Gibert Sinclair is not worthy of your affection. You will know that I am right before long if you do not know it now. It is not in that man's nature to be constant under difficulties, as I would be constant to you. Your hold upon him has been growing weaker every year."

"If that is true, I shall discover the fact quite soon enough from the gentleman himself," replied Mrs. Walsingham, in a hard voice, and with an angry cloud upon her face. "Your friendship, as you call it, is not required to enlighten me upon a subject which scarcely comes within the province of a solicitor. Yes, Mr. Wyatt, since plain speaking is to be the order of the day, I am weak enough and blind enough to care for Gilbert Sinclair better than for anyone else upon this earth, and if I do not marry him I shall never marry at all. He may intend to jilt me. Yes, I have seen the change in him. It would be a vain falsehood if I denied that I have seen the change, and I am waiting for the inevitable day in which the man I once believed in shall declare himself a traitor.

"Would it not be wise to take the initiative, and give him his dismissal?"

"No. The wrong shall come from him. If he can be base enough to forget all the promises of the past, and to ignore the sacrifices I have made for him, his infamy shall have no excuse from any folly of mine."

"And if you find that he is false to you—that he has transferred his affection to another woman—you will banish him from your heart and mind, I trust, and begin life afresh."

Mr. Walsingham laughed aloud.

"Yes, I shall begin a new life, for from that hour I shall only live upon one hope."

"And that will be——"

"The hope of revenge."

"Revenge is a hard word," he said, after a long pause. "Redress is much better. If Mr. Sinclair should marry, as I have some reason to think he will——"

"What reason?"

"Public rumor. His attentions to a certain young lady have been remarked by people I know."

"The lady is the beautiful Miss Clanyarde."

"How did you discover that?"

"From his face the other night."

"You are quick at reading his face?"

"Yes. I believe he is over head and ears in love with Constance Clanyarde, as a much better man, Cyprian Davenant, was before him; and I have no doubt Lord Clanyarde will do his utmost to bring the match about."

"How long has this been going on?"

"Since the beginning of this season. He may have lost his heart to the lady last year, but his attentions last year were not so obvious."

"Do you know if Miss Clanyarde cares for him?"

"I have no means of knowing the lady's feeling on the subject, but I have a considerable knowledge of her father in the way of business; and I am convinced she will be made—induced is, I suppose, a more appropriate word—to accept Sinclair as a husband. Lord Clanyarde is as poor as Job and as proud as Lucifer. Yes, I think we may look upon the marriage as a certainty. And now, Mrs. Walsingham, remember that by whatever means you seek redress I am your friend, and shall hold myself ready to aid and abet you in the exaction of your just right. You have rejected me as a husband. You shall discover how faithful I can be as an ally."

"I have no doubt I ought to be grateful to you, Mr. Wyatt," she said, in a slow, weary way, "but I do not think your friendship can ever be of much service to me in the future happiness of my life, and I trust that you will forget all that has been said this morning. Good-by."

She gave him her hand. He held it with a gentle pressure as he answered her.

"It is impossible for me to forget anything that you have said, but you shall find me as secret as the grave. Good-by."

He bent his head and touched her hand lightly with his lips before releasing it. In the next instant he was gone.

"How she loves that snob!" he said to himself as he walked away from Half-Moon street. "And how charming she is! Rich, too. I could scarcely make a better match. It is a case in which inclination and prudence go together. And how easily I might have won her but for that man! Well, well, I don't despair of ultimate victory, in spite of Gilbert Sinclair. Everything comes to the man who knows how to wait."

THE SUPREME COURT.

The Majority of Cases Brought Before It Are Simply for Delay.

That august body, the Supreme Court of the United States, has been dubbed "the great mechanism of procrastination" and to call it by that title seems to do it no injustice. It is said that nine out of every ten cases submitted to this high tribunal are carried up to it not for the purpose of obtaining the reversal of decisions rendered by lower courts, but purely and simply for the sake of delay—or ordinarily to keep people out of money which they have won by law. How effective this plan is may be judged when it is considered that after the briefs in a case are filed four years must ordinarily elapse before the latter can come up for consideration. There are 4,000 cases on the docket now.

No other legal tribunal that ever existed has possessed such well nigh absolute power as is wielded by the Supreme Court of the United States. It can even overthrow any law passed by Congress and signed by the President, if it chooses to discover a constitutional flaw in the measure, and from its decision there is no appeal. Such awe does it inspire that lawyers of great reputation and experience who plead before it are often seized with fright, turn pale and forget their words in its presence. A distinguished legal luminary from New York confessed the other day that, after arguing a case at the bar of the Supreme Court, he always goes straight to his hotel and changes his underclothing, because it is soaked with perspiration! On the other hand, it sometimes happens that a country attorney who says "drawed" and "ain't got none" will exhibit the utmost sangfroid in addressing the august row of black gowns.

Human Resemblance to Animals.

There is a very curious point connected with the more pronounced animal faces—namely, those in charge of animals grow to be like them. Thus, a hostler, in charge of tramway horses has himself a fine Roman-nosed horse type of head, growing day by day more like his horses. Men in charge of nattle on the farm become essentially bovine, and in Shropshire it has often been remarked that the sheep breeders resemble their own rams. I cannot explain these singularities, which, however, are wholly or partly true. The sheep type of man is not indicative of great intelligence, and it is usually found in remote agricultural districts. The bulldog characters in man denote courage without refinement, but in the case of a lady—like her favorite pug dog—with nez retrousse, the refinement was not wanting. The Eskimos or Lapps in the water are so like seals than a man has been shot in error, the wistful expression of countenance being common in both, as the head only appears at the surface of the water. I have seen a comfortable-looking bear man in the train and a wizened, bat-faced old woman once in Brittany.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Unappropriated Syllables.

In the early days of the gold excitement in California a young German from Michigan departed for California, and after prospecting for awhile, settled there.

His name was John G. Almondinger, and wishing to Americanize himself as much as possible he applied to the Legislature of California, and had his name changed to John G. Almond.

A few days later a man named John Smith applied to the same Legislature, and after reciting a long catalogue of the ills to which he was subject, owing to his unfortunately common name, he said in conclusion:

"And whereas I have noticed that you have curtailed the name of J. G. Almondinger to J. G. Almond, and have not disposed of the "inger," which seems to be lying around loose, I respectfully request that the same may be added to my name."

The result of this appeal is not stated.

A Remarkable Clue.

A gang of horse-thieves were captured at Altoona, Pa., the other day, by the aid of a very extraordinary clue. The day before the capture they had robbed a grocery store and while ransacking the place one of the robbers took a bite of cheese. A shrewd policeman, noticing the peculiar teeth-marks in the fragment of cheese from which the bite had been taken, afterwards spotted one James Feeney, whom he suspected of having had a hand in the robbery. He made Feeney's acquaintance and by clever management made the fellow take a bite of some cheese he was himself eating. The teeth-marks were identical and the policeman nailed his man, who not only confessed his own guilt but named his confederates.

How Canada Got Its Name.

The orgin of the word "Canada" is curious enough. The Spaniards visited that country previous to the French, and made particular search for gold and silver, and, finding none, they often said among themselves, "Aca Nada" (there is nothing here). The Indians—who watched closely—learned this sentence and its meaning.

The French arrived, and the Indians, who wanted none of their company and supposed they also were Spaniards come on the same errand, were anxious to inform them in the Spanish sentence, "Aca Nada."

The French, who knew as little of Spanish as the Indians, supposed this incessantly recurring sound was the name of the country, and gave it the name Canada, which it has borne ever since.

ANCIENT DEVICES.

Curious Machines Used for Transporting Heavy Bodies.

In the earliest times mere muscular strength was relied upon for raising and moving large bodies, for mechanical contrivances were unknown. It is interesting to note the advancement in this line since the building of great temples and other structures by the ancients. Our illustrations show two methods employed for moving heavy stones, one being employed as long ago as 600 B. C.

CHERSIPHRON'S DEVICES.

[Machines which were employed 600 B. C. in moving the great marble pillars used in the temple of Diana at Ephesus.]

Chersiphron, the architect of the great Temple of Diana at Ephesus—which was accounted among the seven wonders of the world—included in its design 127 columns of marble sixty feet high and about seven feet in diameter. When Chersiphron found that the roads were not firm enough to bear the weight of such vast columns upon carriages whose wheels would sink into the ground, he contrived a frame as shown on the right of the first illustration in this article. This consisted of four timbers inclosing the round column. At the center of each end of the column he fixed a large iron pin in the stone. The projecting ends of these pins passed through the end cross-pieces of the frame. Poles were secured at two corners of the frame by strong iron hooks and rings and to these poles oxen were attached and were able to draw the column without much difficulty.

MOVING A HEAVY STONE, 30 B. C.

[A machine which was used by a Grecian in transporting a heavy stone intended for a base for a monument to Apollo.]

On the left of the same illustration we show another device somewhat similar, only in this case, the stones to be moved being square, the addition of broad wheels was necessary.

In our second illustration we show the device of a Grecian for the purpose of transporting a large stone intended for the base of a statue of Apollo, about 30 B. C. His machine consisted of two strong wheels fifteen feet in diameter, into which the ends of the stone were fixed. Through the rims of these wheels round spokes were driven. Round these spokes a cable was wound and to this cable oxen were attached. As the cable was unwound the machine rolled along.

ELOQUENT AND WITTY.

Henry Labouchere Gifted Leader of the British Radicals.

One of the most interesting characters in British public life is Henry Labouchere, leader of the Radicals and member of Parliament for Northampton. He first gained prominence in Parliament in 1880 when he advocated the abolition of the parliamentary oath so that his colleague, Bradlaugh, might take his seat by merely affirming. But before that time he had gained considerable prominence. He was in the diplomatic service and had been an attache at Washington, D. C., and at the European cities of Frankfort, Munich, Dresden, Stockholm, St. Petersburg and Constantinople. During the siege of Paris he was in that city and his paper, the Daily News, was perhaps the only foreign paper that had accurate accounts of the state of affairs in that city. Subsesequently Mr. Labouchere founded Truth and has made it a vast power for good in Great Britain. He is always ready in its columns to take up arms in defense of the oppressed of any land or race. Although closely allied to nobility, being the nephew of Lord Taunton, he is making open war on the House of Lords. He believes that body to be a public curse and allows no feeling of reverence for their rank to curb his pen when laying bare their iniquities to the world. He is devoted to the granting of home rule to Ireland and was a believer in home rule when Gladstone was framing coercion acts. Labouchere is one of the ablest debaters in the Commons. He is a brilliant conversationalist and a humorist. His home is in Popes' Villa at Twickenham on the Thames and there in his library the noted parliamentarian spends most of his leisure time.

HENRY LABOUCHERE.

A Remote Letter Box.

Cape Horn is a great mass of rock rising abruptly from the sea and forming a small island. Upon one of the ledges of this rock stands a covered barrel, the international letter box of a region more than 500 miles from anything that resembles civilization. It is the custom of captains passing round the Horn to send a boat ashore at this point if possible, take whatever mail is going in the direction of the vessel, and drop in whatever it is desired shall go in the other direction.

PEOPLE will take medicines with Latin names; but they do not take to flowers scientifically named.

RUBBER MILK.

Gathering the Valuable Gum from the Trees.

I proposed to accompany the rubber gatherer on his rounds, and in a few minutes we were out of sight and sound of camp, in a wild that was literally trackless, writes Edward W. Perry in Outing, in an article on how elastic gum is gathered in Mosquitea. Soon we came to a rubber tree, its smooth gray trunk rising slender and branchless forty feet. The youth threw his burden to the ground, and looked about until he found a thicket of cariso, with stalks two inches in diameter and perhaps forty feet long.

The walls of this bamboo are scarcely more than an eighth of an inch in thickness, and the joints, fully grown, are some two feet long. They grow in thick clusters, frequently so dense that no animal can pass between the stalks. Arching they often droop until the tops sweep the ground, and the beautifully delicate foliage is so abundant as to form an apparently solid bank of green.

With a blow of his machete the hulero cut down one of these and clipped off three or four of the joints, each forming a long tube closed at one end. With these we returned to the rubber tree.

He then made a small loop of one end of the rope we brought with us, and of the other end a large loop passing round both the tree and his own body. He put both feet through the smaller loop so that his bare soles grasped the smooth, gray bark, the rope about his ankles serving as fulcrums to give his feet tight hold. Then he threw the upper loop well up the tree trunk, leaned back, and brought his feet up till they grasped the trunk eighteen inches or so from the ground.

With a quick motion, he brought his body near the trunk, and at the same time threw up the loop again. At the instant of its highest rise his shoulders settled back, and caught it in place. Then his feet were hitched upward again a foot or more. Here he leaned back in the upper loop, bracing with his bare feet against the smooth tree, and with the machete cut through the bark two gashes which converged about sixteen inches below the level at which they started.

Cut after cut was made in this way until he reached the branches. Then, as the hulero descended, he wetted his finger in the milk, and drew a line straight down from the lower part of one pair of V-shaped cuts to another to guide the flowing milk by the shortest way. In the lower pair of cuts he placed a piece of leaf to act as a spout to carry the milk out from the tree to the open end of the joint of cariso standing beneath.

The first joint was soon full, and another took its place. A plug of leaves stopped the full one, and we went on in search of another tree, which we soon found, and repeated the operation of bleeding. When a number of trees had been tapped in this way, the operator carried all the cariso joints filled with the milk to a convenient spot, where he dug a small pit in the ground.

After looking about a bit he found a vine of a kind wanted, and cut from it several tender branches. These he crushed between two stones, then washed the bruised pulp in a panful of water, making a greenish infusion with which he sprinkled thoroughly the walls and bottom of the pit.

Into this the rubber milk was poured. In an instant that which touched the earth wet by the infusion, coagulated. Then the contents of the pan were poured into the milk and mixed thoroughly with it, almost instantly changing it to a white, spongy mass. This was lifted out and carried to the nearest brook, where it was washed and kneaded to express the juice of the vine, which, the hulero explained, would soon harden the rubber so much that it would be little better than tuno gum, with which wicked huleros are wont to adulterate their rubber.

This mode of gathering rubber destroys the trees in two seasons, for each cutting kills that side of the tree on which the incisions are made. The government has enacted laws for the protection of the trees, but laws are ignored in these wilds. In a very few years all the trees large enough to bleed will be destroyed, and fifteen or twenty years will pass before the young crop now growing will be large enough to furnish milk at a profit.

Yet these trees might be bled year after year without serious injury, by using an instrument that could not cut completely through the bark, and by leaving in the wound the rubber which dries there, and which will, if allowed to remain, protect the tree from decay.

Bachelor Giants Don't Draw.

Seated on the back of a butcher's wagon was a heavily built blonde young farmer. There was nothing exceptionally peculiar about the blonde young farmer except that as he sat on the wagon and dangled his legs over the tailboard his feet rested on the ground. In addition to this, good-sized men who came near the blonde young farmer seemed immediately to become dwarfed by comparison to the size of small boys. "My name is Silas Fisher and belong to Lynden," said this modern Goliath. "I used to be known as the Great Canadian Giant when I traveled with Barnum, Forepaugh, Robbins and other circus shows. I stand seven feet in my socks and am thirty years of age and weigh 245 pounds. The giant business is played out. I traveled six years with shows and used to get from $26 to $50 a week. What's the matter with the business now? Well, I don't know. There ain't no call for giants any more, somehow. Not unless you have got a wife. Giants don't get more than $10 a week now and it don't pay. When you have to get a new suit of clothes costing $100, pay another $80 for an oil painting of yourself, then pay your fare to Philadelphia or Chicago and your board there for a couple of weeks before the show starts—there ain't no money in it at $10 a week. Shields is the only man in the business now, but he's got a wife 6½ feet high. I ain't got a wife, so I come home."—[Hamilton Recorder.

A County Politics.

Candidates for the various county offices are now announcing their names, and our people should study this list over carefully, as the good government of the county depends largely on the care used in selecting good men. The candidates themselves should read carefully, the note at the head of the list. We shall expect to see everyone who gets on the ticket make a business promise to keep the printing in the county. For several years the bulk of it has gone to outside parties, and often at a cost to the county greater than if given to home firms. This must be stopped,

That "Universal Distrust."

Certain republican editors have been claiming that the financial troubles are the result of "widespread and popular distrust in the probable action of the democratic majority in congress." This shows want of thought, for if one stops to think he will remember that it was a "popular and widespread distrust" of what the republican party had already done, that caused the people all over the country to vote that party out of power and elect this large number of democratic members of both Houses. How else can we account for the sweeping democratic victories of '92? And in that case, it was not "distrust" of some uncertain thing, that was yet to be brought about, but "distrust" of what had actually been already done, and had existed and been tried for some time. Republican papers hurt their own cause, by copying such things thoughtlessly from what they believe to be one of their leading papers. One's own thoughts are often better than those on whom we lean blindly.

LAST Friday, at Evansville, the republican congressional convention took 47 ballots, and could not decide on a candidate. They adjourned without a choice. This is the first district.

MEXICO is raising large quantities of coffee now, and the most of it that goes out of the country comes to us.

CITIES of Illinois show a per capita of taxes paid, all the way from $3.62 to $12.80, the latter being the average each man pays in Chicago.

BONDS of South American republics sell all the way from 14 cents to 84 cents. The rate of interest is from 3 to 6 per cent. Our own bonds are worth about $1 20

GARRETT has a good city ticket, headed by W. J. Frederick. Mr. Frederick would make a splendid mayor and we hope he will get through with a big majority.

THE Hillsdale Telephone-News, is authority for the statement that the Michigan Central road is likely to get the Ft. Wayne and Jackson Branch away from the Lake Shore folks.

IT now turns out that Reed did not originate the idea of "counting a quorum," but that it was Randolph Tucker, of Virginia, a democrat, and that when Tucker proposed the plan, Reed fought against it.

PAUL REVERE could have gone over, the most of his long wild, night ride on the electric cars if he had been thoughtful enough to wait till the evening of April 18, last week. Still the article we have on another page is worth reading.

MASON J. NIBLACK who was twice speaker of the Indiana House of Representatives, has been nominated to the legislature by the democrats of Knox county. He is an able man, but of a rather selfish turn, as several northern Indiana people happen to know.

A LAGRANGE county veteran claims he was taken into a back room of a postoffice in 1892, and shown a forged letter telling him his application for a pension had been reported favorably, and he was then asked to vote for Harrison. We wonder how many similar cases could be found.

MAN near Lebanon, Ind., committed suicide last week because he had been told his pension would likely be stopped by a democratic administration. Any man with a legal claim to a pension, who will believe these silly political lies, is a fit candidate for the asylum, whether insane or not.

LIGONIER Banner: Congressman Hammond has shown his good political sense by withdrawing from the congressional race in the Tenth district. He realized that he could not be re-elected and that his name upon the ticket would weaken the party in its local fights, so he got out of the way.

SENATOR GEORGE of Mississippi has a bill to reduce salaries of congressmen from $5,000 to $4,000. He says he can live on that. But it is true that many members spend more than their salary. It is not the size of the salary the people complain of, but the size of the work they do. Let them do their work, instead of keeping away from it, and people will not complain much.

THE New Era says that Major Bill Vorris has returned to that county, and has just had his pension increased from $12 to $30 a month. Must be some mistake about that, for although we have every reason to believe the Major was a good soldier, it must not be forgotten by republican editors that this is a democratic administration, which they have been telling people is an enemy to the soldier.

SUNDAY morning about four o'clock, a drunken fellow found a "live" engine standing on a sidetrack near the terminal station at the world's fair grounds and took possession of it. He knew enough to start it, and would have run it off onto the main track, but the tower man saw something was wrong and did not turn the switch. The engine was ditched, but unfortunately the drunken fool was not killed. He was arrested and will likely go to the pen.

THE seigniorage in coining silver or gold, is what would be left after taking enough of the metal to make dollars enough to pay for the metal purchased. Under the Sherman law, we bought silver enough to cost us, at various prices over 154 million dollars. But the metal would make 209 millons. So that after coining enough to pay for the metal there would still be enough metal left to make 55 million of silver dollars. This is the seigniorage.

"DEMOCRATS have brought all these evils on the country," the republican editors keep saying. But they have not been able to point to a single "evil" so brought about. Every bad condition of business that can be named, if at all the result of a bad law, can be traced only to a republican law, for there is no democratic law on the statute books, except that which stopped the purchase of silver under the Sherman act. And as the Sherman act caused a loss to the national government of over 43 millions no one will claim that its repeal has hurt business. Read up a little, brother republicans.

THE BLAND LAW of 1878 provided for the actual coinage of two millions of silver dollars each month. It was repealed by the Sherman law of 1890 which stopped the coinage of silver and compelled the purchase of 4½ million ounces of bar silver each month. This was no coined, but lay there in bars and went down in value, losing the government 43 millions by its fall in value. This was a pet law of republicans, and is at present the pet law of populists who fought to have this law which stopped the coinage of silver retained on our statute books. In other words, these silver coinage men asked to have a law retained that stopped the coinage of silver. What shall we think of such "silver advocates" as these?

COAL of a valuable quality, nearly like anthracite, has been found in Mexico in the hills not far north of Vera Cruz.

WHEAT and wool have been at the lowest price for years and we are having the highest "protective duty" on both. Is it not time we changed our laws?

MEMBERS of "Gen. Frye's army of peace" had a big fight at Warrenhurst, Ill. last week and several were stabbed and beaten. Let it not be forgotten that they are on their way to Washington to "hunt work."

GERMANY has made friendly treaties with all or nearly all the wheat producing countries. This is a blow at the United States to pay us for our unfriendly tariff legislation. Republican mismanagement is ruining the business of the country, especially for the farmers, for we must sell some of our wheat abroad.

HARRISON seems to have been the best friend the queen of the Sandwich Islands had. His treaty with them gave her $20,000 a year, besides $150,000 spot cash to the princess who is the next heir to the throne. And in addition to this, 3½ millions was to be paid at once into the cash box of the new government. It was a great bargain—for the other fellows.

THE COURIER regrets to see a few democratic papers finding fault with Senator Voorhees. Surely no Indiana democrat who pauses even a short moment to think, will lend himself to this disgraceful business. If there is one man in the United States senate, who has won the respect, and who deserves the patient forbearance of all democrats and especially of all Indiana democrats, that senator is Daniel W. Voorhees, the man who has nobly served and greatly honored the state that has honored him.

New Candidates.

There are several new names now talked of for county offices. Our announcements show that of Henry L. Houser for recorder, a prosperous and intelligent farmer, who has been always in line and working for party success.

A new candidate for treasurer is now spoken of—J. G. McLaughlin, of Garrett. He was for some time an able member of the Garrett school board. He is a locomotive engineer, and we believe is at present running on the road. He would be a good man for the place.

For commissioner of this, the southwest district, a number of people are asking for W. H. McQuiston, so long a leading business man here. He was one of the managers of the Auburn Church Furniture Company and has served several terms on the town council, always showing excellent business ability. The choice would be an excellent one, if he could be induced to run.

Political Notes.

Democrats begin to realize that they were too hasty in calling the judicial convention before the republicans held theirs. We should wait till we see who their candidate is. If not too late it might be put off yet until after the republicans nominate, which is May 17.

We put in our announcements this week, the name of P. K. David a good business man of Garrett, who is in the race for county treasurer. The people will see that we are to have a list of excelent men to select from, and that Mr David is no exception. He has done business in Garrett many years and has a good reputation for ability and honesty.

The announcement of the name of Trustee Reed, of this township, for commissioner, will be a pleasant surprise to many. He has been a good trustee, and would make an excellent commissioner. His offical record will bear inspection.

James O. Blake the present trustee of Smithfield, will be candidate for treasurer. He is a thorough going and honest business man, and successful farmer. He would be an excellent officer.

Candidates for Representative.

We have already spoken of Dr. Matheny, whose name has been mentioned for this place. There is now quite a general talk of inducing Hon. S. S. Shutt to allow the use of his name for this office. He would be an excellent man for the place, having already had an extensive experience in the legislature Our people should begin to talk up candidates for this important office.

Republican Politics.

The political pot is boiling finely over at the republican camp. They are working a number of schemes by which they think they can win the next election, so they have an unusual number of candidates. Besides Mr. Bicknell of Garrett, as a candidate for auditor, there is Mr. Campbell of the Dispatch, who will ask it as pay for having "served four years as secretary of the county committee," James Provines, will, we are told, be again a candidate for treasurer, in hopes that the big majority that overwhelmed him two years ago will not appear this time. J. G. Johnson of Waterloo, is slated for clerk. J. A. Sawyer of Auburn, will ask to run for recorder, as will also, U S. Kaut of this place and Henry Baker, ex-postmaster at Concord, and Thos. Phillips of Jackson. Their candidates for judge are Mr. Hartman and Mr. Penfield of this county, and Emmett Bratton and Frank Roby in Steuben. F. L. Welsheimer, of this place, would like to be prosecutor. John W. Baker, editor of the Columbia City Commerical is spoken of for congress.

Best Moquette Carpets $1.00 per yard.

Here at last. Those beautiful, highest grade Moquette Carpets, in all the new spring designs of 1894, have arrived. They were manufactured expressly for us by Alex. Smith & Sons. They have been out of the loom scarcely ten days. Our price for them will be $1.00 per yard They usually bring about 40ct. a yard more than the best Velvets and Bodies; but our price upon them is less than either of them. Of course you know they are much handsomer than either a Velvet or a body and wear at least one-third longer. Ours is the only carpet house in Fort Wayne carrying a full line of these celebrated goods. We want you to spread the news among your neighbors, of this great sale of Moquette carpets at one dollar per yard- No such sale has ever occurred in the entire history of this country, nor is it likely to occur again for a generation.

We have the borders to match every piece of these carpets, and can, therefore, sell them to you bordered or unbordered, whichever you prefer. Bring with you the exact size of your rooms when you come to purchase. We are also sole agents in Fort Wayne for the great Lowell carpets, which are the best Extra Super Ingrains in the world They are handsomer, wear longer and keep their colors better than any other.

The makers of Brant's Balsam give double the usual size for 25 and 50 cents, because they think it advertising which people will appreciate. None better F. E. Davenport.

Frank and George Shugers, now at Coldwater, sent Cory a tricycle last week. It is mainly their own work, and will be valuable to him in going to and from his residence.

Bishop & Lackey buy for cash and sell for cash. That is the main reason why they are selling Millinery so very cheap. And the Styles! Why Bless you, they can't be beat anywhere.

Isaac Shafer moved to Bryan, Ohio last week. He has long been a resident of Auburn and DeKalb county, where he has been a valued citizen. Our people will wish them all success.

Ashley Times: William Kessler, of the cigar firm of Kessler & Bro., Auburn, Ind., was in town on business Monday. He looked hale and hearty, and is evidently enjoying the fruits of a prosperous business.

Why not place all you owe in one place, by making a loan on long time and most liberal terms. Rickel & Sprott can make you loans in any sums over $500 on farm property, or over $300 on town property. 14-17

Frank Davenport and wife are happy over a little daughter born to them last Friday, April 20. And now it is papa Frank and mamma Minnie; and the two sets of newly elected grandparents are as happy as four big sunflowers.

The republican caucus for selecting delegates to the judicial, congressional and state conventions, met at the court room last Saturday. The chief interest centered on the delegates for the judicial convention. The result was favorable to Mr. Peofield, although Mr. Hartman had a big following.

Last Friday we had a pleasant call from Hon. W. H. Madden, of Butler, and have to thank him for subscriptions for himself and Mrs. Milligan. widow of our late friend, Dr. James Milligan. He was accompanied by his grand daughter, Miss Belle Lewis, daughter of Mc Lewis, of Butler. They have been out in California, where Jerre Lewis, Miss Lewis' grandfather, lives; but, finding the climate did not agree with Miss Lewis' health. they have returned to Butler.

Mr. Vollmar, now a resident of Elkhart. was here last week. He is selling his two popular varnishes, for which he has recently taken out patents. One is for use on pianos and musical instruments, and the other for furniture. He took many orders while here, as he is konwn as a man who is thoroughly honest, and who understands the line of work in which these varnishes are used. He has made arrangements to leave these varnishes at the Schaab Furniture store, which will hereafter keep them on sale, so that all who need can get them. Mr. Vollmar has returned to Elkhart, but we believe he expects to devote most of his time to this invention.

The Garrett Republican is going to treat the business men of its place to a genuine write up. We feel sure it will be appreciated. Nothing does a town more good than an occasional, general write-up in its local paper. But this has never before happened in Garrett. The alleged paper that has disgraced the town for several years, seldom mentioned the place in which it was published and whose people gave it support. Some of its issues had four Auburn items to one for Garrett. And it often happened that while the "Hobo" was head and ears into an election in Auburn, it utterly overlooked the little matter of an election in its own town. The Hobo will need to wake up.

Ex-auditor T. H. Tomlinson was here week, on Thursday, that being the day, the remains of his daughter Laura, were brought back here for interment. It will be remembered that she died at her home, at New Carlisle, St Joseph county, last year, and the physicians claimed she had diphtheria, and so, she could not be brought here then. Her husband, W. E. Rose who has been here since the death of Ephraim Berry, went to New Carlisle with a team last week, and brought her back, and she now rests in Woodlawn.

We have received a finely printed folder of the "Pacific Coast Excursion" of the city council of Omaha, and the party of friends that went along. It was sent by Charles L. Thomas, well known to our people, though he has been in business in Omaha several years. He is now a member of the council. There were about twenty-five of the party, including a number of business men of the city and they had a special Pullman car for the trip. Well we like to hear of the old DeKalb boys having a good time and putting on style, for they are entitled to it. There are on the card, some interesting statistics in regard to Omaha, which is now a city of 140,000; with 125 churches, 40 public schools, and an enrollment of 16,000 pupils. The city has 77 miles of paved streets, 112 miles of sewers, 150 miles of graded street, 60 miles of electric street railways, 19 miles of horse railways and 6 miles of cable lines.

RHEUMATISM CURED IN A DAY:—"Mystic Cure" for rheumatism and neuralgia, radically cures in 1 to 3 days. Its action pon the system is remarkable and mysterious. It removes at once the cause and the disease immediately disappears. The first dose greatly benefits. 75 cts. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn. tf

A good joke is told on the republican candidate for marshal. He does not take a single county paper How will he find out who is elected? We have often said there would be fewer republicans if people would read more. We might hint right here that the COURIER, which contains the most real information, is only $1.50 a year.

The hue and cry goes up on every hand that times are mighty hard—money is scarce. Money is not scarce, but the contrary is true. If you do not believe this proposition call on or address Rickel & Sprott and they will prove to you that money may be had on very liberal terms, with a fair security on either town or farm paoperty. 14-17

W. H. Husselman has returned from Wichita, Kansas, where he has been for several years. After stopping a few days with his father, George Husselman in this place, he went this week to Muncie, where we believe he will be employed in the Kandel & Boyer buggy factory. J. P. Kendel is his brother-in-law, and Mr. Boyer is an old Fairfield neighbor.

There are regular services at the Baptist church now each Sunday, forenoon and evening. Mr Hart preached a very acceptable sermon there Sunday evening with a good attendance present, including church goers of several other denominations.

"There goes a man of sense and good judgment." "Why so?" "He smokes the best 5c cigar in town—Kessler Bros.' Bill Head."

The ladies and other good citizens of Fort Wayne know how to treat a disreputable paper. If Auburn people had treated the Clipper that way, we would not now be disgraced by a sheet that is far lower down in the scale of morality and literary standing than the Fort Wayne paper spoken of on this page.

The Dispatch has its usual snarl at the marshal and the town board in last week's issue. In the same paper it has an article favoring good roads and one giving the town fits for paying out money to gravel West Seventh street. The only way we know of to suit the Dispatch would be to have some kind hearted soul gravel the street for nothing.

Ed. Baker and Mr. Bauer, have formed a partnership in the bakery and lunch business at the old stand on West eighth street, where they will always be found ready to wait on their customers, for good bread, pies, cakes, etc, as well as to serve up good lunches at a moderate cost. They will also, put in a full line of bread and baked goods into the Hebel store, in the corner window. Call on Baker & Bauer for good bread, cakes, pies, and good lunch.

Take Notice.

Having secured the corner window in Hebel Bros.' store, I wish to say to the public generally that on and after the first of May, we will put in a full line of baked goods fresh every day, such as are kept in a first-class bakery. Fine cakes of any kind, for weddings and parties, made to order on short notice and at reasonable prices. Don't forget the old stand for a good lunch.

ED. BAKER & BAUER, Props.

They Boycott a Sensational Paper.

The people of Ft. Wayne have put on their war paint, and are after a sensational paper in that city. The ladies of the city are especially active in the work. They have an association called the "Ladies' Social Purity Association," which has issued the following address, which they have sent far and near, as well as to the business men of the city.

To the Merchants and Business Men of Ft. Wayne, Indiana:

The Ladies' Social Purity Association of this city most respectfully request your aid in surpressing a sensational and licentious paper known as "The Monday Morning Times." It is unworthy the encouragement, patronage or support of decent and respectable people. Every Monday morning indelicate details meet the eyes of men, women and children, of scandals, licentiousness, depravity and debauchery in this cesspool of corruption, upon which its irresponsible and disreputable editor thrives and fattens. It panders only to the tastes of the most debased, depraved and corrupt of men and women. It should be disinfected before being taken into our households, where everything else vicious is carefully excluded. There has been no mystery of nastiness this depraved editor has not printed under huge headlines, so that the young and pure will be sure to see it.

I order to assist us in procuring its suppression, we desire you to withhold your advertising and subscription patronage from it, pledging ourselves to patronize only those firms that do not advertise in its columns or in any way encourage its existence. We hope you will favorably consider our appeal.

MRS. M. E. WOODWARD,
Secretary L. S. P. A.

L. O. BUCHTEL, Homœopathic Physician and Surgeon.

Special attention given to chronic and obscure cases and catarrhal diseases of the nose, throat and lungs; also to diseases peculiar to women and children.

IT is a good wind that blows no man ill.

THE postage stamp has a contract with the envelope and the postoffice, and must carry it out to the letter by sticking to it.

A BILL for a "greater Boston" has been introduced in the Massachusetts Legislature. It may be possible to make Boston larger, but it is beyond the power of feeble mortality, look you, to make the only Boston any greater.

THE movement toward securing 1-cent postage has many supporters among business men, but there are a good many people on the other hand who would rather continue to pay 2-cent postage and get better service than they have now.

JAPAN has the least poverty of any nation in the world, and yet the people of the United States pay many dollars every year to send missionaries to Japan to instruct that benighted people in our better Christian ways. Coals to Newcastle.

PRINCE BISMARCK was once pressed by a certain American official to recommend his son for a diplomatic place. "He is a very remarkable fellow," said the proud father; "he speaks seven languages." "Indeed," said Bismarck, who does not hold a very high opinion of linguistic acquirements; "what a wonderful headwaiter he would make."

SECRETARY MORTON has finally appointed an agrostologist, and business will begin to pick up at once. This country has simply been waiting until an agrostologist was selected. It will now take off its coat, spit on its hands and proceed to boom. It is remarkable that no one has had sense enough to see that an agrostologist was the only thing necessary for a complete revival of industry.

MISS ALICE FLETCHER, the ethnologist, who has made a study of the Omahas and other Indian tribes for the Peabody Museum at Cambridge, has been paid the highest of any woman employed by the government. As a special agent of the Indian bureau she drew a salary of $8 a day and her expenses while making the allotments of lands to the Nez-Perces and the other tribes given individual holdings or farms.

PROMPT demand by the State Department for explanation of firing on a ship under the American flag has brought from Honduras apology instead of explanation. No explanation was possible that would not have made apology its sequence. The little braggart of Central America will exercise more discretion and less valor next time it wants to take a political refugee off a vessel flying Uncle Sam's colors.

NOVELIST HOWELLS is reported as saying that he knows it would do him good to chop wood or dig potatoes a couple of hours every day. Many unfortunate persons who have tried to read certain novels might easily be persuaded to say that it would do them lots of good if Mr. Howells would adopt either wood chopping or potato digging as a regular and exclusive avocation. The danger is that if the latter were chosen the potatoes would be sure to turn out small.

IT has been asked, "Does advertising pay?" A German journal, the Mainzer Nachrichten, replies to this question by given the following fact, the authenticity of which it guarantees: A person advertised that he would pay 5 marks to the sender of the largest potato. In less than 15 days the clever advertiser found himself in possession of as many sacks full of the very finest potatoes, which, after paying the 5 marks promised for the largest example, might be reckoned a very profitable speculation.

IT seems that the Emperors upon whom the peace of Europe depends have not been talking of disarming. The interview which announced their intention to disperse their armies and remit the overwhelming taxes was apocryphal. They are as much disposed as ever to fly at each other's throats if it becomes necessary. But their immense armaments enable them to exact small compromises from each other in trade and in politics without fighting, and so they keep them at full strength through long periods of peace.

"AM I a chump?" howls Ald. John O'Neill, of Chicago. "Are we all chumps, that we cannot legislate?" It is pleasant to be able to give Mr. O'Neill the information he desires. A careful survey of the situation justifies an affirmative reply to both his questions. The Aldermen who are trying to string Chicago full of trolley wires are chumps. Strict adherence to the truth dictates the statement that most of them are rascals, too. Any further information that Mr. O'Neill is in need of will be cheerfully furnished on application.

"OLD SUBSCRIBER" is writing to the St. Louis papers complaining bitterly that stumps and growing trees are allowed to obstruct the middle of the streets of the Mound City. This is worse than any one outside of St. Louis dreamed of. It is true that reports have come from that city of large crops of hay on Olive street, and it was well known that the cow ordinance was bitterly antagonized by leading citizens. But no one, without the evidence of the St. Louis newspapers themselves, would have credited the statement that forests were springing up in the thoroughfares of the Missouri metropolis. It is too bad. The financial depression must have hit St. Louis an awful swat.

NEW JERSEY "lightning" has popularly been supposed to produce the most completely paralyzing "jag" in the briefest space of time of any liquid on earth. But it has failed to satisfy the demands of the bibulous citizens of that State, and now the popular drunk is the "paregoric drunk," and that mosquito country is full of it. Paregoric contains both alcohol and opium, and the victim of this new habit enjoys the double sensation of hilarity and sweet unconsciousness beyond all measure. Of course, there's a great difference in the morning, but this has not stayed the growth of the habit, and the Mayor of Plainfield has been compelled to issue a proclamation forbidding the general sale of the stuff.

AN increasing danger, not only to the express companies, but to travelers by rail, is to be found in the fact that amateurs have evidently taken to train robbery. The professional bandit of the Younger and James type did his work neatly, quickly and expeditiously. He killed no one wantonly. He knew his business. The amateur is a bungler. His mode of operation, as shown in the attempted "hold-up" at Lincoln and the attempted train wrecking near Worthington, Minn., is without system and without any regard for human life. Instead of flagging the train and getting control of the engineer the amateur seeks to cause a wreck, hoping to loot the express car in the confusion. Or he attacks trains bearing no treasure, and having shot men recklessly and uselessly he retreats without any booty. His operations are unskillful, murderous and unprofitable. He slays innocent people with little hope of gain, and he should himself be slain wherever found. He is the ass in the lion's skin, but more dangerous than the lion himself.

WHEN the directors of the Chicago Lake Street L Road voted for a sweeping reduction of officers' salaries, leaving the wages of the operating force untouched, they set a good example. Most corporations—and especially in America—look upon the salaries of the high-priced and ornamental officers as fixed charges, not to be altered or reduced under any circumstances. When retrenchment becomes necessary, the first attack is upon the wages of the working force—the men who at the best earn from $2 to $3 a day. The presidents and general managers and superintendents are sacred. Not even the awful prospect of reducing or passing a dividend will induce the directors—many of whom are also salaried officers—to begin cutting at the top. They continue to draw full pay until a receiver is appointed. It is cheering to notice that one corporation has broken away from this tradition, and its example might well be followed by other institutions that cut the wages of low-salaried employes without any excuse whatever other than a desire to take advantage of the hard times and scarcity of work.

DISMAL howls come from across the border. Our Canadian brethren are protesting against the arrangements made by the British and the United States authorities for carrying out the provisions of the Behring Sea arbitration. When the Paris tribunal first rendered its decision the Canucks rejoiced greatly. The finding pleased them. They saw opportunities for unlimited poaching. The businesslike preparations that are being made to protect the seals have caused an entire change of tune. The finding of the tribunal was wrong; the action of the American Government is infamous. They don't propose to submit to the proposed arrangements. But they will. They say they will do terrible things, but they don't mean it. They will keep up the howling for a time, but when it comes to actual trouble they will simmer down and swallow their wrath. They like to poach, but they don't like to be spanked, and as spanking will surely follow any attempt at poaching the Canadians will turn their attention from the seals to the less profitable but safer occupation of smuggling Chinamen into this country at so much a head.

The Handy Man.

The "handy man" is a godsend to the plumber, the carpenter, the builder, the paperhanger and several others. With a view to saving expenses he buys a tool chest and proceeds to tinker with everything that is out of shape. When a door hangs badly he takes it off the hinges and tries to plane or saw a piece off the bottom. He is certain to spoil the woodwork and frequently breaks the hinges in putting them back. It is not at all an easy thing for one man to hang a door anyhow, and it is practically impossible for an amateur to do it at all.

When the handy man finds some of his wall paper knocked off he hunts up one of the fragments that were left and pastes it over, producing a result so hideous that his wife generally sends for a paperhanger and has the whole room done over again. The same man commences to build a shed or back fence, and finding that he has got everything out of plumb and that the corners won't come right he sends for a carpenter and has to pay him for tearing everything down besides doing the work.

TRAITORS TO PARTY.

SEVERE ARRAIGNMENT OF DEMOCRATIC SENATORS.

Brice, Hill, Murphy, McPherson, Smith, Gorman, Gibson, Camden, Caffrey, White, Morgan, and Pugh "Wear the Mask of Democrats."

Would Betray the Cause.

Probably the most remarkable political address of the year is that issued by the Democratic leaders of Minnesota through the State Democratic Association. It says:

It is useless to disguise the fact that our party is confronted with serious peril. It is time for plain words; silence now is disloyalty to our party and its cause.

In less than two years after winning the most complete victory any party ever won, while in full possession of the powers then given us, we present the appearance of a defeated party, while our opponents, routed in the battle, wear all the airs of victory. What has brought this astonishing change? Whence comes this peril? Not from our opponents; not from the brawling horde of protectionists whom we met and overthrew in 1892, but from malignant and treacherous influences, allied with weakness or cowardice, within our own ranks.

The danger that observant men saw when the election of 1892 put upon our party the responsibility of directing national affairs, and the duty of redeeming the pledges of tax reform made to and accepted by the people, and then a cloud no larger than a man's hand, has overspread the whole sky. What was our promise to the people, and what has been, so far, our performance? We denounced protection as "a fraud and a robbery of the masses for the benefit of a few;" and we promised that taxes on imports should be laid with a sole view to affording revenue.

Our first disappointment was in the departure from the declared policy of the party in the undue and needless measure of protection granted by the House bill, but, mindful of the extent to which contact with and sharing in the extortions of protection had demoralized representatives in our ranks, we accepted it as the best now attainable, and looked to its free listing of coal, iron ore, wool, and lumber as the entering wedge to be driven home by later and harder blows.

The House added sugar to the free list and sent the bill to the Senate. Here the error of the House bill became quite apparent. The compromise of principle there made more plenteous fruit in the Senate. The concessions made in the House only whetted the appetite and fired the audacity of the protected interests. With renewed energy they concentrated their efforts on the smaller body, further removed from the people, less responsible to them, and more impervious to public opinion. To our shame and dismay they found Senators representing Democratic constituencies, that had denounced protection and demanded its obliteration from our taxing policies, willing to aid them. In the secrecy of the committee rooms these Senators browbeat the sub-committee with threats of open opposition to the bill unless the special industries they represented were also granted protection or given increase of it. There was a weak surrender to the demands of these attorneys of the trusts, and a bill was reported in which the one redeeming feature of the House bill, its one distinctively Democratic feature, was eliminated, and the bill made hardly distinguishable from the one it proposes to displace.

Who are these men, Democrats in name, protectionists in fact, who have thus brought dishonor and shame on our great party? Who are they who have betrayed the great loyal host who gave them the power thus to deliver us into the hands of the enemy? Who are they who have thus made certain the apprehensions of our President expressed in his inaugural, and given to his thought the effect of a prophecy? Said he: "Even if insuperable obstacles and opposition prevent the consummation of our task we shall hardly be excused; and if failure can be traced to our fault or neglect we may be sure the people will hold us to a swift and exacting responsibility."

Who are these men who have interposed, "insuperable obstacles and opposition," and made a failure due to our fault and neglect? These are the men, names fit to stand alone alongside of Benedict Arnold in the annals of our country:

Senators Calvin S. Brice of Ohio, David B. Hill and Edward Murphy, Jr., of New York, John R. McPherson and James Smith, Jr., of New Jersey, Arthur P. Gorman and Charles H. Gibson of Maryland, Johnson N. Camden of West Virginia, Donelson Caffrey and Edward D. White of Louisiana, John J. Morgan and James E. Pugh of Alabama.

These are the men who wear the mask of Democrats that they may the better betray our cause; these are they who have wrought this marvelous change, putting our party in the attitude of defeat and giving to our opponents that of victory.

But, Democrats, be not discouraged nor disheartened. The heart of the great mass of our party beats as true as ever. Remember that every great cause has had its traitors; every great struggle for greater freedom has had its checks from the treachery of men whom it trusted, and be strengthened for the greater struggle before us by the inspiring thought that, in the struggles of the masses for freedom against privileged intrenched power the right has ever come uppermost. Reflect that all the freedom we have to-day we enjoy because our ancestors have risen from defeats and have survived the treachery of comrades, and through all have "kept the rudder true"; and let the thought nerve you to further effort that you may give your children an increased measure of liberty.

A few traitors in the councils cannot defeat the cause for which we have fought for years, and in which we won the victory of 1892. Chagrined, we are undismayed; betrayed, we are not disheartened; checked, we will not surrender. Nowhere let there be flagging or faltering. Everywhere let Democrats determine and proclaim that this, freedom's battle, once begun, "shall not end until every citizen of our Republic shall be secure in the untrammeled right to buy what he will, where he will, and of whom he will; exchanging, without let or hindrance, the products of his labor for those of his fellow-laborers anywhere in the wide world."

The address was issued by the association through its Executive Committee. It is signed by C. M. Foote, President, of Minneapolis, and P. J. Smalley, Secretary, of St. Paul. The membership of the association is 1,600 and includes all the Democrats of prominence in the State.

The Hypocritical Trust.

The sugar trust objects to the duty on its raw material. That is natural. But its statement that the duty on raw sugar will be paid by the poor man in the increased price of his low-grade sugar is not true. The only onslaught on the poor man is made in the interest of the trust. The bill as it stands is so drawn that sugars of a saccharine strength that ordinarily would admit them at a low tax, by the application of the color test must pay the high tax that will exclude them. The poor man is to be forbidden in this way to buy good, cheap white sugars that are not granulated—that is, that are not made by the trust.

The trust's objection to the tax is not directed against the duty on the raw sugars, but against the decrease of duty on the refined sugars that come in competition with its own product. It now enjoys a protection of one-half of a cent a pound. The Senate will reduce the bounty to one-sixth of a cent. Hence the tears. The trust has been able to squeeze out of the poor man whom it pretends to pity a tax greater than the interest on the national debt. It pays large dividends on stock watered to five times the value of its property. It enjoys a monopoly that enriches it. It owns Senators and Representatives. It maintains a costly lobby. It has refused to obey the law and report the statistics of its business to the Census Bureau. It conceals its enormous profits in defiance of the power of the Federal Government. But it hires its labor in the cheapest markets in the world, and abuses its workmen with a cruelty unknown even in the iron regions of Pennsylvania. Its outcry for the poor man is false pretense and hypocrisy. Its concern is not for poverty but for its own abnormal profits.—New York World.

Canada Ready for Free Trade.

There is every encouragement for our legislators to move along the lines of greater freedom and interchange of products along our Canadian border in the speech of the Governor, at the opening of the Canadian Parliament last week. It is apparent that Canada has not only checked all desire to go further on the baneful road of protection, but is already preparing to retrace her steps. "The amendments to the tariff laws which will be offered for your consideration are designed to simplify the operation and to lessen, as far as can be done consistently, the imposts which are now in force." These are encouraging words, especially in view of the markets from which the imports, in the absence or reduction of duties, would go—our own. It is flying in the face of Providence to shut out the mutual advantages which each of these two countries can bestow upon the other. In some things we can supply Canada over the land border to its great advantage; in others Canada can deliver on both our Atlantic and Pacific seaboards to our advantage; and yet the legislators of each keep watch and ward to prevent the good. They fine the Americans 75 cents for buying a ton of Canadian coal, while the Canadian is mulct 60 cents if he does the same. In other words, the Almighty has showered his blessings gratis on each country, and man, wiser than his Maker, stations the customs officer to impound them.—American Industries.

Minnesota's Good Example.

The Democratic leaders in Minnesota have addressed their party in terms of the most outspoken protest against the disloyal behavior of the McKinley Democratic Senators at Washington. They have set an example that should be followed in every State in the Union. The Democratic party can compel the obedience of its servants at Washington, if its commands are now repeated in tones stern enough and loud enough to reach the dull Senatorial ear. In truth, this command has been too long delayed. The rebellion would never have spread as it has spread if Democratic organizations all over the country had spoken out at once in denunciation of the earlier acts of treachery. There are some Democratic Senators mentioned in the Minnesota address who would not venture to disregard direct and numerous expressions of the will of their party, and if such expressions were generally made none of them would dare disobey. Democratic State committees ought to be heard from at once, and Chauncey F. Black's Democratic clubs and all Democratic and tariff reform organizations should speak out.—New York Times.

The Power of Plutocracy.

It is better not to conceal the true character of the obstacle placed in the way of the Wilson bill in the Senate. The plea that a revision of the free list and of the rates of duties on manufactured articles is being attempted in the interest of American industries and for the benefit of labor will not hold water a moment. The only labor that is being considered by the Senatorial emasculators of tariff reform is the labor of the lobby. The danger foreseen by the earliest and purest of American statesmen, feared by Jefferson, Madison and Gallatin, and thundered against by Jackson—the danger that special legislation might create privileged classes that would at length prove stronger than the Government and conquer it by corrupting it—is now distinctly in sight.

Democracy Defined.

The Democratic doctrine is the saving common sense of human government. It aims at laws which shall favor none and oppress none. It proposes to leave the individual, the unit of society and every system of government free and untrammeled so long as he makes no attempt to interfere with the rights of others. It does not look upon a government as a guardian or the people as its wards. It would restrict, as far as possible, and when practicable destroy, the organization of militia. In all these points it differentiates from both the Republican and Populist parties.

They believe in the elevation of the government and the degradation of the citizen. It believes in the elevation of the citizen and the restriction of the government.—St. Louis Republic.

Protective Mud.

St. Louis water is vile since the spring floods set in. But it is an admirable protection for the home industries occupied in the manufacture of filters and beer.

From the filter and beer industries we look for petitions against any effort of Water Commissioner Holman toward separation of the mud from the water. With the example of Pennsylvania iron manufacturers before them we do not see how the filtermakers and brewers can tamely submit to an attack on their business.

River mud and a protective tariff are alike in so many respects that the filtermakers and brewers must see their opportunities to push the consumers aside.—St. Louis Republic.

Placing the Blame.

The responsibility for causing the business troubles of the country lies at the door of the Republican party. Unrighteous taxation, unsafe finance and unlimited expenditure are a trinity of political evils sufficient to pull down the richest and strongest of the nations. But the responsibility of continuing the unsettlement and uncertainty that beset all forms of business undertaking now rests upon the Democratic party. It has the power to put an end to the suspense which hangs like a cloud over the whole land.—Philadelphia Record.

Not a Weathercock.

A contemporary observes that the Herald will keep right on doing all it can for tariff reform, notwithstanding that the drift is with the Republicans in the elections. Correct. The Herald is not a weathercock. It stands by its principles, and it expects to see them win in the long run. It will tell the truth all the year round.—Boston Herald.

The Entire Argument.

A high tariff corrupts elections, makes employers greedy, gluts home markets, creates trusts, closes mills and factories, cuts off our foreign markets, crowds the labor market, brings on strikes, overtaxes the poor and deadens the moral sense of the nation. Why stop to debate such a monstrosity?—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Tariff Prevents Trade.

For every dollar's worth of things the foreigner sends us a dollar's worth of our goods must be sent in return, and the whole swapping business consists in giving that which we get by little labor for something which costs us more. Trading makes us richer. Tariffs prevent trade.—The Courier.

AROUND PUGET SOUND

A COUNTRY WITH MANY NATURAL ADVANTAGES.

Immense Forests—Extensive Mineral Deposits—Rich Farming and Fruit Lands—America's Finest Tide-water Harbor—Coming Port for Alaska and the Orient.

Splendid Scenery.

No country has yet been discovered in which the natural conditions are perfect. There are a few localities, in this world of ours which from experience and by common consent are agreed to be unusually favored as a habitation for man. Among these the State of Washington and the Puget Sound country especially take high rank. None will dispute the well-established fact that Puget Sound is the largest and safest land locked tide water harbor on the face of the earth.

To the east runs a range of majestically picturesque mountains with countless spurs, slopes, and glens, covered with primeval forests more valuable commercially than the gold that Cortez and Pizarro sought. Stored away in these snow-capped and forest-clothed peaks are mines of gold and silver, coal and iron. A veritable Monte Cristo is even now developing, which will enrich thousands in this and generations to follow.

Far up in these snow-covered mountains are the scources whence spring the multitudinous streams making the valleys as fruitful as any on earth. To the newcomer from the prairies there may seem to be a scarcity of tillable land, but quantity is made up in quality. The fifteen inhabited islands of the Bermuda group contain an aggregate of 12,000 acres capable of cultivation, less than a half township in area, yet last year the export value of the potatoes, onions and tomatoes sent to the United States exceeded half a million dollars, and in addition a living furnished to thousands of persons on the islands. Many times the area of the Bermudas can be found in the valleys and deltas of Puget Sound, and intensive farming will bring as large results here as in the Atlantic islands. "Ten acres 'enough' is being daily exemplified here, and each season increases the number of examples.

While nature has been generous in her timberal, mineral, agricultural, horticultural, and piscatorial gifts, she has been most liberal in bestowing a benign climate. It is not the long-drawn-out, enervating clime of southern lands, but the health-giving, vigorous climate of the British isles, from whence has come the race that rules the world. Is it too much to assume that like conditions here will breed the heroes who must go north and south and west to conquer and build new lands?

The mountain barriers to the east ward off the blizzard and cyclones that desolate the midland States, and from the tepid waters of the Pacific comes the chinook wind to temper the ardent heat of summer and dull the icy fangs of winter. Storms of thunder and lightning are unknown. Excessive heat is as rare as severe cold. Flowers bloom in the open air all through the winter in sight of peaks of snow and ice. Vegetables keep in the ground through the winter, and are dug as needed.

A study of the map shows the strategic point on Puget Sound to be Everett, the tidewater terminus of the Great Northern Railway, the shortest route by many miles to and from the east. From Everett ships with lumber, wheat, and flour will go to other countries, bringing back in return teas and silks from the Orient, fish and furs from the vast waters reaching to Alaska and beyond, the ocean being of easier access here than from any other city on the Sound. Far-sighted men have shown faith in this location by establishing here some of the most important industries west of the Mississippi, representing a capitalization of over $3,000,000, and giving employment to over 1,000 men, with a monthly pay-roll amounting to $60,000.

Visitors to the World's Fair may have seen samples of paper made by the Everett Mills, and among others the largest continuous roll ever made, being eight feet wide and 28,000 feet long. The mills have a capacity of fifteen tons a day, making only the higher grades of book paper and writing manilas, together with hardware papers. The plant has cost $400,000 and the buildings and yards occupy twenty-eight acres. The possibilities of the wood pulp industry are limitless, as the supply of material here is boundless.

The Barge Works, with a steel whaleback steamship 360 feet long and of 5,100 tons burden on the ways, is the only ship yard of its kind and importance on the coast.

The Wire Nail Factory is the chief concern of this kind west of the Mississippi, having a capacity of 1,000 kegs of nails and fifty tons of drawn wire a day, making everything from a thirteen-inch spike down to the smallest brad, in all over 250 varieties.

The gold and silver smelter, built at a cost of $250,000, is the finest on the coast, handling all kinds of precious ores. There are a dozen or more lumber and shingle mills in operation, together with brick yards, iron foundries, machine shops, in all some twenty-five or thirty industries.

Lumber must always occupy a leading position, Everett commanding the unrivalled forests of this country, through the three principal logging streams of Puget Sound, the Snohomish, Stillaguamish and Skagit.

For a city of less than three years old Everett has made marvellous progress, and without municipal debt, with 6,000 population, street cars, water works, profitable and diversified industries well established, its future is assured. Its location is most sightly, giving a view of the Olympic range in the west, and the mighty Cascades in the east from Ranier to Baker—100 miles apart—the only city on the Sound where these two mountain monarchs are visible at the same time.

There are openings here for many new industries, and the Everett Land Company, Everett, Wash., invites correspondence from persons seeking new locations.

LEON STEVENS.

Telegraphers' Peculiar Penmanship.

"An expert telegrapher can always be told by his writing," said an operator to a Pittsburg Dispatch reporter. "No matter how different the writing of expert operators may be, there is a similarity that can always be distinguished by a fellow-manipulator of the keys. It seems that there are certain muscles of the hand capable of quicker motion than others. A telegrapher who is compelled to take down thirty to fifty words a minute develops these muscles and makes them do most of the work. So the writing of expert operators has a peculiar resemblance, which is particularly noticeable to persons who follow the business. A telegrapher is compelled to adopt a different style of writing from that usually taught in the schools. In the latter beauty is what is most desired; in the case of the telegrapher he must have speed, and great speed, too, or he will be thrown aside. The other day a fellow-operator and myself saw a postal-card. I had only glanced at it when I remarked that it was the writing of a man who had once been a telegraph operator. My companion agreed, and further suggested that he had received his education in a railroad office, inasmuch as he dated his postal in the right-hand corner, whereas a commercial operator always writes the date in the left-hand corner, as the blanks are made in that form. Yes, and he has been a bookkeeper; for, although the figures were written hastily, they were in perfect lines, added my friend. This all came from our noticing the class distinction in the writing of a telegrapher. We asked the man who received it who had written it. He gave the name of a now prominent business-man who began life as a messenger in a railroad office, then became a telegrapher, next was given a position of trust where book-keeping was one of his duties, finally launching out for himself in a line entirely foreign to railroading or book-keeping. The characteristics that had crept into his writing during his early training were still visible. We had guessed the history of the man from his writing."

"Soon Forgot When We Are Gone."

A strange lesson is taught by science that, in the death of all organic forms, nourishment, essential to the growth and maturity of new forms, is furnished. Then in death the best good of new forms is served, endless and ever-recurring change being the only permanent thing in nature. Ceaseless change, the outcome of which we call evolution, prostrates daily in death one hundred and twenty-five thousand human beings, and also brings a slightly larger number into the world by birth. The same idea probably governs in the higher domains of life, and applies to the social, industrial, and business phases of existence. If this be so, every one serves a certain purpose in the scheme of existence and passes into oblivion, so far as this atom of stellar dust we call the world is concerned. It is by no means a flattering utterance, though it may be the truth, that this world is bettered by the death of mortals and that those who go can be spared as well as not, and that those who are left behind, and interests which the dead abandon, do not suffer much by the separation. A nation, or even a group of centuries, resolves itself into a mere thought, and the individual actors quickly fade into the azure of the past and are as nothing to their successors in time. It is not a pleasing thought that when we shall have entered the tomb the world will be better off without us than with us.

Adoration.

Looking into the blue stillness of a nightly sky sown with twinkling stars, every one of which is a sun like our own, or much larger, as Arcturus, which is 550,000 times larger than that sun, every one of these millions of suns, no doubt, having inhabited planets revolving around it, can we marvel at the words of the psalmist, "What is man, O God, that thou art mindful of him?" An infinity of suns and systems of suns, in infinite space, in infinite duration, controlled by infinite Power and infinite Wisdom, and guided to the minutest atom and aggregation of atoms by infinite intelligence, all beget in rightly constituted mortals the deepest humility, and cause their hearts to overflow with adoration and worship of the Creator.—Pullman Journal.

THE NATION'S SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

Owing to the death of Senator Vance neither Senate nor House transacted public business Monday. Resolutions of respect to the memory of the distinguished North Carolina statesman were unanimously adopted. Appropriate resolutions were also adopted in honor of the memory of General Henry W. Slocum. One of the new measures submitted to the House was a quorum-counting rule. It is understood that the rule provides for ascertaining a quorum by counting members present and not voting and also for fining members who absent themselves from the House.

The House Tuesday by an overwhelming vote decided to adopt a quorum-counting rule. Neither undue excitement nor tumultuous scenes marked the crushing of the old legislative barriers. The parliamentary wheels then began moving again. A regular gorge of committee reports, blocked by the recent filibustering, were presented under the call of the committees. The House then, on motion of Mr. McCreary, went into committee of the whole to consider the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. After speeches by Mr. McCreary in support of and Mr. Hitt (Republican) adverse to the bill, the House at 4:40 adjourned. There was a very slim attendance of visitors in the galleries when the Senate met. The bill to create the southern judicial district of Texas and to fix the time and place for holding courts in the southern, eastern, and western districts was passed. The Senate went into executive session at half-past one o'clock. Twenty-five minutes afterward the doors were reopened, and Senator Mitchell, of Oregon, asked that the resolution to consider the Chinese treaty in open session be laid aside, when Senator Morgan will return to the Senate. This was agreed to. Senator Smith, of New Jersey, made an earnest speech, which was devoted entirely to an attack on the income tax. At the conclusion of Mr. Smith's speech the Senate adjourned.

The House devoted the entire day Wednesday to debate on the consular and diplomatic appropriations bill. It touched a wide variety of subjects and at times was brimful of interesting personalities. The Hawaiian policy of the present administration came in for a good share of attention. The appointment of Mr. Van Alen as minister to Italy provoked a very extended discussion. The bill authorizing the erection of a stone bridge across the St. Louis River, between Minnesota and Wisconsin, passed the Senate. The venerable Senator Morrill, of Vermont, spoke on the tariff, as did also Senators Turpie, Cameron, and Quay. Mr. Harris, at 5:10 p. m., moved an executive session and it was agreed to, and at 6:30 the Senate adjourned.

The day in the Senate Thursday was almost entirely consumed by a speech against the pending tariff bill by Senator Perkins, of California. But little business was transacted during the morning hour, the agreement of the Senate to the report of the conference committee on the urgent deficiency bill being the most important. The Peffer resolution for the appointment of a committee on communications for the purpose of hearing the grievances of Coxey's army was debated by Senators Spooner and Allen, both of whom favored it, but it went over without action by the expiration of the morning hour. At 5 o'clock eulogies were pronounced on the late Representative W. H. Enochs, of Ohio, after which the Senate at 5:15 adjourned. The House is making very slow progress with the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. Almost that entire day was devoted to thrashing over the old straw in the Hawaiian controversy. After 4 o'clock half the membership of the House suddenly faded away to attend the opening ball game of the season, and when this act was observed Mr. Cannon carried the committee of the whole to a vote on an amendment to prevent the increase of the salary of the Mexican Secretary of Legation. The Democrats were unable to produce a quorum, and after a roll call the House adjourned.

There was a passage at arms, figuratively speaking, between Representatives Burrows and Wheeler Friday. Mr. Wheeler was taunted with taking four columns of the Congressional Record in precisely one minute and retorted that protest came with bad grace from one whose hands "were red with parliamentary murder." Mr. Burrows recalled a previous example of Mr. Wheeler's fluency, a speech that occupied five minutes in the delivery having taken up fourteen columns of the Record. A motion was made to refer the subject to the Committee on Printing, but Mr. Wheeler cried quits by asking leave to withdraw his remarks. Outside of this episode the proceedings were very uninteresting. Practically no business was transacted. Under the rules, it being Friday, the day was devoted to business on the private calendar. Three small, unimportant bills were passed, and the rest of the day was spent in the fruitless discussion of a bill to settle some Tennessee war claims against the Government amounting to $22,000. It was finally ended when Mr. Enloe made the point of no quorum on a motion to recommit the bill. The evening session was devoted to pension business. The Senate talked tariff.

A Song Wins a Battle.

Instances are recorded where the tide of battle was turned by a song. One case occurred November 6, 1792, when the French under Dumouriez encountered the Austrians at Jemmapes, in Belgium. The day was going dead against the French when Dumouriez ran out to the front and raised the "Marseillaise." Forty thousand voices instantly took up the chorus, and inspired by the magic of the battle song, the French rallied and fell so furiously upon the Austrians that the tide of battle was completely turned and victory given for defeat.

The Sultan's Expenses.

The Sultan of Turkey is the most extravagant housekeeper in the world. According to a recent estimate his domestic budget runs thus: Repairs, new furniture, mats, beds, etc., £600,000; toilet requisites, including rouge and enamel for the ladies of the harem and jewelry, £2,000,000; extra extravagances, £2,600,000; clothes and furniture for the Sultan personally, £400,000; doucers and wages, £800,000; gold and silver plate, £500,000; maintenance of fine carriages and horses, £100,000—a total of £7,000,0000—or about $35,000,000.

Baiting the Bushes.

The way the native of the Ozarks fishes for bass is decidedly novel. In the early season, when the fish are looking for spawning beds close to shore, where the bottom is sandy and the water but a few feet deep, the native fisherman comes in his crude little boat, with a pail of minnows, a chalk line cut into six or eight feet lengths, a box of cheap hooks and a determination to catch fish without a great deal of exertion. The hooks are placed upon the lines, the latter fastened to overhanging bushes, at a distance of twenty-five to thirty feet apart, baited and let drop into the water without cork or sinker. After fifteen or twenty lines are thus set the native goes away, and not until the next morning does he again appear to gather up the fish and rebait the lines. In this way he often gets as many fine bass as the average fisherman does in two days' steady angling; usually some of the very finest and best fish are taken from the baited bushes.

ONE DOCTOR'S EXPERIENCE

Rheumatism Run Riot—Excruciating Pains Rack the Body DAY AND NIGHT.

The Greatest Relief in the Shortest Time is Secured by Using THE OWEN ELECTRIC BELT AND APPLIANCES.

Ten years ago my wife was attacked by acute articular rheumatism, the result of exposure after childbirth. The attack abated, but the disease was established and recurred from time to time for several years. She received the best treatment all the schools of medicine could furnish, without material benefit, and in September, 1890, I sent her to Clifton Springs Sanitarium, where she remained for treatment for six months. About three months after she arrived there she had a violently acute attack of rheumatism, which contracted the flexor muscles of her limbs, drawing them almost to her body. She suffered terribly, being unable for months to sleep or rest without anodynes. In this condition I brought her home. Neither day nor night could she remain in one position for more than ten minutes, and I was forced to choose between her suffering and the morphine habit. In this dilemma I procured one of Dr. A. Owen's Electric Belts, with its various appliances. After wearing it the first afternoon she slept half the night, and in a week slept through the whole night, and has had no anodyne since she first put the belt on, and has not lost a night's sleep on account of rheumatism for three years. But she is not well, however, though she slowly improves all the time. Neither she nor I will ever forget the marvelous relief given her by the use of Dr. Owen's Electric Belt.

Near the mouth of the Orinoco River, South America, are a number of islands on which whaling stations are established. After a whale has been captured it is towed to one of these stations where it is stripped of its blubber, etc., and then the huge carcass is cast adrift or anchored in some nook in the channel between the islands as a bait for sharks. The liver of the shark is much sought after, as it yields a valuable oil, and thus at times scores of boats are engaged in hunting the creature in the vicinity of the bait. The sport is very exciting and sometimes very dangerous, as only very light boats are used, and these are sometimes upset or crushed by the monsters.

An old hunter thus speaks of the killing of a tiger shark, one of the most formidable monsters of the tribe: At length the harpoon rose, and the glittering weapon sank with a thud into the neck of a large tiger. We crouched again into the canoe and clutched the rope. Away rushes the boat, a foaming wave two feet high on either side of the prow. After a few minutes the speed slackened and we are able to haul in a few fathoms. The distance was shortened, so that we could see the luminous eddies around the powerful tail of the shark, like the foam around the screw of a small steamer. At last the monster floated on his side, apparently helpless, and we hauled in the rope. On approaching him he seemed to recover his lost energies and dashed the water into spray with the lashings of his powerful tail. A few lance thrusts, however, put an end to his struggles and he floated dead on the water.

Japanese Interviewing.

A traveler who made a short stay at Nemuro was one day sitting at his dinner in a tea-house when four Japanese youths entered the room, and offered to shake hands, a most universal proceeding in that country. One of them presented his card, which bore the words, "K. Sato, Nemuro Shimbun" (Nemuro newspaper).

"Oh," said I in Japanese, "you have a newspaper in Nemuro?"

"Yes," answered one of his friends in English, a Mr. Yuasa, presenting his own card.

"You speak English then, Mr. Yuasa?"

"Yes."

"Can I offer you and your friends anything to eat or drink?"

"Yes."

"What will you have?"

"Yes."

"Will you have some sake?"

"No, no; I came to speak to you."

"Thank you."

"No, no; I came to take your life in Nemuro newspaper. Please speak where came? How old? Where go?"

A very pleasant and very long interview followed, and next morning I received the following note:

SIR—I long that you will correspond to me any events wherever you have met them in your journey when you are not so awful busy, as I have to translate and write on the Nemuro NEWS. I meet the first time here, and I hope to have your friendly favor hitherto, and thanks for your kindness I have received ever, believe me your humble servant,

F. YUASA.

The Spread Eagle.

The spread eagle signifies an eagle with two heads. Porney tells us the reason why the Emperor of Germany bears an eagle with two heads—viz., "On the union of the kingdom of Roumania, its arms, which were an eagle displayed sable, being the same as those of the Emperor, were united into one body, leaving it two wings as they are now. Charlemagne was the first Emperor of Germany, and added the second head to the eagle for his arms

ABOUT SLEEP.

Nerve Tissues Are Best Repaired by Short Naps and Food.

If I mistake not, Sir James Crichton Browne, in the course of a recent address, remarked upon the curious elacticity of our brain as regards sleep. He cited the case of people who rarely slept well or much, and who, nevertheless, were able to carry on intellectual work with ease and ability. I suppose there is a "habit" of brain in the question of sleep as in other respects, and while, ordinarily, we demand a fair quantum of absolute rest, some of us contrive, as a habit, to get along with a minimum of somnolent repose. This subject was lately recalled to mind when I happened to be dining alone with a well-known surgeon in busy practice. My friend is a man who, like myself, journeys over the length and breadth of the land. He had just returned from a long and tedious journey, tired and fagged. He sat down to dinner. Between the courses he fell sound asleep, let us say three minutes—not more, certainly. After each nap he woke up, ate his quantum and went off again into slumber. I said nothing, but watched him closely. I observed that each awakening he grew brighter, the tired look disappeared, and by the time dinner was at an end Richard was himself again. I joked him on his installments of sleep. His reply was characteristic.

"Don't you know," said he, "that it isn't a long sleep that is needed to refresh an active brain? Nerve tissue is repaired easily with very little sleep if you also take food."

Of my own experience the remark holds good; and it reveals a very curious and in some respects anomalous condition of the brain and its ways.

A Tip to the Thief.

The smallest incident, which, to most people, seems too insignificant to notice, has often caused the capture of a criminal or the detection of a plot. All things are important to certain people. A man tried his door the other day to see whether it was locked, and caused a crime.

He and his wife were preparing to go to the theater. There was nobody else in the house. His wife glanced out of the window and saw a man standing in the shadow of a tree across the street. She thought nothing of it at the time. As they were leaving the house the husband clicked the latch of the door, as usual. As they walked up the woman's eye again fell upon the motionless form in the shadow of the tree.

She became suspicious.

"Did you lock the door when you came out?" she asked of her husband.

"I suppose so. I always do," he said.

"Hadn't you better make sure, dear?"

"Oh, I am sure. It's all right."

"But won't you go back and see? I'm afraid you didn't, and I'd like to be certain about it."

So he walked back and tried the door. Of course it was locked, but his wife's anxiety was relieved.

That simple act cost him a great deal. The man across the street had not contemplated robbing that house before, for he didn't know whether any person was at home or not. When the person who lived there went back to try the door it satisfied him that no one was in it. He crept back the alleyway, pried open a rear window and helped himself to the contents of the silver closet. And he wouldn't have done it except for that trifling, natural incident that told him so much. — Philadelphia Press.

The Retired Burglar.

"Dear me," said the retired burglar, "I don't know when I have seen anything so unprofessional."

He was comfortably seated in a variety theater, says the New York Sun. The turn then on was performed by two men, a good father and a wicked son. It appears that the son had robbed the father and run away, and he had come back now to crack the old man's safe for a bigger stake. When the burglar came in upon the darkened stage he looked everywhere, except where it stood, for the safe, which was in plain view of the audience; but at last his eye fell upon it. Then to the amazement of the retired burglar, instead of proceeding quickly and quietly to rob the safe, the stage burglar, having located it, turned to the footlights, and announced that he would sing a song. He had an excellent voice, but his singing disturbed the retired burglar greatly.

"Dreadful! dreadful!" he said. "Think of the time he's wasting, to say nothing of the danger of waking up everybody in the house. Look a that! There's the old man now."

So it was. He came in at the rear of the stage just as the son, who had finished his song, had begun on the safe. There was a grapple, and a grand 'rastle. The old man came out on top. A reconciliation followed. Now here was an instance where stopping to sing a song had been attended by the most happy results.

"Can't help it," said the retired burglar, "it wouldn't happen so once in a million times."

Sponge Fishing.

Fishing for sponges in the Mediterranean is done chiefly by divers, though inferior kinds are got with a trawl. The finest divers are the Greeks, who go for the purpose all over the Mediterranean in their native boats. The industry is very arduous and even dangerous. An average hand can manage twenty fathoms (one hundred and twenty feet), but it takes an exceptionally good man to go down thirty fathoms (one hundred and eighty feet), and thirty-three fathoms is the limit. The pressure of the water at this depth is so great that, in spite of the protection afforded by the dress, some two or three per cent. of the sponge-fishers die annually from the direct effects of the strain.

ACCORDING to Secretary Lamont, there are no more Indians to fight. Here ends another avenue of industry, for with no Indians to fight what is to become of the boys who run away after a full course of dime-novel reading?

IF the dynamite fever doesn't die out in Carrara that province will soon need all the product of its famous marble quarries for its cemeteries.

Housekeepers Should Remember.

The Government Chemists, after having analyzed all the principal brands of baking powder in the market, in their reports placed the "Royal" at the head of the list for strength, purity and wholesomeness; and thousands of tests all over the country have further demonstrated the fact that its qualities are, in every respect, unrivaled.

Avoid all baking powders sold with a gift or prize, or at a lower price than the Royal, as they invariably contain alum, lime or sulphuric acid, and render the food unwholesome.

Central Asian Deserts

Mr. W. Woodville Rockhill describes in an entertaining style, in The Century, his attempt to cross Tibet. His picture of a portion of the country he traversed is not alluring.

Life in the Central Asian deserts is rough indeed, he says.

Nature is without attraction of any kind; it is bleak and repelling; never a tree is seen, and scarcely a flower, except for a month or two in the year. Probably the Arctic regions alone offer a more meager flora. One see only coarse grass, or bare, gravel-strewn ground of a reddish tinge. In the most favored valleys, and near some brackish lakelet, are occasionally seen bunches of long black-haired yaks, antelopes, or wild asses. A stray hare or wolf runs across the trail; a sheldrake or eagle flies slowly off at one's approach. Were it not for the wild yaks, travel across this great plateau would be impossible, for dry yakdung is the only fuel to be found. Should a murrain destroy the yaks, as recently it destroyed the lyre-horned antelope, traveling, except along two frequented trails, would become unfeasible. Violent winds sweep the country daily, carrying with them dense clouds of akaline dust, which parch and crack the skin and blind the eyes. When it is not blowing, it is snowing, hailing, or raining. Bogs, marshes, and sandy wastes, cut at short distances by low ranges of mountains rarely rising above the line of perpetual snow (though, be it remembered, the lowest valleys are at a greater elevation above the sea than the summit of Mont Blanc) are the characteristics of the bleak country which we had to cross before the inhabited regions of Tibet could be reached.

A Friendly Ant.

The president of the Linnean Society, in a recent lecture delivered in the gardens of the Royal Botanic Society, drew attention to the curious and intimate relationship existing between some animals and plants, especially in tropical countries, where the struggle for existence is so fierce. One plant, known as the bull's-horn acacia, of Central America, provides a species of ant not only with food and drink, in the shape of tiny egg-like bodies upon its leaves and a sweet liquid contained in special wells on the stalk, but in addition it furnishes a tenement for the ant in the hollow spines with which it is armed. In return for these favors the ant protects the acacia from its enemies.

Gladstone's Wonderful Physique.

It may be of historic importance to record that about six weeks ago Mr. Gladstone was thoroughly examined by his medical adviser, who found him to be a wonderfully strong and healthy man for his age, with a vigorous heart, a good appetite, sound lungs, muscular limbs, and a full and deep voice. He was altogether full of vivacity and vitality. Mr. Gladstone informed his medical attendant that he slept excellently, and that in the intervals of work he still found the greatest enjoyment in his literary pursuits. —London Lancet.

Frozen—Then on Fire!

Like the application of ice to the small of your back, is the sensation produced by the chill that precedes the fever of malaria. Then comes the roasting stage, when every vein throbs and is scorched as if with liquid fire. Then you well nigh dissolve in exhausting perspiration that leaves you as limp as a wet dish rag. These alternating torments are not remediable permanently with quinine, which is, moreover, a most damaging cumulative poison. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters drives out the foe and repels its further attacks. It is the leading medicinal safeguard against malaria all over the continents of North and South America, Guatemala, the Isthmus of Panama, Mexico and Australia. It regulates the liver, stomach, bowels and kidneys, enriches the blood, and promotes appetite, sleep and digestion. It is not only a medicine, but an effective cordial welcome to the most delicate palate. Rheumatic tendency is counteracted by it.

The Emperor and the Pirate.

Alexander the Great was about to pass sentence of death on a noted pirate, but previously asked him,—

"Why dost thou trouble the seas?"

"Why," rejoined the rover boldly, "dost thou trouble the whole world? I, with one ship, go in quest of solitary adventure and am therefore called pirate. Thou, with a great army, warrest against nations and therefore art called Emperor. Sir, there is no difference betwixt us but in the name and means of doing mischief."

Alexander, so far from being displeased with the culprit, was so impressed with the force of his appeal that he dismissed him unpunished.

If your nearest, best and most esteemed neighbors had written the following letters they could be no more worthy of your confidence than they now are, coming, as they do, from well known, intelligent and trustworthy citizens who, in their several neighborhoods, enjoy the fullest confidence and respect of all.

Mrs. F. L. Inman, of Manton, Wexford Co., Mich., whose portrait heads this article, writes as follows: "I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription about a year ago. For years I have suffered with falling and ulceration of the womb, but to-day, I am enjoying perfect health.

I took four bottles of the 'Prescription' and two of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Every lady suffering from female weakness should try the 'Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery.'"

Miss Mary J. Tanner, North Lawrence, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., writes: "I was sick for four years. For two years I could do no work. I had five different physicians, who pronounced my case a poor or impoverished condition of the blood, and uterine trouble. I suffered a great deal with pain in both sides, and much tenderness on pressing over the womb. I bloated at times in my bowels and limbs; was troubled with leucorrhea. I could not sleep, and was troubled with palpitation of the heart. Suffered a great deal of pain in my head, temples, forehead and eyes. I had a troublesome cough, raised a great deal and at times experienced a good deal of pain in my chest and lungs. My voice at times was very weak. I suffered excruciating monthly, periodical pains. Since taking seven bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription some time ago, I have enjoyed better health than I have for more than four years previously; in fact, for several months past I have been able to work at sewing. I have gained in weight thirty-nine pounds since taking your medicines; the soreness and pain have disappeared." Yours truly,

Mary J. Tanner

Mrs. Alex. Robertson, of Half Rock, Mercer Co., Mo., writes: "For twenty years, I suffered with womb disease and most of the time I was in constant pain which rendered life a great burden. I cannot express what I suffered. I had eight doctors and all the medicine I had from them failed—the one after the other.

I was nervous, cold hands and feet, palpitation, headache, backache, constipation, leucorrhea and no appetite, with bearing-down pains. I got so weak I could not walk around. I had to keep my bed, thinking I would never get any better.

One day my husband got one of your little books and read it to me. He said there was nothing doing me any good. I said I would try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I did try it. After the first few weeks my appetite was better; I was able to sit up in bed. I wrote to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, at Buffalo, N. Y., and described my case; they sent me a book on woman's diseases. I read carefully and followed the directions as near as I could and took the medicine for two years. With the blessing of God and your medicines, I am entirely cured. That was three years ago." Yours truly,

Mrs Alex Robertson

Gave Pain Balm a Trial.

My wife was confined to her bed for over two months with a very severe attack of rheumatism. We could get nothing that would afford her any relief, and as a last resort gave Chamberlain's Pain Balm a trial. To our great surprise she began to improve after the first application, and by using it regularly she was soon able to get up and attend to her house work. E. H. Johnson, of C. J. Kuntson & Co., Kensington, Minn. 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

Cured of Rheumatism.

The many cases of rheumatism cured by Chamberlain's Pain Balm during the past few months have given the people great confidence in its curative properties, and have shown that there is one preparation that can be depended upon for that painful and aggravating disease. Honaker Bros., Lorain, Ohio, say: "Mr. Moses Price, of this place, was troubled with rheumatism for a long time. Chamberlain's Pain Balm has cured him. He says that the Balm has no equal." A Joke on the Governor.

Last fall Governor Mathews went into the Indiana state building at the World's fair, where his son had a position in the checkroom. It was the rule there that all persons must fall into line as they entered and be served in their turn. The Governor either knew nothing about this rule, or else he did not think of it, but stepped up to the window of the check room from another direction and requested his son to check a parcel for him. The son replied, "I can't do it, father; the rule, here is that each one must be waited on just as his turn comes." "But," said the governor, "I want you to check this parcel right away." Again the son replied, "I would like to, father, but it's against the rules. You will have to take your place in the line and wait your turn." So there was no other way for the governor to do and he fell in line, and made his way to the window by the slow, tedious method which is familiar to all who attended the Fair. The son now delights in teasing his father about this little incident. Not long after this, in the presence of his father he told it to some people from his own state. He said, "I tell you, that time, for once, I had father just where I wanted him, and I made him obey my orders." "Yes," said his father, "and I would have given anything to have had him across my knee just then." It certainly was a good joke on the governor, and now since it is all over, no doubt, he enjoys it as well as anyone else. ***

A New Swindle.

In central Indiana they have found out a new swindler. A stranger comes along who claims to be a goverment officer searching for counterfeit money. He asks to see the farmer's coin, and, selecting a "suspicious" piece, he tests it with an acid he carries with him, which turns it black, and then he declares it spurious. As the farmer has no right to carry counterfeit coin the stranger confiscates the piece and goes along to the next victim.

The important experiences of others interesting. The following is no exception. "I had been troubled with heart disease years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost purple. Before I had taken one bottle of the Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation six others began taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 509 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of a eminent specialist in heart diseases, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from all opiates or dangerous drugs.

PAINT cracks.—It often costs more to prepare a house for repainting that has been painted in the first place with cheap ready-mixed paints, than it would to have painted it twice with strictly pure white lead, ground in pure linseed oil.

Strictly Pure White Lead forms a permanent base for repainting and never has to be burned or scraped off on account of scaling or cracking. It is always smooth and clean. To be sure of getting strictly pure white lead, purchase any of the following brands:

"Anchor," "Collier,"
"Eckstein," "Shipman,"
"Armstrong & McKelvy," "Southern,"
"Beymer-Bauman," "Red Seal,"
"Davis-Chambers," "Fahnestock."

FOR COLORS.—National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, a one-pound can to a 25-pound keg of Lead and mix your own paints. Saves time and annoyance in matching shades, and insures the best paint that it is possible to put on wood.

A Railroad Track Sinks.

The following account of the sinking of the track near Laporte reminds DeKalb folks of the big sink on the Lake Shore road in this county just east of Sedan, that at one time forced the company to build a track around it on solid ground. The Sedan sink cut a clean channel that showed a black canal of water nearly 100 rods long. It was at last filled by using many thousands of old ties, but the black water is still visible each side of the track with the ends of the ties in sight. The item reads:

"The sink-hole in the fill across Lilly lake in this city is causing the Chicago & West Michigan railway no end of trouble and the officials appear to be at a loss to know what to do. A crib was built and filled, but it did not settle evenly and finally it carried some 200 feet of the bridge and track down with it out of sight. Small trees, timbers and car load after car load of old ties, as well as over three thousand cubic yards of earth, have been dumped into the hole with apparently but little effect. Two trains are employed, one at each end of the bridge, and the work is being carried on night and day. The bridge is impassable and all trains run around the obstruction over the Lake Erie & Western road.

Cure for Headache.

As a remedy for all forms of headache Electric Bitters has proved to be the very best. It effects a permanent cure, and the most dreaded habitual sick headache yields to its influence. We urge all who are afflicted to procure a bottle, and give this remedy a fair trial. In cases of habitual constipation Electric Bitters cure by giving the needed tone to the bowels, and few cases long resist the use of this medicine. Try it once. After Washington, What?

Chicago Record.

After the armies led by Coxey, Jones, Kelly and Frye have "taken Washington," what then? Will the privates remain in capital city, scatter through surrounding cities or return to their original starting point?

It now looks as if several thousand of them would reach Washington although the number is not nearly so large as was at one time expected. It will however, be large enough to increase very materially the unemployed population of several of the states of the east. Do the unemployed in the east, who apparently are welcoming these new recruits to their ranks, see in such accession of numbers any brighter prospects for securing labor? If ten men are out of employment in any place will employment be more easily procured if the ten become twenty?

But suppose the ten are already subsisting, in part, upon charity; will their rations be more abundant if the number is doubled? If the converging armies do not intend to remain, but intend to return to their homes, wherever they may be, how is the transfer to be accomplished? The difficulties these men meet in leaving their homes will be nothing as compared with the difficulty they will experience in getting back. They have been somewhat encouraged in departing; their return may be seriously opposed. On the other hand, the authorities of eastern cities will be anxious to be rid of this nomadic population, but the command to "move on" will not be potent enough to send them hundreds of miles from Washington. Is it to be expected that the same men who lead these contingents east will be able to command them to return? From the difficulties these leaders are having in getting their armies to Washington, it is quite likely they will favor "mustering out" before the return march is undertaken.

It looks very much as if the number of unemployed in the east were to be increased by several thousands, more or less, who will only disturb the present unsettled condition of things. If there is any one class of men who ought naturally to oppose the advent of this aggregation of wanderers in the east it is the unemployed wage-worker of that section. It is not possible that the commonwealers can be of the least benefit to him, while every one that remains will only add to his difficulties and perplexities.

Well Supply Store.

IN HONOR OF PAUL REVERE.

Boston Holds the Inaugural Celebration of Patriots' Day.

Special to the Chicago Record.

Boston, Mass., April 19, 1894.—"Turn out, the regulars are coming." Those ominous words were uttered by Paul Revere when he took his wild ride on the night of April 19, 1775, and they rang out on the lowlands of Middlesex and caused a thrill to run through the hearts of every person who heard them. Again were these words heard in the valleys of the Middlesex last night. Mr. Robert W. Sise, who is a familiar figure on horseback in the Mystic valley, and whose tall handsome figure makes a striking appearance on his horse, was the modern Paul Revere of Wednesday night. He was dressed in a suit a facsimile of the one Paul Revere wore on that memorable occasion. Three coal-black chargers bore him on the different parts of his way. The start was made from the Medford-Somerville line, near the foot of Winter Hill, a few minutes after 11. Every house in the vicinity was decorated in an elaborate manner, and both sides of the street was lined with people to see the start. A huge pile of barrels at the starting point was set ablaze and was the signal for "Paul's" start.

As the flames shot up the horseman galloped off amid the yells of the onlookers. It was but an instant it seemed before the old Royal house near Medford square was reached, and as the bearer of the eventful tidings approached it his shrill voice piped out the cry of the original Paul: "Turn out, the regulars are coming!" The sharp rattle of musketry, carrying with it a flash of fire, was heard on all sides, while fire works and red lights served to make the scene more effective. At Cooper tavern a grand reception was given by the crack of musketry and the firing of fire-crackers and the cheers of the crowd that had gathered there.

At the foot of Arlington heights a halt was made by the horseman of this latter-day event, and a change of horses was made. From here to Lexington is only five miles, and the "village clock" pointed to 12:10 a. m. as Paul Revere "dashed through the town." As the rider passed the old Hancock Congregational church the chimes pealed forth. Dashing up Hancock avenue to the old Hancock house, where 119 years ago Wednesday night John Hancock and John Adams were sleeping when Paul Revere arrived, and the modern Paul cried out; "Turn out, turn out, the regulars are coming!" Miss Gertrude Dudley Sprague, granddaughter of old Gov. Dudley, impersonated Dorothy Quincy, who stood at the window and saluted the rider with the remark: "What's the noise, what's the noise?" "Noise!" replied Paul, "there will be noise enough before morning; the regulars are coming." After this startling announcement the house was illuminated and Mr. Sise, who had now ceased to be Paul Revere, vanished inside the old colonial building.

Boston inaugurated the celebration of Patriot's day by holding exercises in the old North church last night, where lanterns were hung in the tower of the old edifice.

They Keep the Hall Warm.

The G. A. R. hall of this place is occupied every evening of the week by some secret order. On Mondays there is the regular meeting of the G. A. R. post. On Tuesday, the first and third one in each month, the Relief Corps meets, while the Ladies' Aid Society, which is auxiliary to the Sons of Veterans, meets the second and fourth Tuesdays. On Wednesdays the A. O. U. W. meet. On Thursdays the Sons of Veterans have their regular meeting. On Friday, it is L. A. O. U. W., or Ladies of the Ancient Order of Workmen. On Saturday evenings there is a regular meeting of the new political secret society, the "A. P. A.," or American Protective Association. So it will be seen that the hall is kept warm. It ought to make the rent cheap. But what a job it must be for the janitor to change the furniture, "properties," tools, etc., each day.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

COXEY and his army of dead beats and tramps with thinned ranks are now in Maryland and gradually approaching Washington. What they expect to accomplish by this wild scheme, is very difficult to understand. It is more than likely they do not care to accomplish anything. They get free meals, free lodgings, such as they are, and free rides on such railroads and canals as they can terrify by demonstrations but little less than force, and in this way gain an easy living without work. It is mockery to call them "workingmen," or "unemployed." Nine tenths of them are genuine tramps who have had a falling out with work years ago, and would refuse work now, if offered them, as has been done several times. They say they are going to ask Congress to issue 500 millions of fiat, or irredeemable greenbacks, to pay out to them and similar "unemployed" for work on the roads. But they know Congress will do no such a thing and they would not work on the roads if Congress furnished the money. No person of good sense will admit that Congress has a right to issue such a sum of any money for such a purpose. And much less will it be done now when we are obliged to increase our debt each month in order to keep up expenses which a failing revenue does not cover. Their plan would increase the national debt at one stroke 500 millions. It is useless to claim that this movement has the good opinion of any respectable or patriotic element. It has not. Railroads carry them from point to point because they are dangerous and troublesome, and by so doing they can get rid of them. The same is true of cities. Each town will feed them to get rid of them, and so send them on to the next. Only people of socialist or anarchist tendencies have any sympathy with them. And any man who espouses a cause so nearly akin to the doctrine and practices of the anarchists, proclaims the dangerous tendency of his opinions and the opinions of those who believe with him.

When some people want counsel they proceed to consult their own interests.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

CONCORD.

Miss Minnie Hornberger has returned from visiting her sister, Mrs. Myrtle Towsley, at Elkhart.

Hugh Watt attended the funeral of a relative at Spencerville Saturday.

Levi Brown died of consumption at the home of his brother Samuel last Thursday morning, aged 36 years, 5 mos. and 11 days. Owing to an unknown cause the minister disappointed them. After waiting some time the undertaker proceeded with the burial. The remains were placed by the side of his parents in the Presbyterian cemetery. The funeral sermon will be preached here May 6 at 10:30 a. m.

Will Smurr is lying very low at his home with typhoid pneumonia. Dr. Hines of Auburn, Dr. Bowman and Dr. Morr, of St. Joe, are attending physicians

Last Friday Cormie Gibford closed a very successful term of school. The ladies of the district prepared a good dinner for teacher and scholars. The afternoon exercises were omitted that all might attend the funeral.

Some of the farmers that were smart in the month of March have failed in their first crop of potatoes, or else they are going to have the second on the same ground.

Mrs. Sherman Ricketts is reported no better. Her mother, Mrs. Wade, moved her over to her own home in order to give her the proper care. Her disease is stomach trouble.

Will Baker and Will Scott are putting up a good many rods of picket fence.

Wheat and grass are looking fine under the recent rains.

Ernest Johnson and Bert Mochamer were in Spencerville Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Gibford attended the funeral of the latter's aunt, Mrs. H. H. Fales, of Spencerville, last Sunday.

The M. P. church here will observe their 4th anniversary Thursday evening, May 3d. All are cordially invited to attend.

The old fashioned meeting held at Rehoboth last Sunday was highly enjoyed by all. The entire audience sang and not a note sounded on the organ.

Last Friday morning Mrs. Rebecca White Fales departed this life at the age of 76 years. She leaves her aged husband, two daughters, four sons, several grandchildren, two sisters, two brothers and a large circle of friends to mourn her departure. The funeral obsequies were conducted by her pastor. The remains were interred in the Spencerville cemetery. Mr. and Mrs Fales were the last to represent the old pioneer couples since the death of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Wasson.

IT IS ALL BOSH for the populists to say the reason they sympathize with the Coxey tramps is because Coxey and his crowd want work. These gangs have passed tremblingly by a dozen chances to work, and could not be hired to work. Even in Pennsylvania there is a general cry for more farm hands. But it is not the kind of a job the commonwealers are seeking. Farm work is a reality and not a soft snap.

WATERLOO.

Charles Voss Jr. and family, of Peru, Ind., have returned home after a short visit at the old home.

Mr. and Mrs. Butler, Mrs. Dan Leas and Mrs. Levi Till have gone to Indianapolis to represent the Eastern Star lodge at this place.

Rev. Mygrants and family are visiting Waterloo friends. They are on their way to their new home in Kendallville.

Miss Cora McEnterfer entertained a number of her lady friends at tea Monday evening.

S. A. Bowman has been improving his home by the addition of a veranda.

Lew Mateon and wife spent Sunday in town, the guests of B. B. Long and wife.

Charles Bassett was taken suddenly ill on the street last Friday, but is now able to ride out.

Miss Stella Leas entertained the Grammar school literary society Saturday evening last.

R. M. Lockhart and Wm. McDonald are delegates to the republican state convention.

Mrs. Huber has been ill for several weeks, part of the time seriously, but is now improving.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" is billed for an entertainment at the opera house, Friday April 26.

Ada Williamson has been sick since last Saturday, much of the time suffering greatly. Her sister, Mrs. McCord of Auburn, came over the first of the week, and is with here at this writing.

W. C. Francis has been building a bay window in his house, besides various other improvements.

The members of the L. M. C. held their regular session the evening of Tuesday, May 1, at the home of Mrs. Emma Plum.

Dell Lock, of Decatur, accompained by his sister Effie, attended the Methodist conference at Bluffton.

Rev. Richard Locke lately spent a number of days in New York, where he visited a classmate, went everywhere, saw everything, preached several times and found it altogether a delightful season; but he loves "dear old Boston" and was pleased to be home again.

Working on the road, making gardens and whipping carpets have to be done between the rains these days, since generally it is about ready to rain or only just stopped.

We have the promise of peaches, if trees filled with blossoms amount to anything.

The chicken pie supper given by the W. C. T. U. ladies Saturday evening in Abbey's block was well attended, and especially when the stormy evening is considered. The chicken pie was pronounced unusually fine.

Mr. Bowlby had an epileptic fit Sunday evening. Dr. Carpenter and his friends were up with him nearly all night. He was better Monday.

Bread, cakes, pies, confectionery, etc. are soon to be sold from Mrs. Bigler's building, formerly occupied by her as a millinery shop. Some "competition is the life of trade.

Mrs. Dr. Showalter was unanimously elected a member of the L. M. C. last Tuesday.

Mrs E. Dickinson went to Angola, some ten or more days ago, with her little daughter Harriet to visit friends. Here the little girl was taken very sick and continued in a serious condition a number of days. She is now improving. The little boy, who was at home with his father and grandmother, also became sick, but was better Sunday.

COXEY'S "western armies" have been trying to force the railroads to carry them free. Why should railroads carry these men free, whether they are working men or are trampe? There is no reason, and no reason is given except that the force is large enough to compel the roads to do it.

IF ANYTHING were needed to impress on our people the fact that dangerous and anarchistic ideas are growing up in this country it would be furnished by wild schemes of the Coxeys, the Fryes, and other "generals," "colonels" etc, that are leading hordes over the country demanding food and shelter and transportation. Demanding it, not because they pay for it, or are even willing to pay for it, but because they are strong enough to take it. And to the shame of our civilization, it must be said there is now and then a demagogue, laying claim however, to respectability, who talks in favor of these half anarchist, half piratical schemes.

THE populists governor of Kansas says the "Coxey movement is awe inspiring." We should say it is. The cities he and his armies get near, become "awe inspired" at once and proceed to shell out the food and drink that these hordes are traveling for. They also inspire the railroads with awe, often compelling a road to give the train for a free ride. There is "awe" in direction. The commonwealers themselves are now and then "awe struck." This happens every time they are offered work. It makes their knees knock together with fear. The facts are that these gangs of trampe are living high partly because people are afraid of them, and partly because a few people with loose ideas of good citizenship and morality, are giving them encouragement.

The Butler Canning Factory.

Citizens of Butler and many farmers of the vicinity met Tuesday in their town hall and completed the organization of their canning factory. The capital stock is put at $10,000, of which $6,900 has been subscribed. They expect to use the large hotel building on the corner north of the Aldrich hotel. The farmers will be called on to contract to raise a certain number of acres of corn, tomatoes, peas, etc, etc. The Butler people are showing commendable enterprise. As far as the farmers are directly interested, it would seem that a canning factory would be the best thing that could be started, although the hands employed would have work only during the summer, unless they put in the winter helping to make the cans which probably could not be done to any great extent.

A LAMP UNTO MY FEET, AND A LIGHT UNTO MY PATH.

Is the word of the Lord—Sermon by Rev. Dr. Johnson April 22, 1894.
The South-Bend Daily Tribune.

Below is a synopsis of Rev. Johnson's sermon at the First Presbyterian church Sunday morning:

Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and and a light unto my path.—Psalms 119-105.

You all remember when for the first time you stood on the shores of the sea. You were impressed with its sublimity. Your eye took in the vast sweep of its waters, but was unequal in its attempt to touch the far shore. It was so vast that you could grasp only a few of its secrets. But passing from the Atlantic you stand on the shore of another sea. It is the sea that we call the Bible. Its waters wash all shores. It is so deep that no student has exhausted it and so wide that no one has touched its far shore. But what is the suggestion of our text? Well, it invites us to study the Bible as a lamp. The comparison is at once beautiful and suggestive. The lamp that you carry in your hand is condensed sunlight. It is a little solar sun and illumines the path over which you move.

But God in His providence has furnished the Bible as a moral lamp for every one. It has gone into all the languages of the earth. It is as free as the air that we breathe and the sunlight that warms our world. Our very instincts cry for its light in the dark hours. We naturally expect that our Father in Heaven will give us instruction as to how we are to live. He has already at our creation kindled the fire of conscience in our souls. The little flame burning within us makes us long for more light. Hence the Bible is God's answer to the question and deep need of our souls. With it in our hand we can escape the pitfalls in our path It warns us of the perils by the way and illumines the right path for our feet. The fact that it is a light unto our path suggests that there i special mission for every man.

There is a path open to us all. Life is not an adventure. There is a distinct plan for every man to unfold and a sublime purpose to realize. The glory of our life will be the working out of God's plan. He has planned wisely for us. The path that He opens is the best possible path and with the lamp in our hand we cannot fail. They who follow the light of this lamp, reach the largest development in character. It is a lamp to walk by when living and a light for our dying hour. It makes the dark hour of death luminous with the light of heaven. A general of our late war after a brilliant victory was riding over the battle field amid the living and the dead. With his eyes wet with tears he paused in the presence of a dead soldier who had lost his life in the defense of the flag. He was lying with his face toward the sky with the open Bible on his breast. On the inspired page the general read, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me." It was the lamp that made bright the last hour of the dying soldier.

But what particular truths does this lamp illumine? It throws light upon God. It reveals His character. It does not attempt to prove His existence. It simply points us to the brilliant sky and says: "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handiwork." It would be a waste of time to prove the existence of the sun. His light is the revelation that He is. The poem tells us that there is a poet; the picture is the revelation of the artist, the invention points us to the inventor, and the universe declares that God is, but the lamp tells us that there is one God. It has revealed that sublime fact. This truth stimulates science in her study, for if there is one God then there is unity of plan and thought in the universe. Hence, modern science owes a large debt to the Bible; it is the lamp of the christian that has driven the darkness of idolatry from Europe. When St. Paul touched the soil of that great continent heathen temples were everywhere. But the darkness retreated as he marched with the lamp in his hand.

But what the Bible has done for Europe it will yet do for all the continents. The hour is near when the Bible will leaven the whole earth with the sublime truth that there is one God; but His lamp reveals His character. Even in the Old Testament, the revelation is warm and tender. Study the character of Jacob and you will get a glorious conception of the mercy of God. The God of Bethel is the Father of our New Testament. Jacob is going into exile, fleeing from the just wrath of his brother. He had cheated his brother out of his birthright. This was the mistake of his life. He appreciated it, but had he waited God's time it would have come to him. That was in God's plan. Had he waited there would have been no necessity for his going into exile; but in his journey he pauses at Bethel at the evening hour; he lies down under the brilliant sky with a stone for a pillow. In his sleep he dreams he sees a ladder reaching from earth to heaven. At the top of the ladder the Lord stands and declares His mercy to the dreaming pilgrim. He gives him the ground upon which he lies and promises to be with him and bring him to his home again. The pilgrim, Jacob, awakes from his dream and begins to bargain with God, promising that he will give God a tenth if He will keep him and bless him and bring him back safely to the old home. He failed to grasp by faith the revelation already given. God had promised to bless Jacob, hence there was no need of a bargain. God knew Jacob perfectly and in the light of what he was He promised to be with him and bless him. What a revelation of the rich grace of God. The God of Bethel is the one for us to trust.

But coming to our New Testament the lamp throws a brighter light on the character of God. He there reveals Himself as our Father in heaven. The Savior has revealed Him What a picture He paints for us in the parable of the prodigal son. He standing on the housetop watching for the return of the lost prodigal. He is ever looking for the lost sheep. Glorious revelation of our Father in heaven. But this lamp also gives us a revelation of man. It tells us that he was created in the image of God; that is his glory. It is that divine image—the angel in him—that makes him the crown and climax of creation. But through sin he has became a fallen temple. Studying the ruins you get a large conception of his original dignity and glory. When we open the magnificent grave of some ancient city the palaces and libraries and galleries that we find tell us of the original glory of the once splendid city.

But while the lamp reveals the tragedy of the fall it also reveals the tragedy of the cross. At the cross God reveals Himself as our friend. He invites us to behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. Glorious lamp of God; may it ever throw its light on our path.

In the evening to a crowded house Dr. Johnson delivered the first of his series of discourses on the "Life of Our Lord." The text was from St. Mathew 2. 2. "For we have seen His star in the east and have come to worship Him."

It simply points us to the brilliant sky and says: "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handiwork." It would be a waste of time to prove the existence of the sun. His light is the revelation that He is. The poem tells us that there is a poet; the picture is the revelation of the artist, the invention points us to the inventor, and the universe declares that God is, but the lamp tells us that there is one God. It has revealed that sublime fact. This truth stimulates science in her study, for if there is one God then there is unity of plan and thought in the universe. Hence, modern science owes a large debt to the Bible; it is the lamp of the christian that has driven the darkness of idolatry from Europe. When St. Paul touched the soil of that great continent heathen temples were everywhere. But the darkness retreated as he marched with the lamp in his hand.

But what the Bible has done for Europe it will yet do for all the continents. The hour is near when the Bible will leaven the whole earth with the sublime truth that there is one God; but His lamp reveals His character. Even in the Old Testament, the revelation is warm and tender. Study the character of Jacob and you will get a glorious conception of the mercy of God. The God of Bethel is the Father of our New Testament. Jacob is going into exile, fleeing from the just wrath of his brother. He had cheated his brother out of his birthright. This was the mistake of his life. He appreciated it, but had he waited God's time it would have come to him. That was in God's plan. Had he waited there would have been no necessity for his going into exile; but in his journey he pauses at Bethel at the evening hour; he lies down under the brilliant sky with a stone for a pillow. In his sleep he dreams he sees a ladder reaching from earth to heaven. At the top of the ladder the Lord stands and declares His mercy to the dreaming pilgrim. He gives him the ground upon which he lies and promises to be with him and bring him to his home again. The pilgrim, Jacob, awakes from his dream and begins to bargain with God, promising that he will give God a tenth if He will keep him and bless him and bring him back safely to the old home. He failed to grasp by faith the revelation already given. God had promised to bless Jacob, hence there was no need of a bargain. God knew Jacob perfectly and in the light of what he was He promised to be with him and bless him. What a revelation of the rich grace of God. The God of Bethel is the one for us to trust.

But coming to our New Testament the lamp throws a brighter light on the character of God. He there reveals Himself as our Father in heaven. The Savior has revealed Him What a picture He paints for us in the parable of the prodigal son. He standing on the housetop watching for the return of the lost prodigal. He is ever looking for the lost sheep. Glorious revelation of our Father in heaven. But this lamp also gives us a revelation of man. It tells us that he was created in the image of God; that is his glory. It is that divine image—the angel in him—that makes him the crown and climax of creation. But through sin he has became a fallen temple. Studying the ruins you get a large conception of his original dignity and glory. When we open the magnificent grave of some ancient city the palaces and libraries and galleries that we find tell us of the original glory of the once splendid city.

But while the lamp reveals the tragedy of the fall it also reveals the tragedy of the cross. At the cross God reveals Himself as our friend. He invites us to behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. Glorious lamp of God; may it ever throw its light on our path.

In the evening to a crowded house Dr. Johnson delivered the first of his series of discourses on the "Life of Our Lord." The text was from St. Mathew 2. 2. "For we have seen His star in the east and have come to worship Him."

THE Press says "the COURIER concedes that the republican county papers are more ably edited than the COURIER" Will the Press show where we said this? If not we must again ask him to open his bible if he has one, and read where a solemn command is given in regard to telling a lie. We have often said however, that republican editors about here, copy their editorial from the columns of some favorite daily, like the Indianapolis Journal. They have never denied this, even the Press cannot point out a single editorial on party doctrine that his editor wrote.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Many Persons Drowned by the Falling of a Pier—Wreck on the C. B. & Q—Fatal Land Slide—Death of Senator Stockbridge—Kelley's Army at Des Moines.

SHORT WORK.

The Bank Conspiracy Case Results in Conviction.

Indianapolis special: The investigation of the alleged attempt to corrupt the jury that was trying France A. Coffin, Percival B. Coffin, and Albert S. Reed, began before Judge Baker Tuesday morning. No session of the bank case trial attracted so many persons to the United States court room as were gathered there. When the taking of testimony began it was almost impossible to elbow one's way into the room. Alva Armstrong, the juryman who, it is averred, was ready to "hang" the jury for a consideration of $2,500, came into court and took a seat in the spectators' part of the room. Frand O. Stannard, the alleged "go-between," came soon afterward, and also found a seat on a spectators' bench. The evidence submitted was sufficient to convict, and Judge Baker sentenced Armstrong to a year and a half in the State Prison North without hard labor.

Mr. Stannard gave a new bond with the following sureties: V. V. Williams, George McDaniel, William H. Martin, and James E. Boruff, all of Bedford.

LOOKS LIKE TROUBLE.

Kelley's Army Still Causing Commotion in Iowa.

Des Moines (Iowa) special: The denunciation by the laboring classes of the action of the city authorities in handling the industrial army and the continued growth of sentiment favorable to Kelley, kept the city officials in a turmoil all Tuesday. Mayor Hill stated during the afternoon that he would declare the army under arrest and sentence them to three days in jail. The army grew rapidly during the day, and 1,575 reported for rations. Kelly expects to load 2,000 to Chicago on a train. The labor organizations still believe that transportation to Dubuque will be secured over the Great Western and the talk of tying up the road should it not be secured was earnest. A committee of railroad attorneys called on the clerk of the United States Court and arranged for arrests in case a train was stolen.

Frank Hatton Dead.

Frank Hatton, late editor of the Washington Post, is dead. His death occurred at his residence in Washington. Frank Hatton was born in Cambridge, Ohio, April 23, 1846. In the war of the rebellion he enlisted in the Ninety-eighth Ohio Infantry, and in 1864 was commissioned First Lieutenant. After the war he went to Iowa. Under President Arthur he was Postmaster General. With the exception of Alexander Hamilton, he was the youngest Cabinet officer in the history of the United States. He died editor of the Washington Post.

Death of Senator Stockbridge.

Francis Stockbridge, United States Senator from Michigan, died in Chicago. He died at the residence of his nephew-in-law, James L. Houghtaling, Astor and Banks Streets. His wife, Mr. and Mrs. Houghtaling, and the trained nurse, who gave the warning of the Senator's speedy dissolution to the family, were present at the death bed.

Murdered and Burned.

The laundry belonging to Fong Sing, at Woodward, O. T., was burned to the ground, and in the ruins was found the charred body of Fong Sing with the skull split open and a deep gash cut in the right breast. The murdered man's valise was found spattered with blood and emptied of its contents in a ditch a short distance away.

The Income Tax.

Senator Voorhees made a plain announcement on the floor of the Senate the other day. "I want to say here," said he, in his most impressive manner, "that, in spite of what other changes may be made—no matter what may be floating in the air—the income tax will stay in this bill."

Wreck on the C. B. & Q.

St. Louis special: A train of freight cars pulled by a switch engine was wrecked on the tracks of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad at the water works switch near the northern city limits. One man, name unknown, was killed and four injured.

A Land Slide.

Quebec special: Meagre reports of a terrible accident reached this city the other day. A land slide carried a dozen farm houses into the St. Anne River near St. Alban. Ten people lost their lives.

A School Teacher Drowned.

Colon Wiman, a young school teacher of Decatur, Ind., was drowned while bathing in the St. Mary's River. There has been much excitement over the sad affair.

Judge Farwell's Death.

Ex-Judge Wm. W. Farwell, on the Superior Court bench at Chicago for nine years, died recently of pneumonia. He was 77 years old.

More Bomb Throwers.

Bombs were exploded in the police offices at Leghorn, Italy. In each case much damage was done, but nobody was hurt. Many persons suspected of being connected with the explosions have been arrested.

A Pier Falls.

A pier fell at Brahilov, Roumania, carrying 120 men, women, and children into the water. Fully one-half of them were killed or drowned.

Washington to Be Protected.

Washington special: The Chief of Police has taken measures to minimize the likelihood of danger from the Coxeyite invasion. Squads of policemen in uniform were stationed at the railroad stations with instructions to make any large incoming bodies of men give an account of themselves. Officers have been armed with extra heavy oak batons, riot drills of the police force are taking place, and mounted policemen have been detailed for duty in the suburbs where the Coxey forces are expected to enter. With the Federal troops and the district militia to support them, the police are confident that they are capable to meet any emergency, but as a precautionary measure, special policemen have been enrolled and it is expected that 200 of them will be sworn in and placed on duty when Coxey's proposed entrance to Washington is expected.

TO THEIR DEATH.

Leaped Guests of the Burning St. Charles Hotel in New Orleans.

New Orleans special: A fire started in the kitchen of the St. Charles Hotel, on St. Charles, Gravier, and Common streets, the largest in the city. Commencing in the kitchen, it ascended through a back elevator to the upper stories of the building. The progress was so rapid that the rear and Common street sides of the third, fourth, and fifth stories were soon in flames and before the occupants, the guests and servants, could be moved. Every effort was made to awaken all the occupants, but the flames drove the firemen and others back. Several persons were seen at a window on the fourth floor facing on Common street, apparently in flames. They cried for help, and one of them sprang from the window, falling on the pavement on his head and dashing out his brains. The clothes were burnt from him and the body was black from burns. What become of others who were standing around him, and whether they escaped or were burned to death, it is impossible to say, and will never be known until the ruins are searched. The dead man was burned beyond recognition, and it was impossible to say whether he was a guest or a servant. Ladders were placed against the windows and the women taken down, many of them in a fainting condition. Another man, who sprang from the windows, was instantly killed. Name and residence unknown.

The flames confined themselves to the rear and side, leaving the front on St. Charles street uninjured, so that trunks and baggage of guests were mostly rescued, as well as the goods in the stores on St. Charles street. The hotel had quite a number of guests, how many it is not known, as the ledger cannot be found, but it is supposed 200. Most of them were in front rooms and escaped.

A CONSPIRACY

Discovered in the Indianapolis Bank Case.

Indianapolis special: Judge Baker created a great sensation Wednesday by dismissing one of the jury which has been trying the officers of the Indianapolis Cabinet Company, accused of wrecking the Indianapolis National Bank, and holding Aben Armstrong, the twelfth juror, to answer a charge of offering to sell his influence to the defense for $5,000. It seems that last Sunday Frank Stannard, a delegate to the Republican State Convention from Lawrence county, visited the attorneys for the defendants, and asked where he could find Francis Coffin. He was directed, and told Coffin he could get a man to vote for acquittal. When Coffin asked for more particulars Stannard said Armstrong would hang the jury for $5,000. Coffin presented the facts to his lawyers and they notified the District Attorney. It was arranged that Stannard should go with Armstrong to his attorney's office. A stenographer was present, but out of sight, who took down the formal agreement of Armstrong to hang the jury for the sum named. The whole matter was submitted to Judge Baker in his chambers. The record was made to show that the attorneys for the defense consented to the dismissal of the jury. A deputy sheriff was ordered to take charge of Armstrong and Stannard was arrested on the convention floor. They are charged with conspiracy to corrupt the jury and contempt of court.

TRADE UNSETTLED.

The Numerous Strikes Have a Depressing Effect.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: "When accounts of great strikes and labor disturbances crowd all newspapers, it is idle to look for much improvement in business. The bituminous coal miners quit work last week in larger numbers than was expected and the coke workers at once renewed, with greater unanimity, the struggle recently unsuccessful. While these great bodies of men, besides the thousands who were on a strike in building trades, in silk, woolen, and cotton mills, in Alabama iron works and in Western railroads are refusing to work, there are other thousands marching to Washington, who claim they seek work in vain and that the government must give relief. Both classes are engaged in making business worse, because it was bad already. That every week of idleness for so many men must appreciably lessen the aggregate power to purchase products of labor is evident, but in spite of all some improvement still appears.

"The iron and steel works in regions where bituminous coal or coke is used as fuel, may be seriously interrupted if the struggle is much prolonged, but the immediate effect is to give a better look to prices of some products it those regions, while eastern works feel a somewhat larger demand."

SMALLPOX

Is Epidemic in Parts of Chicago.

Chicago special: Health department officers have declared that smallpox is epidemic between Ashland avenue and Halstead street. Twenty-two cases have been discovered within the last forty-eight hours. The sanitary conditions of the territory are pronounced to be ripe for an alarming spread of the disease, chiefly on account of the lack of drainage. Disease breeding cess-pools abound in the neighborhood. Smallpox has got a firm foothold in the suburb of Englewood, where the Kershaw public school, at Winer and Sixty-fourth streets, was closed by order of the health commissioner. The Longfellow school, at Throop street, near Nineteenth street, was closed also, but the health department denied that it was on account of the disease, although all the children of the vicinity are being vaccinated. A house on Law avenue, where the disease has been most malignant, was secured as a hospital, and all cases among women and children in that neighborhood will be removed there.

Burned to Death.

George Hibbard's residence on Fourteenth street, Wheeling, W. Va., was destroyed by fire. Miss Jane Redman, age 50 years, sister-in-law of Hibbard, was suffocated. She could not be induced to leave in her night clothes and her delay in remaining to robe herself proved fatal. A son of Hibbard's was seriously burned. The rest of the family only escaped death by fleeing in their night clothes. The cause of the fire was natural gas.

Killed by a Priest.

Cincinnati special: Mary Gilmartin, a clerk employed by the Pulvermacher Belt Company, in Sycamore street, was shot and killed while on her way to her work. The murderer gave his name as George Reed, but letters found on him proved him to be Father Dominick O'Grady, a Catholic priest who came from Ireland three months ago. Miss Gilmartin is from Slingo County, Ireland, and one of her brothers is Father M. S. Gilmartin of Chicago. She met O'Grady in Ireland, where his attentions caused gossip. Last September he came to America, and has been in this city since January.

Fled for His Life.

About 4,000 unemployed men held a meeting in Monumental Square, Cleveland, Ohio, and listened to speeches delivered in many different tongues. The Department of Police, learning that speeches were being made in foreign languages advising violent measures, sent Patrolman Kulas in citizen's clothes as an interpreter to listen and report as to the nature of the addresses. Kulas was soon recognized and the cry quickly went up from a thousand throats: "He's a spy," "hang him," and "kill him." Kulas ran and was pursued a short distance by the crowd, but succeeded in making his escape.

Indiana Republicans.

The Republican State Convention met at Indianapolis and nominated the following ticket: Secretary of State, W. D. Owen of Logansport; Auditor of State, A. C. Daily of Lebanon; Treasurer of State, F. J. Scholz of Evansville; Attorney General, W. A. Ketcham of Indianapolis; Clerk of the Supreme Court, Alex. Hess of Wabash; State Statistician, S. J. Thompson of Shelbyville; State Superintendent of Public Instruction, D. M. Geeting of Madison; State Geologist, W. S. Blatchley of Terre Haute; Judge of Supreme Court, First District, J. M. Jordan of Martinsville.

Brutal Burglars.

Three masked men gained an entrance into the home of William Wanake, four miles northwest of Nelsonville, Ind., with the intention of robbery. They beat Mrs. Wanake almost into insensibility, gagged and bound her, and then turned their attention to Mr. Wanake, who is quite an old man. The injuries inflicted upon him were so severe that he is confined to his bed. The burglars only got 11 cents.

Burned to Death.

P. N. Lund, a prominent citizen of Fairmount, Minn., was burned to death recently. He was at his farm two miles from town and while fighting a prairie fire was overcome by the heat and smoke and fell forward in the flames. Before help arrived he was horribly burned to that extent that he was scarcely recognizable. He was a leading member of the A. O. U. W.

Horse Thieves Come to Grief.

Hennesy (O. T.) special: Vigilance committees which have been trailing an organized band of horse thieves nearly all week, surrounded the bandits within a few miles of the Texas line. The band consisted of seven men, and in the fight that followed, five of the thieves were killed outright and the remaining two captured and hanged.

A Burglar Killed.

An unknown burglar was detected burglarizing a second-hand store at Portland, Oregon. The police surrounded the building when the burglar attempted to escape, and was ordered to halt. He failed to do so and Officer Robert Austin shot him dead.

Swept to His Death.

A. J. Goff, a prominent citizen and farmer of W. Va., was drowned while attempting to cross Reedy Creek on horseback. When the horse arrived at Goff's home riderless a search was made which resulted in the finding of his body in the creek.

Female Dynamiters.

Mary Brunsfield and Henrietta Adkins have been arrested and placed in jail in Lincoln County, W. Va., charged with the blowing up of Squire Vance's house with dynamite, a few weeks ago, in which two children were seriously injured.

Children Burned to Death.

Three young children of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Schneider, who live near the outskirts of Scranton, Pa., were burned to death in a fire which entirely consumed their home. The parents were away when the fire started.

Forced to Surrender.

The division of Coxey's army that captured a train at Washington C. H., Ohio, and rode to Mt. Sterling, was compelled to surrender to the Ohio militia. They chose to pay their fare to Columbus rather than walk.

Won't Accept a Raise.

Four hundred miners in Fulton County, Ill., are still on strike, but making no demonstration. They refuse a raise of from $1.50 to $2 per day, though many were aided at county expense during the winter.

Dynamite Explodes.

Leige special: A quantity of dynamite was exploded at Leige, near the Church of St. Jacques. Several buildings were more or less damaged, but nobody was injured.

Child Killed.

While playing on a pile of railroad ties Helen Rains of Bancroft, Ohio, was instantly killed by a tie falling on her.

THE CAMPAIGN IS ON.

ELECTION OF OVER TWENTY SENATORS INVOLVED.

Offices to Be Filled in the Various States This Year—A New House of Representatives to Be Chosen—Hot Fights in Some Sections.

The politicians of the country are in the saddle. This is no unmeaning phrase this year, for 1894 promises to eclipse in interest even a presidential election. In fact, it promises to foreshadow accurately the campaign of 1896. For this reason all the talent of the various parties is already being brought to the front, primed with a mass of campaign material growing out of the silver, the tariff, and the Hawaiian controversies of the past year. Local issues will be merged in those created by the leaders of the nation, and as over twenty Senators are to be chosen by the Legislatures which are to be elected this year, and an entirely new House of Representatives is to be voted for, a change in the complexion of the legislative branch of the country lies in the balance. In the following summary no detailed mention is made of the congressional elections, but these take place in all the States on November 6. The Senators whose terms expire March 4, 1895, are:

John T. Morgan, of Alabama; James H. Berry, of Arkansas; Edward O. Wolcott, of Colorado; Anthony Higgins, of Delaware; George L. Shoup, of Idaho; Shelby M. Cullom, of Illinois; James F. Wilson, of Iowa; John Martin, of Kansas; Wm. Lindsay, of Kentucky; Donelson Caffery, of Louisiana; Wm. P. Frye, of Maine; George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts; James McMillan, of Michigan; James McLaurin, of Mississippi; Thomas C. Power, of Montana; Charles F. Manderson, of Nebraska; William E. Chandler, of New Hampshire; John R. McPherson, of New Jersey; M. W. Ransom, of North Carolina; Joseph N. Dolph, of Oregon; Nathan F. Dixon, of Rhode Island; Matthew C. Butler, of South Carolina; Richard F. Pettigrew, of South Dakota; Isham G. Harris, of Tennessee; Richard Coke, of Texas; Eppa Hunton, of Virginia; J. N. Camden, of West Virginia; Joseph M. Carey, of Wyoming.

In addition to these, vacancies for the terms ending in 1896 are to be filled by the Legislatures of Wyoming, Montana, and Washington. Iowa has already elected Congressman Gear to succeed Senator Wilson. Virginia has elected Col. Martin to fill the place of Eppa Hunton. Kentucky has chosen Senator Lindsay to succeed himself. The Legislature of Louisiana will also have the naming of the successor to Judge White. Senator Walthall will resume the Senatorship in 1895. So, on the whole, the State legislative contests will perhaps be of most importance.

Summary of the Situation.

New Hampshire is one of the Eastern States in which the fight for both Senatorial and Gubernatorial honors has already begun, and it will attract national attention. Ex-Senator Blair has entered the field for the seat now occupied by Senator William E. Chandler, and Charles H. Burns is a close third for the same honor. New Hampshire votes on Nov. 6, as do all the rest of the States that have elections.

In New York both parties are preparing for an aggressive contest. It is more than likely that Gov. Flower will secure a renomination. The Republicans are already looking about for Gubernatorial timber, and among those talked of are Elihu Root, Cornelius Bliss, Mayor Schieren of Brooklyn, Judge Gaynor, and possibly ex-Vice President Levi P. Morton.

Vermont votes Sept. 4, and elects its State and county officers and a Legislature. As yet the sentiment of the State as to nominees has taken no definite shape, although Gov. Fuller will probably secure a renomination.

Connecticut always votes twice in the fall. Its town elections take place in October and its State elections in November. All the State officers are to be chosen.

Senator Higgins will have to contend for re-election in Delaware. His State votes for Governor, two-thirds of the State Senate, the entire Assembly, and for all the principal county officials.

Maine has its State election on Sept. 10. It will elect an entire State ticket and a Legislature, which will choose a successor to Senator Frye.

Pennsylvania elects one-half its State Senate, its entire lower house, a Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of Internal Affairs, and an Auditor General.

Massachusetts elects its State officers and a Legislature to choose a successor to Senator Hoar.

Ohio votes only for Secretary of State, minor State officers and for Congressmen.

The South.

In the South the battle royal is being fought out in Georgia, which does not vote until Oct. 2, but as a Senator is to be chosen the contest is already rather warm. The aspirants for the Senate are Governor William J. Northen, A. O. Bacon of Macon, and Fleming G. Du Bignon of Savannah. Secretary of the Interior Hoke Smith, Speaker Crisp and Congressman Henry G. Turner are among the possibilities, though neither of them is a candidate. To draw the line through the group of active candidates for the place would put Northen and Bacon together on the anti-administration side, and leave Du Bignon alone on the other.

The term of Senator Butler, of South Carolina, expires within a year, and the Populists, under the leadership of Gov. Tillman, are already planning to capture the Legislature which is to choose the State's next representative in the upper house of Congress. With Senator Irby, a Populist-Democrat, as one representative, it is the belief of Gov. Tillman that he himself can succeed in capturing the longer term. South Carolina elects State officers as well.

Arkansas has its State election on Sept. 3, and will vote for all State, judicial, county, township officers, one Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, and a Legislature, which will choose a successor to Senator Berry. The political sentiment in the State has not yet crystallized into movement except to develop the certainty of an entire Populist State ticket.

Alabama elects a Governor, Secretary of State, Auditor, Treasurer, Attorney General, Superintendent of Education, Commissioner of Agriculture and a Legislature which will choose the successor to Senator John T. Morgan. The election takes place Aug. 6.

Although the Legislature which will be elected in Missouri this fall will not choose a Senator, the campaign is, nevertheless, of general interest. A Judge of the Supreme Court, State Superintendent of Schools, and a Railroad Commissioner will be elected.

Kentucky elects Judges of its Court of Appeals and county officers. Its Legislature has already named Senator William Lindsay, whose term expires in 1895, to succeed himself.

Florida has its State election October 2. In addition to State officers, it will choose a Justice of the Supreme Court and a Legislature. No senatorial vacancy in its delegation will occur until 1897.

Texas elects all its State, county, and precinct officers this year and a Legislature which will choose a successor to Senator Coke.

Tennessee Democrats expect to have things their own way. There is a strong Populist organization in the State and it may make a bitter fight for the assembly.

North Carolina elects Judges, solicitors, and a Legislature which will name a successor to Senator Ransom.

PROMINENT CANDIDATES IN COMING STATE ELECTIONS.

West Virginia votes for a Legislature which will choose Senator Camden's successor.

The West.

Kansas promises the nation a four-cornered fight. The stalwart Democrats have decided to put a State ticket in the field, and the Republicans will name some such man as Ady, Humphreys, Funston or Case Broderick. The fusionists may unite on Congressman Harris, a Democrat, or on Gov. Llewelling, Thomas J. Hudson, Jerry Simpson or William Baker. As the successor to Senator Martin, who now fills out the term of the late Senator Plumb, is to be chosen by the Legislature, ex-Senator Ingalls will undoubtedly take an active part in the campaign looking to an election as Senator next winter. Kansas elects an entire State ticket, the entire lower house, a portion of the State Senate and county officers everywhere.

In Oregon, all State, county, and precinct officers are to be voted for. The Populists, under the command of Messrs. Waldrop, Marksberry, and Fitch, will have a full ticket in the field. At present its Governor, Sylvester Pennoyer, its Attorney General, and its Adjutant General are Democrats, while the remaining officers are Republican. The Legislature to be chosen will have the successor to Senator Joseph N. Dolph to elect. The Populist nomination for Governor will probably go to Nathan Pierce, and it is not unlikely that the party will support Gov. Pennoyer for Senator Dolph's place.

Senator Wolcott, of Colorado, will succeed himself in March, 1895. His State, however, has a bitter contest on hand for 1894. Gov. Waite, who was chosen by the fusion of the silver Democrats and the Populists, expects to run again, and the Republicans will make a warm effort to defeat him. Colorado elects all its State officers in November.

Illinois elects State Treasurer, Superintendent of Public Instruction, three Trustees of the University of Illinois, half the State Senate, and 153 members of the lower house. In addition county officers will be chosen everywhere, and the Legislature will choose a successor to Senator Cullom.

Nebraska elects a Legislature which will have Senator Manderson's successor to choose. In addition the State votes for Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Treasurer, Auditor, Secretary of State, Attorney General, Commissioner of Public Lands and Buildings, and Superintendent of Public Instruction.

Wisconsin votes for Governor, Secretary of State, State Treasurer, State Superintendent, Commissioner of Insurance and Railroad Commissioners, half of the State Senate and the entire lower house. No senatorial election is on the tapis to clog legislation this year.

In Indiana the offices to be filled are those of Secretary of State, Auditor, Treasurer, Attorney General, Judge of the Supreme Court, Superintendent of Public Instruction, State Geologist, and State Statistician. No Senatorial vacancy will exist, and so the legislative fight is not of national interest.

Iowa's Legislature does not meet next year, and the successor to Senator Wilson has already been chosen in the person of Congressman Gear. The State votes for Secretary, Auditor, Treasurer, Railroad Commissioner, Judge and Clerk of the Supreme Court.

Wyoming elects its State officers and State Senators for four years. Its Assemblymen and county officers hold office two years. This year all these offices will be filled and the Legislature will elect a successor to Senator Joseph M. Carey.

South Dakota elects all its State and county officers and a Legislature to choose a successor to Senator Richard F. Pettigrew.

North Dakota elects all State officers, a Judge of the Supreme Court and all county officers. There will be no Senatorial vacancy next year.

California elects all of its State officers this year, but no Senatorial election occurs in 1895, hence the legislative fight will be of a purely local nature.

Michigan has a successor to Senator McMillan to elect and a State ticket to take office January 1, 1895.

Washington elects two Supreme Court Judges, its county and precinct officers, and its Legislature chooses a Senator.

Idaho has its State, district and county officers to elect and a Legislature which will choose the successor of Senator Shoup.

Virginia has only its Congressional elections.

Nevada has only its State, county and Congressional elections next November.

EVIDENCE has been found showing that Lawyer A. T. Beck, of Indianapolis, was struck with a sandbag before he was shot. No arrests have been made.

INDIANA REPUBLICANS.

THEY MEET IN CONVENTION AT INDIANAPOLIS.

Hon. Richard W. Thompson Presided and Ex-President Harrison Sounded the Keynote of the Campaign—Full Text of the Platform Adopted—The Candidates.

The Proceedings.

Indianapolis special: For over twelve hours Wednesday, without a single recess for a bite or a sup, the seventeen hundred delegates to the Republican State Convention devoted themselves to the making of a party ticket to be voted on in November. This extraordinary session was due to the fact that there were no less than forty-three candidates for the ten nominations, and taking their keynote from the speeches of ex-President Harrison and ex-Secretary Thompson, both of whom suggested that a Republican nomination in Indiana this year was equivalent to an election, the supporters of each candidate fought to the last ditch for their favorite. Three, and in some cases four ballots were required for each nomination, and every inch of ground was contested.

The Hon. Richard W. Thompson, of Terre Haute, was chosen Chairman, and Charles E. Wilson, of Tippecanoe, Secretary.

After short addresses by Chairman Thompson and ex-President Harrison, ex-State Senator O. Z. Hubbell, of Elkhart, read the report of the committee on resolutions, as follows:

THE PLATFORM.

We, the Republicans of Indiana, in delegate convention assembled, reaffirm our faith in the progressive principles of the Republican party. We believe its policies, past and present, best calculated to promote the happiness and prosperity of the people.

The administration of President Harrison and the Congressional legislation of that period were wise, pure, and patriotic, and we point to the marked contrast between the home and foreign policies of that administration and the present travesty on government inflicted upon the American people.

TARIFF.

We believe in the Republican doctrine of protection and reciprocity, which furnishes a home market for the products of our factories and our farms, and protects the American laborer against the competition of the pauper labor of Europe. We denounce the unwise and unpatriotic action of the Democratic party in attempting to eliminate the reciprocity principle from our tariff system, thereby closing a large foreign market to the products of American farms, and depressing agricultural interests. We denounce the present attempt of a Democratic Congress to overthrow and destroy the American industrial system, a course that, with the general fear of a violent readjustment of the country's business to a free trade basis, has increased the national debt, has plunged the country into the most disastrous business depression of its history, has closed large numbers of banks and factories throughout the country, has thrown an unprecedented number of American citizens out of employment, has compelled thousands of able-bodied and industrious men to humiliate themselves by asking for charity, and has filled our broad land with free soup houses and food markets.

MONEY.

We believe in a currency composed of gold, silver, and paper, readily convertible at a fixed standard of value and entirely under national control; and we favor the imposition of increased tariff duties upon the imports from all foreign countries which oppose the coinage of silver upon a basis to be determined by an international congress for such purpose. We denounce the avowed purpose of the Democratic party to restore the era of "Wild-cat" money.

PENSIONS.

We believe in a liberal construction of our pension laws, and we condemn the unjust policy of the present administration in depriving ex-soldiers of their pensions without a hearing, a policy intended to cast odium upon loyalty and patriotism. We believe it to be the duty of the State, as well as the Nation, to make suitable provision for the care and maintenance of all indigent soldiers, their wives, and widows; we therefore favor the establishment by the State of a suitable soldiers' home for the reception of such soldiers, their wives, and widows, as may be overtaken by adversity.

IMMIGRATION.

We demand a rigid enforcement of all existing immigration laws by the National Government, and demand such further legislation as will protect our people and institutions against the influx of the criminal and vicious classes.

HAWAII.

We denounce the unpatriotic action of the Cleveland administration in hauling down the American flag at Hawaii, and condemns the arrogant assumption of power displayed in the effort to restore a tyrannical queen over a free people who had thrown off the yoke of despotism.

PATRONAGE.

We condemn the outrageous bargain and sale of federal patronage by the Cleveland administration in its unhinging efforts to usurp the prerogatives of the Legislative branch of the government, to force favorite measures through Congress, and compel the confirmation of Presidential appointments by the Senate.

EXPENDITURES.

We condemn the reckless and extravagant administration of the financial affairs of the State, whereby the people are subjected to unjust and unnecessary taxation, by an increased assessment of property and an increased rate of taxation and by a multiplication of offices to be supported by the tax-payers of the State.

STATE INSTITUTIONS.

We believe that the benevolent, educational and correctional institutions of the State should be placed under non-partisan control.

PROTECTION OF EMPLOYES.

We believe in such legislation, State and National, as will protect the lives and limbs of employes of railroads, mines, and factories.

APPOTTIONMENT.

We condemn the policy steadily pursued by the Democratic Legislatures of Indiana, in gerrymandering the State as to deny the people a fair representation of their views in the State Legislature, and National Congress, thus imperiling the foundations of our institutions.

The convention then proceeded to the nomination of candidates which resulted as follows:

Secretary of State—W. D. Owen of Logansport.

Auditor of State—A. C. Daily of Lebanon.

Treasurer of State—F. J. Scholz of Evansville.

Attorney General—W. A. Ketcham of Indianapolis.

Clerk of the Supreme Court—Alex Hess of Wabash.

For State Statistician—S. J. Thompson of Shelbyville.

For State Superintendent of Public Instruction—D. M. Geeting of Madison.

For State Geologist—W. S. Blatchley of Terre Haute.

Judge of Supreme Court, First District—J. M. Jordan, Martinsville.

Stable Floors.

Have you examined your stable floor recently, and do you know that the planks are sound and strong, or are they weak and rotten? If the latter, you need not be surprised if your wife elbows you in the ribs some of these nights and tells you she hears a racket at the stable, and if you find an injured horse as a reward for your neglect you will have the satisfaction of knowing you are reaping what you have sown.

Supplying your animals with plenty of bedding will add materially in making them comfortable as well as to keep them clean—both items of sufficient importance to be looked after.

We want young horses with muscle and bone; hence, exercise during the winter must not be overlooked. If they are fed at the same time every night, they will usually come up to the stable of their own accord; however, if they should not, go and get them. The loss of feed and exposure may bring on coughs, colds, and distemper. Careful wintering is most important to all young stock, and more especially to horses. More damage can be done in one winter by neglect than can be repaired in the lifetime of a horse.—Orange Judd Farmer.

THE NATION'S SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

In the Senate, Monday, Mr. Washburn spoke three and a half hours, and at the conclusion of his speech, at 4:35, Senator Dolph delivered another installment of his speech. Promptly at 5 o'clock Senator Quay called attention to the fact that the hour for closing the tariff debate had arrived, and some discussion as to the intent of the agreement ensued, Senator Gray for the Democrats maintaining that it was not intended to shut off tariff debate at 5 o'clock, but to prevent any other business from coming in between 1 and 5 o'clock. The Republicans declined to go on, and at 5:02, on motion of Senator Harris, the Senate went into executive session, and at 5:20 the doors were reopened and the Senate adjourned. The House devoted the entire day to business from the Committee on the District of Columbia. Two bills were acted upon. The first, which was passed, was a bill extending the time allowed the Metropolitan Street Railroad Company, of Washington, to change its motive power. The other bill was one to permit bookmaking at the regular spring and fall meetings of the jockey clubs and driving parks of the District of Columbia. The bill was defeated by 87 to 63. The House then, at 5 o'clock, adjourned.

On Tuesday the Senate listened to Mr. Mills, who spoke at length upon the tariff. The close of Mr. Mills' speech was greeted by a hearty round of applause. It had been expected that the speech would be much longer. It consumed just two hours and fifteen minutes. The Republicans, who expected the Democrats would consume the entire day, were not prepared to go on. Accordingly, on motion of Mr. Harris, the Senate went into executive session at 3:20 p. m., and at 4:19 adjourned. The House resumed consideration of the postoffice appropriation bill. The pending amendment to strike out the appropriation for the fast Southern mail was defeated. An amendment providing a limitation of ten years upon the payment of money orders, and for the destruction of money order files at the end of that time, was adopted. Mr. Quigg opposed an amendment making all publications purporting to be issued periodically and to subscribers subject to postage at third-class rates when transmitted through the mails. The amendment affects Seaside Library publications and books (reprints) given as premiums with country newspaper subscriptions, etc. Mr. Pickler, to whom Mr. Quigg yielded a portion of his time, opposed the amendment in the interest of cheap literature for the farmers. Mr. Hopkins, Mr. Daniels, Mr. Bingham, and Mr. O'Neill also made speeches against the amendment. The amendment, on a vote, was stricken from the bill—26 to 183.

The Senate wrangled all day Wednesday over the tariff bill. Mr. Hepburn, after the reading of the journal in the House, interposed an objection to its approval and forced the yeas and nays on Mr. Dockery's motion for its approval. The journal was approved—243 to 6. The House went into committee of the whole, Mr. Bailey, of Texas, in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. Mr. Warner moved to increase the rank of the consul at Barcelona, Spain, to that of consul general and the salary to $1,500. The motion was agreed to. Mr. Hepburn offered an amendment, providing that all fees of every character, official or unofficial, collected or received by the consuls at Liverpool, Hong Kong, Amoy, Canton, Tien Tsing, Havre, Callao, Prague, Antwerp, Valparaiso, Colon, Chin-Kiang, Fuchau, Hankow, Bordeaux, Belfast, Bradford, Demarara, Glasgow, Kingston, Manchester, Vera Cruz, Matanzas, Basle, and Montevideo should be turned into the treasury, and their salaries should be their sole compensation. The amendment was defeated—35 to 128. At 5:10 the committee rose and the House adjourned.

In the House Thursday the Speaker appointed the following boards of visitors: To the Military Academy, Messrs. Black of Illinois, Hatch of Missouri and Curtis of New York; to the Naval Academy, Messrs. Meyer of Louisiana, Outhwaite of Ohio and Randall of Massachusetts. The House then went into committee of the whole and resumed consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. Debate proceeded during the afternoon in a desultory manner on small unimportant amendments, none of which were adopted. When the bill was completed the committee rose. The bill as passed carried $1,513,528, a decrease of $46,796, compared with the appropriations for the current year. At 5 o'clock the House adjourned. The Senate was engaged in its regular pastime—discussing the tariff.

Some routine business was transacted at the opening of the session of the House Saturday. Mr. Lockwood (N. Y.) reported back from the Pacific Railroad Committee the resolution calling upon the Attorney General to inform the House whether the stockholders of the Central and Western Pacific railroads were reliable in any manner to the United States for

BY

MISS M. E. BRADDON

CHAPTER V.

THE DREAM IS ENDED.

Mrs. Walsingham wrote to Gilbert Sinclair, immediately after Mr. Wyatt's departure, a few hasty lines begging him to come to her without delay.

"Something has occurred," she wrote, "an event of supreme importance. I will tell you nothing more till we meet."

She dispatched her groom to the Albany with this note, and then waited with intense impatience for Gilbert Sinclair's coming. If he were at home, it was scarcely possible he would refuse to come to her.

"I shall know the worst very soon," she said to herself, as she sat behind the flowers that shaded her window. "After to-day there shall be no uncertainty between us—no further reservation on my part—no more acting on his. He shall find that I am not his dupe, to be fooled to the last point, and to be taken by surprise some fine morning by the announcement of his marriage in the Times."

Mr. Sinclair was not at home when note was delivered, but between 2 and 3 o'clock in the afternoon his thundering knock assailed the door, and he came into the room announced.

In spite of the previous night's ball he had ridden fifteen miles into the country that morning to attend a sale of hunters, and was looking flushed with his long ride.

"What on earth is the matter, Clara?" he asked. "I have been out since 8 o'clock. Poor Townley's stud was sold off this morning at a pretty little place he had beyond Barnet, and I rode down there to see if there was anything worth bidding for. I might have saved myself the trouble, for I never saw such a pack of screws. The ride was pleasant enough, however."

"I wonder you were out so early after last night's dance."

"Oh, you've seen my name down among the swells," he answered, with rather a forced laugh. "Yes, I was hard at it last night, no end of waltzes and galops. But, you know, late hours never make much difference to me."

"Was it a very pleasant party?"

"The usual thing—too many people for the rooms."

"Your favorite, Miss Clanyarde, was there, I see."

"Yes; the Clanyardes were there. But I suppose you haven't sent for me to ask questions about Lady Deptford's ball? I thought by your letter something serious had happened."

"Something serious has happened. My husband is dead."

She said the words very slowly, with her eyes fixed on Gilbert Sinclair's face. The florid color faded suddenly out of his cheeks, and left him ghastly pale. Of all the events within the range of probability, this was the last he had expected to hear of, and the most unwelcome.

"Indeed!" he stammered, after an awkward pause. "I suppose I ought to congratulate you on the recovery of your freedom?"

"I am very glad to be free."

"What did he die of—Colonel Walsingham? And how did you get the news?"

"Through a foreign paper. He was killed in a duel."

And then she repeated the contents of the paragraph James Wyatt had read to her.

"Is the news correct, do you think? No mistake about the identity of the person in question?"

"None whatever, I am convinced. However, I shall drive into the city presently and see the solicitor who arranged our separation. I know the Colonel was in the habit of corresponding with him, and no doubt he will be able to give official intelligence of the event."

After this there came another pause, more awkward than the first. Gilbert sat with his eyes fixed upon the carpet, tracing out the figures of it meditatively with his stick, with an air of study as profound as if he had been an art designer bent upon achieving some novel combination of form and color. Clara Walsingham sat opposite to him, waiting for him to speak, with a pale, rigid face that grew more stony-looking as the silence continued. That silence became at last quite unendurable, and Gilbert felt himself obliged to say something, no matter what.

"Does this business make any alteration in your circumstances?" Gilbert asked, with a faint show of interest.

"Only for the better. I surrendered to the Colonel the income of one of the estates my father left me, in order to bribe him into consenting to a separation. Henceforward the income will be mine. My poor father took pains to secure me from the possibility of being ruined by a husband. My fortune was wholly at my own disposal, but I was willing to make the surrender in question in exchange for my liberty."

"I am glad to find that you will be so well off," said Mr. Sinclair, still engrossed by the pattern of the carpet.

"Is that all you have to say?"

"What more can I say upon the subject?"

"There was a time when you would have said a great deal more."

"Very likely," answered Gilbert, bluntly; "but then, you see, that time is past and gone. What is it Friar Bacon's brazen head said, 'Time is, time was, time's past?' Come, Clara, it is very little use for you and me to play at cross-purposes. Why did you send for me in such hot haste to tell me of your husband's death?"

"Because I had reason to consider the news would be as welcome to you as it was to me."

"That might have been so if the event had happened a year or two ago; unhappily your release comes too late for my welfare. You accused me the other day of intending to jilt you. I think that was scarcely fair when it is remembered how long I was contented to remain your devoted slave, patiently waiting for something better than slavery. There is a limit to all things, however, and I confess the bondage became a little irksome at last, and I began to look in other directions for the happiness of my future life."

"Does that mean that you are going to be married?"

"It does."

"The lady is Miss Clanyarde, I conclude," said Mrs. Walsingham. Her breathing was a little hurried, but there was no other outward sign of the storm that raged within.

"Yes, the lady is Constance Clanyarde. And now, my dear Clara, let me entreat you to be reasonable, and to consider how long I waited for the chance that has come at last too late to be of any avail, so far as I am concerned. I am not coxcomb enough to fear that you will regret me very much, and I am sure you know that I shall always regard you with the warmest friendship and admiration. With your splendid attractions you will have plenty of opportunities in the matrimonial line, and will have, I dare say, little reason to lament my secession."

Clara Walsingham looked at him with unutterable scorn.

"And I once gave you credit for a heart, Gilbert Sinclair," she said. "Well, the dream is ended."

"Don't let us part ill-friends, Clara. Say you wish me well in my new life."

"I cannot say anything so false. No, Gilbert, I will not take your hand. There can be no such thing as friendship between you and me."

"That seems rather hard," answered Sinclair in a sulky tone. "But let it be as you please. Good-by."

"Good-morning, Mr. Sinclair."

Mrs. Walsingham rang the bell, but before her summons could be answered Gilbert Sinclair had gone out of the house. He walked back to the Albany in a very gloomy frame of mind, thinking it a hard thing that Col. Walsingham should have chosen this crisis for his death. He was glad that the interview was over, and that Clara knew what she had to expect, but he felt an uneasy sense that the business was not yet finished.

"She took it pretty quietly, upon the whole," he said to himself; "but there was a look in her eyes that I didn't like."

Mrs. Walsingham called on her late husband's lawyer in the course of the afternoon, and received a confirmation of James Wyatt's news. Her husband's death increased her income from two to three thousand a year, arising chiefly from landed property which had been purchased by her father, a city tradesman, who had late in life conceived the idea of becoming a country squire, and had died of the dullness incident upon an unrecognized position in the depths of the country. His only daughter's marriage with Colonel Walsingam had been a severe affliction to him, but he had taken care to settle his money upon her in such a manner as if to secure it from any depredations on the part of her husband.

CHAPTER VI.

"ARISE, BLACK VENGEANCE, FROM THY HOLLOW CELL."

The summer had melted into autumn, the London season was over, and the Clanyardes had left their furnished house in Eaton Place, which the Viscount had taken for the season, to return to Marchbrook, where Gilbert Sinclair was to follow them as a visitor. He had proposed for Constance, and had been accepted—with much inward rejoicing on the part of the father; with a strange conflict of feeling in the mind of the lady herself. Did she love the man she had promised to marry? Well, no; there was no such feeling as love for Gilbert Sinclair in her mind. She thought him tolerably good-looking, and not exactly disagreeable, and it had been impressed upon her that he was one of the richest men in England—a man who could bestow upon her everything which a well-bred young lady must, by education and nature, desire. The bitter pinch of poverty had been severely felt at Marchbrook, and the Clanyarde girls had been taught, in an indirect kind of way, that they were bound to contribute to the restoration of the family fortunes by judicious marriages. The two elder girls Adelia, and Margaret, had married well—one Sir Henry Erlington, a Sussex baronet, with a very nice place and a comfortable income, the other a rich East Indian merchant, considerably past middle age. But the fortunes of Sir Henry, and Mr. Campion, the merchant, were as nothing compared with the wealth of Gilbert Sinclair; and Lord Clanyarde told his daughter Constance that she would put her sisters to shame by the brilliancy of her marriage. He flew into a terrible passion when she at first expressed herself disinclined to accept Mr. Sinclair's offer, and asked her how she dared to fly in the face of Providence by refusing such a splendid destiny. What in Heaven's name did she expect, a girl without a sixpence of her own, and with nothing but her pretty face and aristocratic lineage to recommend her? He sent his wife to talk to her, and Lady Clanyarde, who was a very meek person, and lived in a state of perpetual subservience to her husband, held forth dolefully to her daughter for upward of an hour upon the foolishness and ingratitude of her course. Then came the two married sisters with more lecturing and persuasion, and at last the girl gave way, fairly tired out, and scolded into a kind of desponding submission.

So Gilbert Sinclair came one morning to Eaton Place, and finding Miss Clanyarde alone in the drawing-room, made her a solemn offer of his heart and hand. He had asked her to be his wife before this, and she had put him off with an answer that was almost a refusal. Then had come the lecturing and scolding, and she had been schooled into resignation to a fate that seemed to her irresistible. She told her suitor that she did not love him—that if she accepted him it would be in deference to her father's wishes, and that she could give him nothing in return for the affection he was so good as to entertain for her. This was enough for Gilbert, who was bent on winning her for his wife in a headstrong, reckless spirit, that made no count of the cost. But as Miss Clanyarde sat by and by with her hand in his, and listened to his protestations of affection, there rose before her the vision of a face—not Gilbert Sinclair's—a darkly, splendid face, that had looked upon her with such unutterable love one summer day in the shadowy Kentish lane; and she wished that Cyprian Davenant had carried her off to some strange, desolate land, in which they might have lived and died together.

"What will he think of me when he hears that I have sold myself to this man for the sake of his fortune?" she asked herself. And then she looked up at Gilbert's face and wondered whether she could ever teach herself to love him, or to be grateful to him for his love.

All this had happened within a week of Gilbert's final interview with Mrs. Walsingham, and in a very short time the fact of Mr. Sinclair's engagement to Miss Clanyarde was pretty well known to all that gentleman's friends and acquaintances. He was very proud of carrying off a girl whose beauty had made a considerable sensation in the past two seasons, and he talked of his matrimonial projects in a swaggering, boastful way that was eminently distasteful to some of his acquaintances. Men who were familiar with Mr. Sinclair's antecedents shrugged their shoulders ominously when the marriage was discussed, and augured ill for the future happiness of Miss Clanyarde.

"Yes!" answered Gilbert, "she's a lovely girl, isn't she? and of course I'm proud of her affection. It's to be a regular love-match, you know. I wouldn't marry the handsomest woman in the world if I were not secure on that point. I don't say the father hasn't an eye to my fortune. He's a thorough man of the world, and, of course, fully alive to that sort of thing, but Constance is superior to any such consideration. If I didn't believe that I would not be such a fool as to stake my happiness on the venture."

"I scarcely fancied you would look at matters from such a sentimental point of view," said Mr. Wyatt, thoughtfully, "especially as this is by no means your first love."

"It is the first love worth speaking of," answered the other. "I never knew what it was to be passionately in love till I met Constance Clanyarde."

"Not with Mrs. Walsingham?"

"No, Jim. I did care for her a good deal once upon a time, but never as I care for Constance. I think if that girl were to play me false I should kill myself. By the way, I'm sure you know more about Cyprian Davenant than you were inclined to confess the other night. I fancy there was some kind of a love affair—some youthful flirtation—between him and Constance. You might as well tell me everything you know about it."

"I know nothing about Miss Clanyarde, and I can tell you nothing about Davenant. He and I are old friends, and I am too fully in his confidence to talk of his sentiments or his affairs."

"What a confounded prig you are, Wyatt. But you can't deny that Davenant was in love with Constance. I don't believe she has ever cared a straw for him, however; and if he should live to come back to England I shall take good care he never darkens my doors. How about that place of his, by the by? Is it in the market?"

"Yes; I have received Sir Cyprian's instructions to sell whenever I see a favorable opportunity. He won't profit much by the sale, poor fellow, for it is mortgaged up to the hilt."

"I'll look at the place while at Marchbrook, and if I like it I may make you an offer. We shall want something nearer town than the place my father built in the north, but I shall not give up that, either."

"You can afford a couple of country seats, and you will have a house in town, of course?"

"Yes; I have been thinking of Park Lane, but it is so difficult to get anything there. I've told the agents what I want, however, and I dare say they'll find something before long.

"When are you to be married?"

"Not later than October, I hope. There is not the shadow of a reason for delay."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

WORSE THAN COOLIES.

Frightful Condition of the Peasants of the Island of Sicily.

The condition of the peasants of Sicily, who recently rose against their oppressors and well nigh precipitated a general revolt against the Italian government, is perhaps more wretched than that of any other civilized people in the world. For ages the poorer classes have been the prey of the richer and have been burdened by the most exorbitant taxation, while the rich have generally escaped without any taxation at all. Corruption is rife in every office in the island and justice is a mere mockery, simply depending on who can give the largest bribe.

The land is owned by a few noblemen who live in Rome or Palermo and who lease their estates to capitalists known as "gabellotti," or tax extorters. These in their turn divide the estates and sublet them to "subgabellotti," who again lease the subdivided land piecemeal to the peasants, or, if you wish, farmers. These latter are most shamefully bled. They are permitted to retain but one-quarter of their crops, no matter how poor the yield may be. In addition to this they are compelled to pay on enormous tax and provide themselves with seed and the necessities of life. Reduced to the most abject poverty, the estate-owner "padrone" sometimes lends them money at 50 per cent. a year.

The day laborer's lot is even worse, if such a thing is possible. The lowest Chinese cooly lives in luxury compared with the Sicilian day laborer. The result of this is that agriculture, which is the chief support of Sicily, has become totally ruined. The petty farmers and peasantry are held in complete slavery by the capitalists and landowners.

Lucky Women Speculators.

"Lucky real-estate speculations are not confined to men in Pittsburg," said a real-estate agent. "There is one lady in this city who has built and sold more houses in the last three or four years than any one else in the business. She seems most fortunate in her speculations, and often when others, who consider themselves better versed in property, have advised her not to make a venture, she has gone against them, following her own judgment, and, strangely enough, has always succeeded. She has never been known to make a losing deal, and her reputation for good, sound judgment has caused many persons anxious to invest in dirt and bricks about the city to consult her. I knew of another very lucky woman who is making much money in real-estate deals. She is a typewriter on Fourth avenue and started speculating by selling some lots which were left her by a relative. With this money she bought other property. This she sold at an increase, and so she went on buying and selling until to-day she has nearly $10,000 to her credit. This sum she has amassed in three years, with no capital to start with but two lots, worth, possibly, $200. There are many other like instances of lucky women in Pittsburg."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Laugh on the Girls.

A good joke was played on the girls of Marion recently by the young men of that town. The boys had been rather remiss in their attentions to the young ladies and had been "stagging" it to the theater, parties, etc., until the girls got tired of being left out in the cold and decided to show their independence. Consequently fifteen of the girls hired a box at the theater and made a very charming theater party. The play was, "Wanted: A Husband," and the girls sat serene through it all, never dreaming that the wicked boys had taken one of the largest flaring posters, "Wanted: A Husband," and fastened it around the box so that all the audience might read.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

NEPTUNE takes 165 years in making its journey around the sun, so that more than a century would have passed away on our earth before it had completed one year. Neptune is so far away from our earth that, although it is the third largest planet, we cannot see it unless we look through a telescope.

FIRING A 15-INCH GUN.

The Monster Easily Handled by Aid of Water Power.

The great gun is mounted on a forged steel carriage, on the top of which there are slides which receive the saddle to which the gun is strapped with big steel hoops, the Washington Post explains. At the side of the carriage there is a cylinder that connects with the gun saddle, and when the little lever connecting with the steam pump is thrown over the water is forced into this and the piston runs out, carrying the gun forward on the slides. When the shock of the recoil comes the gun is thrown back to the rear of the slides, in position for loading. To check the recoil and keep the piece from jumping overboard there is another cylinder closed at both ends and filled with a mixture of glycerine and water. There is a piston fitting tightly in this, but allowed to move backward and forward by rifling on the inside of the cylinder through which narrow channels the water and glycerine have to run as the piston moves.

This rifling is like the sticks of a fan, wider at the front than at the back, so that when the first shock of the recoil comes and the gun starts to force the piston back, the water has a tolerably free passage, but as it recedes the piston is gradually checked by the cushion of glycerine which it has to force through the narrow part of the rifling, and the great shock of the recoil is taken up as gently as though it ran against forty cartloads of feather pillows.

Under the gun there is another piston that raises and lowers the muzzle of the piece. But the most interesting thing about the gun is the ammunition elevator and the telescopic rammer that charges the piece. The immense steel projectiles are a load for four or five men, and there is 150 pounds of powder to a charge, so that passing it up from the hold by hand is out of the question. At the breech of the gun there is a regular small freight elevator, with three cars of three horizontal tubes laid one above the other. In the first tube is the steel projectile, and in the second and third the powder charges. As this elevator comes up past the breech, the telescopic rammer, which is a series of hydraulic cylinders fitting into each other, slides gently out and pokes the shell and the powder cartridges one after the other into the gun.

The horizontal movement of the gun is given by the rotating turret in which it is placed, and all the sighting is done over a slender steel rod in the conning tower, on the top of the turret, the rod's position always corresponding to that of the gun.

PERPLEXING TO THE SPEAKER.

Two Ohio State Legislators Who Closely Resemble Each Other.

Two of the jolliest members of the Ohio House of Representatives, says an exchange, are Messrs. Breck and Ganyard, whose Dromio-like resemblance to each other has earned for them the name of "the legislative twins." The only apparent difference between the two men is that Mr. Ganyard has slightly the longer beard, but this distinction was so fine that for some time after they made their appearance in the House the Speaker and the reporters had some difficulty in telling which was which. Both are farmers, Calvin S. Ganyard being from Medina County, Joseph H. Breck hailing from Cuyahoga.

Gloves.

Gloves were not known in England until near the close of the tenth century, and were then worn with a thumb and no fingers, like mittens. They were larger in every way than they needed to be, and wondrously embroidered and starred with jewels. No gloves were finer than those of the clergy. They were mostly of white silk or linen, cunningly broidered and sometimes fringed with pearls. One ecclesiastic had a red silk pair, with the sacred monogram worked on the back, surrounded with a golden glory; and later on they had gloves to match their different vestments. In fact, gloves had departed from the primary idea of utility and become a decoration. They were too magnificent for common wear, and were frequently carried in the hand or worn on the girdle. It was by the fine gloves his page had in his girdle that Cœur de Lion was betrayed on his way home from the crusade and so fell into captivity. But already the glove was more than a mere bit of foppery. The knight's mailed glove sheltered his hand; it became a sign of power; and when a gracious lord meant to signify his intention to protect a town he sent his glove as a sure sign of his willingness. The glove, too, was the token of defiance when one knight declared war against another; and to show his fealty to his mistress, he bound her broidered glove to his helmet. Long gloves came in at the end of the seventeenth century. Nell Gwynne's gloves were a proverb for their beauty. All through this time gloves were prettily set off with lace, ribbons and fringe, although the fashion of the finer artistic embroidery of the middle ages was falling into disuse. The bare hand was deemed an offense, and the costliness of gloves defined their wearers' social position.

Power of the Camera.

The wonderful power of a photographic camera to bring out details that are invisible to the naked eye was referred to by W. Lewis Fraser in his lecture at the Academy of Fine Arts, and he vouched for a remarkable instance of that kind which recently occurred in New York. A photograph was taken of one of the new American liners, and on receipt of the proof the owners were surprised to see a handbill pasted on the side of the hull. An examination of the ship showed no handbill there, but another photograph revealed the same result. A more thorough inspection revealed the presence of the mysterious paper buried beneath four coats of paint so completely as to defy the scrutiny of a human eye, except within the closest quarters.—Philadelphia Record.

W. S. COLLINS.

BEFORE TREATM'T

W. S. Collins, of Saginaw, Speaks.

"I am 29. At 15 I learned a bad habit which I continued till 19. I then became "one of the boys" and led a gay life. Exposure produced Syphilis. I became nervous and despondent; no ambition; memory poor; eyes red, sunken and blur; pimples on face; hair loose, bone pains; weak back; varicocele; dreams and losses at night; weak parts; deposit in urine, etc. I spent hundreds of dollars without help, and was contemplating suicide when a friend recommended Drs. Kennedy & Kergan's New Method Treatment. Thank God I tried it. In two months I was cured. This was six years ago, and never had a return. Was married two years ago and all happy. Boys, try Drs. Kennedy & Kergan before giving up hope."

Our City Debt.

We publish to-day the report made by the auditing board appointed to look over the city accounts. One Mr. Walborn is a democrat, while Mr. McIntosh is a republican. Both are good scholars and very careful in figures and both are honest. Their report is absolutely correct, and shows exactly all the debts the city owes. It shows that had we not been obliged to build a new school house last year, we would have paid off between $6,000 and $7,000 of our debt, because we paid about $3,600 on the new school house, and nearly as much more on the old bonds, on the municipal debt and on the road debt. It is a splendid showing that no amount of lying by interested parties can counteract.

Decoration Day.

A joint meeting of the G. A. R., W. R. C., S. O. V. and L. A. S. was held at G. A. R. hall Monday eve to arrange for properly observing Decoration Day. The following committees were appointed: General executive committee, Comrades Gordon and Wilson, Mesdames Silvers, Gordon and Zimmerman and Geo. Bishop; on flowers, W. R. C.; decoration, G. A. R. Post; program, Geo. Bishop, G. W. Gordon, Mrs. Ella Clapp, Mrs. Lydia Cowan; speaker, A. L. Kuhlman, E. L. Mason, J. N. Wilson; music, E. M. Hilkey, Flora Myers, John Otto; martial music, Henry Wolf; marking graves, Henry Wolf assisted by S. O. V.; to arrange for memorial sermon May 27, A. P. Green, Mrs. Silvers, Mrs. Zimmerman, E. M. Hilkey; Cedar Creek Cemetery, Comrades Houck, Miller and Snyder; Cooper Cemetery, Comrades Likens, Hoodlemier, Oyler.

The children of our town and vicinity and all loyal and patriotic people, without regard to age sex, or political bias, are earnestly requested to join in these services, in memory of those who valiantly faced death, to preserve to us our government with all its blessings of civil and religious liberty and have given us "one country and one flag."

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

THURSDAY.....APRIL 26, 1894

OHIO will pipe gas from the Indiana gas fields.

LET Congress hurry up and give us some democratic times. The country is getting tired of these republican times.

PAUPER labor in Canada coal mines gets $8 a week. In Pennsylvania the mines are on a strike because they cannot earn $6 a week.

LEROY TEMPLETON, who two years ago headed the state ticket of the People's party is now a Coxeyite, and shouting "On to Washington."

COAL is "protected" 75 cents a ton, and miners are on a strike because they cannot get living wages. They should know that "protection" is for the mine owner only.

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN the most noted crank of the past thirty years has joined Coxey. Also the Rev. M. K. Cross, a minister, who preached to them Sunday evening on the subject "Damned Fools."

COXEY and his weary crowd reached Washington Sunday. Now for that 500 millions of shinplaster money. His arrival there will do much to kill off this ridiculous nonsense of which he is the inventor.

STRIKES of coal miners all over the land. Yet coal is taxed at 75 cents in the McKinley law now in force and is likely to be taxed 45 cents in the new law. So it cannot be said that this trouble is due to the "prospect of going on the free list." How will our republican editors account for this labor trouble? Perhaps the wool free list does it, or the increased whisky tax.

SPENCER, the new pension agent, gave his sister the place he had made vacant by turning out Miss Mamie Simonson, daughter of the famous artillery officer, Col. Simonson, of Columbia City. It is supposed it was Col. Simonson's skill as a gunner that picked off Bishop Polk, a rebel general, just as Simonson was a short time after picked off by a rebel sharpshooter. Miss Simonson is a poor girl and a worthy one and it was a shame to turn her out, no matter what her politics may be. It took some time for us to believe that Mr. Spencer would do such a thing.

How to Vote.

Stamp your ballots anywhere inside the square that contains the rooster, and stamp but once. That votes a straight ticket. Fold up the ballot so as to leave the names of the poll clerk in sight. That's all there is to do.

Four Hours to Vote.

The law says all factories must not work for four hours after the time the polls open, unless they and the men agree on some other four hours. But they must have this four hours some time during the day. This is right, and should be obeyed.

May Elections.

City elections in Indiana show republican gains in general, though a few go the other way. In Ft. Wayne a large number of democrats believed that Shambaugh was not honestly nominated and voted against him. He was beaten about 500. In Garrett the vote stood:

The city board will be a tie.

Dispatch "Poor in Figgers."

Every year, just before election, the Dispatch has what it mistakes for a fit of honesty. It so dearly loves honesty! It merely wants to catch votes. After election it falls back into its former state of sin and remains there till just before the election next year. Just now it is indulging in its usual spasm of virtue. It has again tinkered up the report the town board makes each year on its financial condition. It always objects to what they say about the money due the town on the tax list. It says this debt owing to the town is not a "resource," but gives no reason why. Suppose a farmer has a farm worth $5,000 on which he owes $2,000. If he has no money due him, he is worth just $3,000 after his debts are paid. But suppose he has owing to him $1,500, that would come within $500 of getting him out of debt, so that his real financial condition would show that he is worth $5,000 less $500, or is worth just $4,500. But the Dispatch, in the density of its arithmetical ignorance, would insist that the money due this farmer had nothing to do with his real financial condition. While we do not consider this a question of value in considering the usual town report, we discuss it merely to show the Dispatch's ignorance and the means it takes to get votes on a false issue. It makes not the least difference whether the tax list goes into the report or not, it does not change the fact that we have a certain amount of money to raise and a certain amount of money to pay it with. But leaving aside this blunder of the Dispatch, as all know it is merely a juggling with figures in order to catch votes, we wish to call attention to the real facts. In making up the municipal debt, the Dispatch adds in the debt for the new school house, adding as an excuse for this unbusinesslike act that the people of Auburn have to pay it all. That is true. It is also true that the people of Auburn have to pay a county tax, a state tax, and contribute their share to the national revenues.

It is the municipal tax the Dispatch is discussing, as that is what the treasurer's and town board's report speaks of only, and the Dispatch goes off and adds in other matters to get a big showing in order to deceive. It should study the report of the auditing board that we publish. That shows the correct debt of all kinds.

But, taking even the Dispatch's view of the matter, what then? Will it make it any better to elect a republican board? Will we not be obliged to meet these expenses just the same? If a republican board had been in office would they not have been obliged to build a school house when they found 100 pupils in a room? And now, having built the school house, will not a republican board, if elected, have to pay for it? Will they not tax the people a few years from now to get the money needed to pay these debts? Or will they repudiate them? How can they repudiate them? Will they save expenses by stopping work on our streets? We have at various times had republican members of the board. Do the records show they were better than others?

The Dispatch, in another article, goes on with a similar lot of incorrect figures. It says there should be a change. Well, we had two republicans on the board for a time, and pretty good men they were, but things were no different. We have one republican on the board now, who we frankly admit, is a good man, and a few years ago we had a full town board of republicans who just about bankrupted the town. They made its orders sell at 80 cents, when they could be sold at all. Now, under a management mainly democratic, they are at par, and the debt being paid, as shown by the sworn statement of the treasurer, at the rate of nearly $1,300 a year, with a prospect that twice as much will be paid next year.

The Dispatch all the time adds the school expense and school debt to the town's expense and debt, in order to make it appear bigger than it is. But it don't say a word about the payment of the bonds the school corporation has been making right along till the old bonds are nearly all paid. Oh, no, that would be doing someone justice, and it is not justice the Dispatch wants, but votes.

And after the votes are secured, if this style of procedure should secure enough to elect a republican board, what then? Would the debt be paid up and the tax lowered at the same, while all the expenses improvements the Dispatch always favors go right on? Or would they stop levying a tax, stop paying the debt and stop all improvements? The Dispatch seems to intimate that all these would stop. If they should all be stopped there would be a chance for a little more practice in filing a schedule. It would be the town's turn this time.

Cures Dyspepsia.

Rebecca Wilkinson, of Brownsvalley, Ind., says: "I have been in a distressed condition for three years from nervousness, weakness of the stomach, dyspepsia and indigestion until my health was gone, I had been doctoring constantly with no relief. I bought one bottle of South American Nervine, which did me more good good any $50 worth of doctoring I ever did in my life. I would advise every weakly person to use this valuable and lovely remedy; a few bottles of it has cured me completely. I consider it the grandeet medicine in the world." Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottle 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord.

Keep Off the Grass!!!

Do our people realize that we are ruining the looks of our beautiful public square by making numerous paths across it? Well, we are. Just take a look at it, and see the change that is coming over it. No longer than a year ago, it was as it has been for many years, the most lovely public squre in the state, and all strangers stopped to admire it. But now its beauty will soon be a thing of the past, unless we all make an effort to prevent the damage now threatening it. Everybody seems to have dropped all thought of saving the grass, and new cross paths are showing up in every direction. Heretofore we have kept the grass safe from harm except the one path running across the northwest corner of the square, going from the pump northeast to the postoffice. During the winter a cross path has been forming to lead from the northwest corner of the square to the main door of the court house. Then the old path from the north center across southeast to the east door of the court house has been revived, and finally a new and unusual path is being made from the west court house door across through the thick trees to the northeast corner. This line has never been attempted before. Then from each end of the court house hall there is a growing tendency to make a path to the closets east of the jail. Now, "friends and fellow citizens," why should we thus destroy the beauty of this lovely park when there is so little excuse for it? Between the present date and the uncertain date when we shall be laid away in Woodlawn, there will be spare time enough, which if utilized, will be ample for us to go clear around all these corners and have some time to spare. Take a brief moment more of time, and so save this lovely ground in its proper beauty. Changing the famous lines of the poet Morris, we will make them read:

"Way farer, spare that laws;
Crush not a blade o' grass.
It beautifies our town,
And also our county, and if you don't look out, the commissioners will get after you, and if they don't fine you, will give you a lot of sass.

Obituary.

Nathan C. Palmer was born in Scipio, Cayuga county, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1813 In 1836 he came to Allen county, Ind., and built a home there in what was then a wilderness, where he experienced the hardships incident to pioneer life. A few years later he moved across the county line into DeKalb county on a farm four miles east of where Spencerville now is, where he remained until his death.

Dec. 21, 1843, he was married to Mary Weeks, to which union were born two sons and a daughter. The younger son died in infancy. The other, G. W. Palmer, the daughter, Mrs. E. E. Headley, and his widow survive him.

He believed firmly in immortality and the supreme goodness of God and would not speak of death as "death," but simply "crossing the river," and would speak of it as we naturally talk about a journey which we expect to enjoy, always looking forward to that event with joyful anticipations. On one occasion, in conversation with the writer, he said, "I shall never die, and I want no tears at my funeral if it can be so. I want you to sing your most cheerful songs. Think of me and rejoice that I have entered the life that never ends." He was always a friend to those in distress, and being of a kind, joyous, cheerful disposition, he had the faculty of dispelling gloom from any company he chanced to be with. He was an affectionate husband and father, a kind neigbor and a true friend to everyone, and all his acquaintances were his friends. Though his health had been for some time declining, his last sickness was only a few days. On Sunday morning, April 22, 1894, he folded his hands across his breast and peacefully fell asleep at the age of 81 yrs, 2 mos. and 21 days. The funeral services were conducted on Tuesday by F. Dunakin, of Cecil, Ohio, from the M. E church at Scipio and the remains placed to rest in the beautiful cemetery near by. A good man has passed away. E. W.

Married: At the Lutheran parsonage last Sabbath afternoon April 29, by J. D. Brosy Oscar N. Doty and Sadie Putt. Both were from near Ashley Ind.

MARRIED: At the residence of the bride's parents, by her father, Rev. W. O. Butler, April 22, 1894, Mr. Hugh Boozer to Miss Nora Butler. The young people are at home in Waterloo.

Married: At the the Residence of Eli Miers, two miles west of Auburn, April 26, by J. D. Brosy, Geo. Campbell and Ada Miers. The wedding was an enjoyable one, and we extend to them our heartfelt wishes.

Mrs. T. C. Ford started for Washington this week on Monday, over the B. & O. She will stay there a week, and then goes on to Philadelphia to attend the national meeting of the Confederation of Women's Clubs. She will be joined in Washington by Mrs. Mollie Rose, who is also a delegate.

"Give me a Receipt." "Han't got it; but did you ever smoke Blank's Best?" "Don't want 'em. I smoke only cigars I have tested and proven good; and Kessler Bros.' brands fill the bill.

Miss Ida M. Stahl and Wm. E. Oakes were united in marriage at the home of Mrs. Cuppy, by Rev. A. S. Wooton, Wednesday noon, April 25. The little daughter of Mrs. Cuppy played the wedding march. A number of relatives and friends were present. The dinner was elegant. Mr. and Mrs. Oakes will reside in Chicago.

Dr. Nusbaum went south again Saturday, and will join Mr. Kiblinger at Marietta, and remain awhile. Mr. Kiblinger was no worse, but requested the Doctor to be with him when he could. Since writing the above, Mrs. Kiblinger reached home Tuesday, bringing word that Mr. Kiblinger, who remained at Marietta, Ga., seems much better.

Rev. W. L. Meese, is now selling a very valuable work, which will take the place to a certain extent, of a costly encyclopedia. It is the "Manual of Useful Information," a book that in a brief way treats of almost everything. There are five books in the series, and these are usually taken by teachers. But this one volume is a great value to the general public.

Mr. Meese is this week getting out a large lot of the Swing Washers, which he will at once put on the market. He has already sold an unusual number of these popular machines, and the outlook is better than ever before, for increased sales. Every housewife in the county ought to lighten her burdens by using one of these labor-saving Swing Washers.

O. W. Russell, of Syracuse, was here Saturday. He is traveling for the News Printing Co. at Goshen. He had been at Ashley and gave the details of the fire in which L. B. Fretz lost nearly all his clothing. It was about 2 in the morning when the hotel burned and he was roused and made his escape, with only a part of a suit. In a few minutes it would have been too late. Mr. Fretz has been unfortunate lately.

Kendallville News:—While passing through the region of the old Rochester mill dam on the Lake Shore road one cannot help but notice the change in the face of the country that has been going on there since the dam was removed. The river that formerly overflowed a great deal of the land, is now confined within the banks of the stream and the trees and low underbrush are being removed and in a few years that will be one of the finest sections of Noble county.

Mrs. Julia E. M. Hodge started on an extended visit last week. She goes first to visit the family of her brother, Grenville Mott, at Michigan City, and at the conclusion of her stay there will go to Ann Arbor, where her daughter Julia is attending the University. After the visit at Ann Arbor, she will go to the old home in Pennsylvania, and visit friends in Lucerne and Wyoming counties. The return to this place will not be made till some time in September. The COURIER joins her numerous friends in hoping she may have enjoyable visits.

Mrs. Sherman Dickinson was here Tuesday. She says Mr. Dickinson has been in poor health nearly all winter but is able to work again. The people over at the Viberg school house in the edge of Allen county, had an exhibition Saturday, and asked Mr. Dickinson, who is a deaf mute, to go over and tell them a story or two, "by signs." This he did not want to do, but was finally induced to go, and during the entertainment told two stories, and the quaintness of things caused great merriment. Later they took up a collection and insisted on his accepting it.

C. C. Boyer of Waterloo, was here on Saturday showing a very simple and ingenious invention for using a set of gasolene burners on an ordinary stove. It is a plate in the same form as the opening in the front part of the top of the ordinary cooking stove, and in the part of this plate where the "stove lid" is, there are two ordinary burners, one for each lid. The gasolene is in the usual tank at the top of a pipe. The whole is very light and easily lifted out or in. It is also quite cheap. If it works as well as it appears that it should, it may come into general use.

Many of the young Auburn boys and girls will remember the editor's little nephew, Roy Smith, who spent the summer here a few years ago. They will be pleased to learn that by his diligence, ability and perseverance, he has made quite a success of everything he has undertaken. His latest triumphs were literary ones. He entered the contest for oratory in his school at his home, York, Neb., and won first honors. This gave him the right to contest in the district in which he lives, which he did, and again took first honors. On his return home he was accorded an enthusiastic welcome by the citizens, as the hero of one of the great conquests of peace should be received. Now, he will be the contestant from that district at the state contest. We hope to see him win there.

Guy Plum, once a prominent citizen of Auburn, is now a resident of Easton on the Eastern Shore, Maryland, and no doubt their old neighbors here would be pleased to hear how they are situated. The editor's daughter is now visiting them and gives this pen picture of their present home: "Mr. Plumb's residence is just on the edge of a town of 5,000 or 6,000, and it is a most lovely place. They call it 'Oak Hills.' The house is away back from the road, with a large flower garden in front, in the middle of which stands a pecan tree so old no one knows its age. They never bear until they are 90 years old, and this one has been bearing as long as the oldest settler can remember, so you can imagine its age. Holly trees are all around with their lovely red berries. But it is the house that strikes me. It is an old plantation house over 100 years old. It has fifteen rooms, and nearly all of them as large as an ordinary house. There are many fire-places, but these are closed up now, and they have fixed over the place a great deal, have moved the negro quarters away, put in modern windows, etc. The doors are nearly as wide as folding ones at home, and have little brass knobs and iron pieces on to give greater strength. There are long halls, with rows of rooms along. The second story retains more fully its ancient make up and arrangement, for with so many rooms, so arranged, one could easily get lost—rooms in every direction, with little halls and low ceilings. The whole thing is a perfect delight for me. They have horses and there are fine shell roads here, and we are going soon to catch some oysters and expect to have a nice time. With everything so pleasant here, I am enjoying a most delightful visit." And in a second letter she adds, "The country is full streams as large as lakes, running into the bay. Mistletoe grows on the trees. We took tea with a Quaker family, cousins of Dr. Coates. They are such lovely people and I like to hear them talk. Saw a Quaker meeting house today, where Lord Baltimore used to attend and where Fox, the founder of the Quaker society, used to hold meetings. Morris, a signer of the declaration of independence, is buried near here, as is also Annabell Lee, the subject of one of Poe's famous poems. This is a famous historical country. Saw a nest of bald eagles today as well as fish hawks." She also speaks of Amy Plum attending the department of medicine in the famous John Hopkins University, where, we believe, she graduates this spring.

Refused a Good Five.

R. W. Cobb at the Auburn Cyclery has a little machine, by which he can make it appear that he can grind out a five dollar bill. A man came in there the other day to solicit help when Cobb promptly took up his machine, ground out a nice new five and handed it to the astonished stranger. The money was as promptly refused. "Why, isn't it all right?" Asked the money maker. "It would be all right to get me into the pen," replied the stranger, as he walked away, with air of "Get behind me Satan" about him. And Cobb returned the genuine $5 to his pocket, for it was genuine, of course. Cobb had played this trick on a number of people, and everybody believes the bill to be counterfeit.

BOARDINGHOUSE coffee is sometimes like the quality of mercy—it is not strained.

LABOR is sweet, and labor is noble—especially when some other fellow is performing it.

THE wag who spends his days trading jokes at the expense of other people must expect some boot.

DEAN SWIFT said: "It is useless to attempt to argue a man out of a thing he was never reasoned into."

THE Siamese instruments of torture are made in England, and bear the trade mark of a prominent Birmingham firm.

MOST trees have what are known as adventitious buds that are liable to break out in any place on the trunk or limbs of even the most aged barks.

DO NOT retail your troubles to your neighbor, for most likely he has more and worse troubles than you have, but has the good sense to keep still about them and bear them with resignation.

THERE may be a furlough from our customary work; there can never be any lawful vacation from doing good. There may be change of place, scene, fellowship; there must be none in the spirit of self-sacrificing beneficence.

THERE are many farmers who think that during the busy season reading must be abandoned. In this they err, for a short time each day spent in reading the timely views and experiences of others will often save much hard and fruitless labor.

THE greatest swarm of locusts ever known invaded South Africa in 1797. They were driven into the sea by a north wind, and, the waves throwing them back, a bank of dead locusts from three to six feet thick was formed for fifty miles along the coast.

IMAGINATION and sympathy bring the most opposite people near together, whereas the narrow-minded, the cold, the conventional, the self-absorbed, the supercilious cannot brook the company of those whom they do not understand, or whom they are pleased to consider their inferiors.

ONE of the Gould family announces that in spite of prevalent rumors he is still heart and fancy free and not engaged to be married. With this definite announcement there is nothing to hinder New York contemporaries from beginning again to get him engaged and maried in a variety of ways.

BROOKLYN is just now a good place to move from. Dr. Smith Ely Jelliffe has examined the Brooklyn water supply and finds that it contains twenty-eight kinds of live animals and eighty-four species of vegetables. In the list are algæ, diatoms, desmids, rhizopods, rotifers, and infusoria of many species. That's a pretty kettle of fish to set before a town like Brooklyn.

A PHYSICIAN advises that it is a good plan to ride up in an elevator, but to take the stairs for the descent. Walking up a flight of stairs is hard, and sometimes risky, as in the case of persons with weak lungs, defective respiratory organs or heart disease. But going down stairs hurts nobody, and is good exercise; going down rapidly is even a better thing, as it shakes up the anatomy without any danger of overexertion.

THERE is not one farmer in ten who receives the bulletins, reports, etc., from the experiment stations, who reads them. They are ruined for popular use by a wilderness of useless words and tables of figures that would require a professional mathematician to expound. Facts tersely, clearly told, are eagerly looked for but rarely found in these dry pamphlets. Reports prepared in an effective popular style would prove of deep interest to the farmer. The present method is worse than useless.

NO ONE has a right to trifle even with the slightest opportunity of being useful. Few can work out splendid achievments; but that individual who unobtrusively pursues his way, and feels a quiet joy in dropping an appropriate word of rational instruction, who judiciously expresses sympathy, or expresses his convictions in tones of virtuous persuasion, may do more in the course of his humble life than another who endows hospitals, patronizes popular institutions, and blazes out into sudden acts of brilliant munificence.

A PINAFORISH scandal of which history will never take cognizance has resumed vogue among gossipers in England. The story goes that there was a mixing up of two children in the case of the persons of Lord Rosebery and the son of the dying Lord's foster-mother, wife of a farmer; that the real lord died some years ago, and that the false lord put up a memorial over his playmate's grave. It is explained that the change of the boys was made by the ambitious mother of the groom's son, and that when she revealed her secret it was too late to effect a remedy. From the American point of view about the best thing that can be said is that if Britain has any more of the Rosebery breed of stable boy she can't be too quick in trotting them out. Meanwhile the above tale will make a "true story" chapter for a penny dreadful.

THERE is nothing parsimonious about the British Government when it comes to a dicker for spy service. It seems that the notorious Le Caron had an agreement whereby his services were to yield him an annuity of five thousand dollars while he lived, with a life insurance of one hundred thousand dollars. The bargain is said to have been made by the London Times and accredited to English enterprise in journalism. It is more probable, however, as alleged by other newspapers, that the British Government footed the bill, and that the Times merely secured early information of the spy's disclosures.

THE danger to public health caused by the use of milk from cows afflicted with tuberculosis is no longer disputable. What is commonly called pulmonary consumption not only exists in cattle, but just now it seems to be strikingly prevalent. In some cases half a herd of milch cows have responded to the new test for the disease, and post-mortem examinations have attested the accuracy of the diagnosis. The danger is so alarming, particularly when it concerns the food of infants, that the utmost precaution is demanded. No germ life can withstand boiling temperature. Use not a drop of milk that has not been boiled.

THE introduction of electricity has doubtless very largely curtailed the demand for common horses, such as formerly were sold to the street-car companies, and they are consequently a drug in the market. Good horses for carriage work or teaming purposes have not shown much decline, and it is safe to predict that no adaptation of steam or electricity will ever destroy the love that man has for handling good horses. As the wealth of the nation increases, the ownership of horses becomes more general, and we see nothing to warrant a belief that good horses will not always prove fairly remunerative to breeders who carefully study the demands of the market.

DR. R. N. FOSTER, of Chicago, is an educated physician, and no doubt believes what he says when he unreservedly recommends whisky in the treatment of grip. The idea, however, will not be indorsed by a good many laymen, and it has a singular sound coming from a homeopath. Recent investigations have demonstrated that alcoholic stimulants are not absolutely necessary in any disease. It is certain, at all events, that other agents produce the same therapeutic effect without the resulting difficulties and dangers. Alcohol is a negative drug at best. It arrests the waste of the tissues, but it does not build up. Its use, like that of the opium preparations, is fraught with danger to the patient. It may relieve and soothe for a time, but it reacts with double force. It is a menace instead of a benefactor, a false friend in time of need. The day of whisky as a panacea and cure-all has gone by. Modern science has punctured its pretensions.

FARM NEWS: An old but discouraged farmer writes to ask "The exact meaning of 'business methods' which you newspaper writers are continually talking about." Perhaps getting out of the old rut is the nearest approach to developing business methods that a farmer can make. This is no easy task. The chains of habit are often stronger than a man's will, frequently mightier than principle, because so deceptive. One of the greatest aids will be to take several good agricultural papers. A stimulus to prompt action, the kindling of ambition for better work and the abandonment of cherished but mistaken ideas, will all follow as a result. Keeping watch of the markets in different parts of the country is essential, but not more so than to labor for your home market by raising something your neighbors neglect. Perhaps it is clear that your favorite crops and stock are not paying well, reduced cost of raising is then the only safe remedy since much enhanced values are not likely to be reached in the near future. If you cannot figure cost and lower, it behooves you to figure on other kinds of farming, especially if it be a different line than pursued by other farmers near you who are likely to remain wedded to the good old ways of their fathers.

After the Honeymoon.

"You do admire my hair, George, don't you?" "Oh, rather! I say, what a grand fire escape it would make!"

HIGH TARIFF VS. PROSPERITY.

Protection Cannot Possibly Benefit the People at Large.

The revenue reform press of the country has time and again shown the utter fallacy of the idea of protection as being a benefit to the people at large. The fact that many of our products are sold in competition with the products of other nations in the markets of the world is sufficient proof that the "protection" so much talked about does nothing more than enable the favored classes to levy a tribute on their home patrons, for if they can sell to a foreign customer without a tariff tax they can sell with profit to the home market. The history of the copper ore trade is a good instance of this fallacy. If the copper barons can, as they do, mine copper here, transport it over the sea, pay the ocean freight, and sell it at a profit at the price for which foreign copper is sold, they certainly do not need a tax on copper to prevent foreign competition in the home market.

And what is true of copper is notoriously true of all other articles "protected" by the tariff tax. "Protection" is a fine sounding term, but when examined it means nothing more nor less than a law, as in the case of copper ore, that permits the "protected" producer to levy a tax upon the "unprotected" consumers of his articles equal to the amount of his "protection" in the case of copper, and nearly so in respect to other "protected" articles. If the tariff tax did not do this it would be useless. If it does it, then it is unjust to those who are forced to pay the tax.

Many persons, like the farmers, are deluded into the support of this system by a pretense of protection for themselves. If they derived any benefit from it we might not question their sagacity, whatever might be thought of their motives. They were assured that protection would give them a better home market. Has it done so? They are given by the McKinley act a tariff of 20 cents a bushel on wheat, and wheat sells for the magnificent sum of 59 cents per bushel! Do the farmers know why a tariff on wheat cannot help them? When they stop to think of course they do. It is because no wheat is imported into the country; because we produce a surplus, and that surplus must be exported to find a market, and the price for exportation fixes the price of the entire crop. The tariff on wool was increased to pull the wool over the farmer's eyes and the money out of his pocket. Both were accomplished, but the price of wool went down as the McKinley tariff went up. Let all the farmers whose wheat, wool and other products have been increased in price by the tariff, stand up and vote for McKinley and Republican "protection;" and let all those whose products have not been increased in price by that thimble-rigging scheme, denounce it and its authors and supporters. A very little thought will show the farmers that in the nature of things they can not be "protected" in the production of their products, because the articles they produce are not imported (except wool, and a high tariff has always made the price of that low), but they are produced in excess of the demand for home consumption, and the money-producing crops, like wheat, corn, cotton, meats and the like, must be exported and sold where McKinley's scheme of protection can not protect the American farmer.—Saginaw Evening News.

Hill's Crude Ideas on Taxation.

Some one signing himself "Ex-Republican" writes the following letter to the Chicago Herald:

DES MOINES, Iowa—Editor of the Herald: Unless David B. Hill, with such men as Brice and Gorman, are driven out of the Democratic party speedily and forever, the organization which Jefferson founded will and ought to go down to everlasting defeat. History repeats itself in the Senate. That association of fossils and public plunderers was the great bulwark of chattel slavery. It is now the defender of every form of legal robbery for the benefit of the rich. A traitor like David B. Hill finds it necessary to invent curious expedients to make treachery appear defensible in the eyes of his shallow-pated friends. In his speech delivered on Monday, the late Democratic Senator added to the already queer array of excuses for tariff taxation the following: "The poor man who owns no real estate or personal property pays nothing directly toward State, county, or municipal taxation, nothing toward the maintenance of the highways over which he travels, nothing toward the expenses of the courts where his rights are vindicated and his wrongs redressed, nothing for lighted streets, police protection, public hospitals, jails, or almshouses, and nothing for the church at which he worships, because here we have no established religion; and if it were not for custom house taxation—taxation upon consumption—he would pay not a farthing toward the support of the Government which protects him, and under which he enjoys the blessings and privileges of a free and independent citizen."

The idea that the non-property class pay no taxes for local government and that they should therefore be taxed indirectly by a tariff to even things up a little, is probably original with Hill. It seems incredible, however, that a man who was Governor of the greatest State in the Union, and is now one of its representatives in the United States Senate, should thus exhibit his ignorance on a simple economic question. The same law by which tariff duties are shifted from importer to consumer transfers nearly all municipal or State taxes to final users and consumers. Does Senator Hill believe that a Chicago assessor's levy, for example, on a wholesale or retail stock of merchandise, is really borne by the wholesaler or retailer? Is not such a tax a charge upon the last purchaser of the goods, because included in the price he pays for them? A tenant, whether he own taxable property or not, contributes indirectly to the support of local government when he pays the rent. Boarders, in the same manner, help to swell the public treasury every time they square their board bill, and even the mere wayfarer cannot evade giving his quota to the same fund unless he refuses to pay his hotel account.

In fine, no person, be he rich or poor, who works for a living and uses or consumes wealth in any form, can escape paying taxes. The atrocious thing about the whole business is, that not only tariff duties but nearly every tax levied by local assessors follow the subjects taxed and fall with impoverishing and crushing weight upon consumers as such. Under this system the poor and non-property class are, in proportion to their ability, the largest contributors to the support of municipal, State and Federal government. In the final accounting property-owners pay taxes only in the measure that they are users and consumers of the subjects of taxation. In so far as their tax bills exceed that amount they are mere collectors of public money,—middlemen between the real payers and the common treasury.

Since he joined the Republican party Hill naturally holds that the rich now pay more than their share of taxes; that property-owners maintain government for the benefit of the unfortunate devils who pay board and rent. That is the essence of plutocracy. It is a lie and a superstition which has long ago found firm lodging in the party of tariff thieves. That is where David B. Hill has betaken himself and must hereafter remain.

Greatest and Meanest of Thieves.

Indirect taxation is the greatest and the meanest thief on earth. This thief takes little at a time, but he takes that little from each person 365 days out of every year. No civilized person on this globe is exempt from his ravages. He has the authority of the Government to plunder its citizens. The Government knows that the thief is cautious, judicious and sly, and that he has had experience in the art of extracting money from the pockets of the people for revenue and "other purposes," as the McKinley bill puts it. The thief turns over to the Government about one-third of his swag and gives the other two-thirds to his real employers—the manufacturers and monopolists.

Thus this thief pilfers from us each year over $300,000,000 for our government and probably $600,000,000 more for the monopolists and trusts—an average of nearly $75 a year from each family, $50 of which goes to a favored few. With such a magnificent thief abroad in our land it is no wonder that we have produced over 4,000 millionaires since 1860 who, according to the census of 1890, own one-fifth of all our wealth. It is no wonder that 9 per cent. of our population own over 70 per cent. of our wealth, leaving 91 per cent. practically paupers, living from hand to mouth.

This condition of affairs is a reversal of the condition in 1860, when 90 per cent. of our population owned over 70 per cent. of our wealth. A thief that has in thirty years transferred nearly $50,000,000,000 from the pockets of the masses to the pockets of the classes is certainly the greatest of all thieves. He is also the meanest, for, unlike most thieves, who operate mainly upon the rich, his victims are the hard-working people. He stealthily lays hold of every fifth dollar of the poor and carries it exultingly to the vaults of the rich.

Shame on the Senator who is such a traitor to the people or who is so grossly ignorant of the character of indirect taxation that he will rise in his place in the Senate to champion the interests of the greatest and meanest of thieves.—B. H. H.

Stop the Uncertainty.

The utterances of United States Senators like Allison of Iowa that the tariff legislation would not be passed before next October, thus entailing uncertainty and doubt upon the country until that time, deserves the severest condemnation. It is time for the American people to rise up in their might and demand speedy action one way or the other. Labor is unemployed, capital idle, stagnation and distress prevalent all over this broad land owing to the failure of the United States Senate to dispose promptly of the pending tariff bill. By all means dispose of all the questions promptly that affect business or destroy confidence.—National Glass Budget.

Timely Advice.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat (Rep.) counsels the Republican Senators not to filibuster against the tariff bill, which it believes is sure to pass in some shape. "Although the Republicans," it says, "are not directly responsible for the conduct of the government, they cannot escape accountability if they deliberately and wantonly throw obstructions in the way of the management of its affairs."

Gretchen and Katchen.

Gretchen and Katchen, the two little maids,
Wear pretty white caps over tight flaxen braids;
They're clad like twin sisters from kerchief to shoe,
And both have round eyes of forget-me-not blue.

But Gretchen's in motion from morning till night;
She runs, and she skips, and she jumps with delight;
While Katchen won't move, even when she is bid,
Because she's a dolly of china and kid.

Said Gretchen to Katchen, "We're left all alone;
We'll just have a quiet good time of our own:
You'll ride in your wagon to call on the cat,
To take her some cherries, and have a long chat.

"In the vine-covered arbor the table we'll spread,
And load it with cherries, all shining and red;
I'll pick out the ripest from those on the shelf,
For sleepy Frau Green-Eyes, and you, and myself.

"I'll do all the talking for you and for her,
Since you, my poor Katchen, cannot even purr,
'I never eat cherries, I thank you,' says she,
And then there'll be more for my Katchen and me!"

They called on Frau Green-Eyes, the sleepy old dame,
And grave little Katchen rode back as she came,
With never a spot on her kid finger-tips;
But gray little Gretchen had purple-stained lips!

Little Boy Blue.

The little toy dog is covered with dust,
But sturdy and stanch he stands;
And the little toy soldier is red with rust,
And his musket molds in his hands.
Time was when the little toy dog was new,
And the soldier was passing fair,
And that was the time when our Little Boy Blue
Kissed them and put them there.

"Now don't you go till I come," he said,
"And don't you make any noise!"
So toddling off to his trundle bed
He dreamed of the pretty toys.
And as he was dreaming, an angel song
Awakened our Little Boy Blue—
Oh, the years are many, the years are long,
But the little toy friends are true.

Ay, faithful to Little Boy Blue they stand,
Each in the same old place,
Awaiting the touch of a little hand,
The smile of a little face.
And they wonder, as waiting these long years through,
In the dust of that little chair,
What has become of our Little Boy Blue
Since he kissed them and put them there.

An Alphabet Party.

A children's party that was given for the first time in this country was arranged by the wife of one of the Central American Ministers to the United States. This party is called the "alphabet party" and was given in honor of the Minister's second child. Madam explained its meaning. In the country from which they hail the alphabet party is always an event in a child's life, and there is a gentle rivalry among friendly mothers as to the age at which their children are entitled to the right to the party.

As soon as a little boy or girl has mastered the alphabet thoroughly the party occurs to celebrate the child's accomplishment. The table is decorated with pretty boxes and souvenirs for the little guests, which are always made at home. The little cakes have letters in frosting, or are made in the shape of A B C's, and the alphabet figure in all sorts of devices. The little hero or heroine has to convince his guests that he is a master of the letters, and then comes the interesting event of the occasion. There is a little balloon at hand waiting. The little alphabet book out of which the tiny senor or senorita has learned the letters is shut up in the balloon or tied to it, and the balloon is then set a-flying, and if the alphabet is thoroughly mastered the balloon will bear the book far away, and that's the last the little son or daughter is supposed to need of it.

Benevolence at a Discount.

The resourceful newsboy is not a product of America alone. He is found in London as well as in New York, as the following story, told by a clergyman some years ago, attests.

A benevolent old gentleman, having observed for several nights in Trafalgar Square a youngster selling "evenings," who seemed particularly sharp and above the average in every way, conceived the idea of benefiting him, as he expressed it, putting him in the way of earning a living. One night, therefore, the boy was accosted with:

"I say, my boy, wouldn't you like to give up selling papers, and have a situation where you could be good and away from bad company?"

"How much a week?" promptly inquired the lad.

The old gentleman was taken aback at such a very practical question, and hardly knew what to answer. At last he said:

"Well, I don't know; perhaps four or five shillings."

"Ha, ha, ha!" laughed the lad; "that's good. Why, I pay my mother fifteen bob a week now."

The old gentleman collapsed, and has given up trying to get "paper" boys into situations.—Harper's Young People.

Professional Jealousy.

Malibran and Sontag, the two famous singers, were rivals, and once cast to sing in "Romeo and Juliet." Sontag was a German, very sweet and gentle, but not so quick as Malibran, who was a Spaniard. The latter, who played Romeo, did her best to puzzle and torment poor Juliet at rehearsals, and when begged by her to say on what part of the stage she was going to fall in the last scene, always replied she really did not know, really could not tell; sometimes she died in one place, sometimes in another, just as it happened. On the night of the performance, Sontag meekly prepared to follow Romeo, who maliciously insisted on dying close down to the footlights in front of the curtain. Juliet fell dead by his side, and the fair corpses had to be removed by two red-plush liveried footman in good view of the audience.

I soon discovered on my left leg, just above the knee, a small brown spot about as big as a three-cent piece, which puffed up but did not hurt me or feel sore. I did not pay any attention to it until two years after, when it commenced to spread and have the appearance of a ring worm. I could not sleep nights, and on account of the itching I scratched the spot until the blood would run. THEY DRIVE OUT MEN

ADVANCEMENT MADE BY THE DAUGHTERS OF PARIS.

Women Taking Their Places in Walks of Life Where the Sterner Sex Hitherto Had a Monopoly, as Doctors, Financiers and Lawyers.

Women in New Roles.

Paris is never weary of making fun of its "advanced daughters." They have got the phrase in London now, and, while they apply it somewhat differently, the general meaning is the same. Women are gradually taking rank in professions and in business into which it was once supposed that they could never enter. The old conservative classes in France, especially, profess to regret this, and say that it will end in the destruction of the home. But the 17,000,000 of women in France have long done, in their own sphere, and in many spheres to which only man is admitted in other countries, as much work as the men. To this, according to the New York Journal, is due the fact that France is to-day the richest country in Europe.

Women are bookkeepers and shopkeepers throughout France. They receive money and disburse it in postoffices and country banks; they literally share the toil of their mates. In the cafe, the barber's shop, the grocery store, even at the wine counter, their presence lends refinement and charm. Then why should they not be conspicuous in the public professions for which the new and higher education has fitted them? France has long allowed women students in its medical schools. Why, then, should not the lady doctor be prominent in Paris? Here she is, as a Parisian artist imagines her—the pretty and interesting doctress of the near future. Here she is engaged in an affair of the heart which concerns the patient much more than it does her. One can imagine her giving the poor fellow her verdict and his medicine, and then gracefully adjusting her soft hat on her tresses and calling her carriage to proceed on her daily round of visits. Paris laughs at the idea, but does it dare to say that it will not come?

At the Bar and in the Senate.

And here is the "lawyeress," clad in the traditional cap and flowing gown of the French barrister. She looks not unlike Portia, but the client listening to her has nothing Venetian in his appearance. What would there be incongruous in the apparition of one of these charming lawyeresses in the great hall of the last steps where advocates come to consult with their clients in the Paris Palais de Justice? A woman deputy has long been thought a possibility in Paris. This is because women have interests to protect; they have helped to create the wealth and ought to have the priviledge of voting as to its disposition. Women representing women constituents and faithfully fighting for their rights would seem quite natural after a while, and it would teach the French masculine deputies to be a trifle more choice in their language when they get angry. Alphonse Daudet may some day write a novel with a lady deputy in it. He would know how to make her very charming.

And then the "woman of affairs," the "financieress?" This is how the French artists think she would look. But why should woman sacrifice the especial air and peculiar garb which so enhances her beauty, simply because she goes into medicine, law, politics or business? Did not the ancients do all these things passing still when they were robes? Strange it is, but the French mind can conceive of the "advanced daughters" only as men in trousers, or short skirts and fantastic zouave costumes.

BURGLARS' TOOLS.

They Are Generally Made by Mechanics Who Are Respectable.

Every little while the police arrest a man with a kit of burglars' tools in his possession, and one naturally wonders where they all come from. It is easy to buy a gun of any description, and the most reputable citizen would not be ashamed to be seen purchasing the most wicked looking knife ever made; but who would know where to get a slungshot, or a jimmie, or a device for drilling into a safe, or any of the many tools used by the professional burglar in the pursuit of his calling?

There probably are places in many large cities where these things are made and sold to the users, but such places are scarce. Once in a while the police find such a factory, and then things go hard for the proprietors. It may seem a little strange to learn that most of the tools used in burglaries are made by mechanics who are respectable men in the community.

When a burglar wants any particular tool made he goes to a mechanic who can do the job and pays him perhaps five times what it is actually worth for making the tool and keeping still about it. Supt. Elbridge, of the Police Department, recalls many cases of this kind that have come to light in Boston. One in particular occurried three years ago, when an escaped convict named Williams went to a blacksmith in Roxbury and got him to make a lot of drills to be used in safe cracking. He personally superintended the tempering of the steel, and when the job was nearly completed it leaked out, and Williams was arrested. In this instance the blacksmith knew nothing of the use to which the tools were to be put, and escaped punishment. In the opinion of Supt. Elbridge most of the tools used by burglars are secured in this way. The only regular establishment where they were made ever discovered in Boston was at the West End. This was years ago, and the place was soon broken up.—Boston Globe.

A Grave Matter.

A couple of gentlemen were strolling through a cemetery, when one drew his companion's attention to a stone on which was inscribed, "Little Johnnie, aged 3."

"You may hardly credit it," was the remark, "but Master Johnnie, before his demise, did me slap out of $800 a year, not to speak of a charming wife."

"How on earth could a child of 3 manage that," asked the other.

"In this fashion: As you are aware, I am quite bald, and wear, for appearance sake, a wig. One hot day, being alone with the youngster, I took the thing off and gave it to him to play with for a few minutes. Well, I had proposed to and been accepted by the child's mother's sister—a splendid girl, possessed of property bringing about $800 a year. We were just on the eve of getting married. One day my affianced was carrying Johnnie, and the little chap suddenly began to howl for no apparent reason. He could not, of course, give utterance respecting the cause of his grief, but made signs that he wished me to hold him. When I took the child in my arms the imp instantly grabbed at my wig and pulled it off. Then my beloved perceived that the luxuriant chestnut curls which she had so often admired were not my own, and she nearly fainted. Next morning I received a note stating that she could never marry a man with a head as bare as a billiard ball. I heard subsequently of dear little Johnnie's decease. I didn't require to use my handkerchief, I assure you."

Compensation.

It is said that Roger, the celebrated French tenor, was exceedingly loyal to his profession and was apt to take offense at any slight, whether or not it was intended. On one occasion, he was engaged for the sum of sixty pounds to sing at the house of a rich financier.

Roger sang his first song magnificently, but no one paid him the slightest attention, and the guests talked their loudest.

Presently the host thought the time had come for another song, and sent for Rogers. He could not be found, and that evening was seen no more. Next day a note came from him, accompanied by the sum of eighty pounds. The note ran thus: "I have the honor to return the sixty pounds which I received for singing at your party; and I beg leave to add twenty pounds more for having so greatly disturbed the conversation of your guests."

Great Word.

The celebrated German word which signified "Mutual Life and Fire Insurance Company," and which has been cited as the longest word in any language, apparently has a rival in another word, which is found in a German periodical:

Schornsteinfegermeisterberufgenossenschaft.

Though this is a single word in German, several words are required to express it in English. It means, as nearly as anything else, "The professional association of master chimney sweeps."

An English word of respectable dimensions can be produced simply by running all these words into one, without space or hyphen.

When the Royal Baking Powder makes finer and more wholesome food at a less cost, which every housekeeper familiar with it will affirm, why not discard altogether the old-fashioned methods of soda and sour milk, or home-made mixture of cream of tartar and soda, or the cheaper and inferior baking powders, and use it exclusively?

Dizzied by Success.

James Hinton, the celebrated aurist and essayist, was one of those men who are absolutely oblivious to the impression made upon the world by their own eccentricities of demeanor. He was an odd little man. As some one once said of him, "There never lived a man with a whiter soul, a warmer heart or a shriller voice." He wrote a book that set the world talking, and also leaped at once into a fine medical practice. One day J. C. Jeaffreson was walking along a London street, when he heard his own name uttered in a high treble. He says:

Turning quickly round, I saw a little, fragile man, dancing about the pavement in high excitement, to the considerable inconvenience of wayfarers. It was James Hinton. Jumping up to me, he shook my hand with convulsive tugs, as he ejaculated:

"I am so very glad, so inexpressibly glad to see you! I have so often wished to see you and tell you all that has happened!"

Having, by this time, shaken my hand with more than sufficient cordiality, he stepped back a few paces and, in doing so, blundered against a stout lady, and knocked a small boy down into the gutter. After viewing me in the right perspective, he danced up to me again, and then danced before me, ejaculating in the highest notes of his shrill voice:

"I am so delighted to see you! There is so much for us to talk about! So many things have happened that I want to tell you about! Do you know, I am a successful man? I became a success all in a minute. Isn't it ludicrous? You never expected me to be a successful man. No one thought it in the least degree possible that I should be a success. No one! no one! no one! See! that's my carriage! Those are my horses! Is it not absurd? Do, my dear fellow, say it is absurd that I should drive about London in my own carriage!"

Having thus, in complete innocence, entertained a London crowd by his antics, he stepped into the wonderful carriage and drove away beaming.

Editor—Got a cut of old Adam Forepaugh?"

Foreman—Yes; we got an old circus cut of him; but there's a tiger on one side and an elephant on the other. I can saw 'em off."

Editor—No; don't do that. Just take a chisel and cut "G. O. P." on the elephant, and "Democracy" on the tiger, sling in a caption, "Chauncey Stirs Up the Animals!" That'll show the people of this town that we're right up to date with metropolitan journalism.—Puck.

Forty Winks for Insomnia.

"I have a new remedy for insomnia," said the nervous member, as he entered the club-rooms this morning. "If it is good tell us about it." "It is very simple. Just go to bed and take the most comfortable position for sleeping. Then slowly open and close your eyes. If after forty winks you are not asleep then try forty more. The great difficulty with victims of insomnia is that they almost always fall to thinking of the events of the day. This may be prevented by persistent counting, but that is itself a mental effort and wakes one up. Not so, however, with winking. I defy any of you to think of anything else while you are engaged in this simple exercise."—Utica Observer.

The Era of Muscle.

This is an athletic age. Everybody wants to be strong. The craze—for it has well nigh reached that stage—affects both sexes and even childhood. The pugilistic phase of this fad in young America is by no means morally promising. But it is one thing to be endowed with vigor and another to be Sandowed with muscle. Super muscularity is often induced by physical efforts perilous to health and calculated to shorten life. The vigor which means a regular and efficient discharge of the physical functions is the first medium at which all may safely aim without causing ruptures or breaking blood vessels. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is largely conducive to a gain in vigor of this sort, since it stimulates and assists digestion, promotes regular bilious secretion, and keeps the bowels in order. Sleep, that grand recuperator of nervous vigor, is encouraged by it, and it remedies malarial, rheumatic and kidney trouble.

How to Roast Meats.

In roasting meats the best cooks tell us that there are many things to be taken into consideration which hasten or retard the process, such as the age of the meat, the condition of the fire, etc. But, aside from allowing fifteen or twenty minutes for every pound of meat, we may be assured when the joint begins to smoke the roast is about done. The old rule for roasting is "white meats well done, dark meats undone." To rapidly coagulate the albumen (to keep the juices), pour over the roast a cupful of boiling water just at the moment it is placed in the oven, or have the oven very brisk for the first ten or fifteen minutes.

Not a Bad Idea.

Necessity certainly has mothered this latest invention of an English woman for getting a living. Labouchere's Truth copies this advertisement from a London paper, where we can hope it sounded attractive enough to inspire the disappointed hostesses of tedious dinner parties to hire a competent and conscientious guest, who feels that something more than glory and admiration is involved in the good work of making the party a success.

"A lady, of good appearance and great conversational powers, moving in the best artistic and social circles, will be glad to give her assistance at parties. Address, X. Y. Z.," etc.

The Sickle of the Sphinx.

The oldest piece of wrought iron in existence is believed to be a roughly-fashioned sickle blade found by Belzoni in Karnac, near Thebes. It was imbedded in the mortar under the base of the Sphinx, and on that account is known as the "sickle of the Sphinx." It is now in the British Museum, and is believed to be nearly 4,000 years old.

Somebody's Good.

To make our own troubles the means of helping the troubles of others is a noble effort for good. A well illustrated instance of this kindly sympathy is shown in a letter from Mr. Enoch L. Hanscom, School Agent, Marshfield, Me., an old Union Soldier. He says: "It may do somebody some good to state, I am a man of 60 and when 40 had a bad knee and rheumatism set in. I was lame three years and very bad most of the time. I got St. Jacob's Oil and put it on three times and it made a cure. I am now in good health."

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS., Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

If the following letters had been written by your best known and most esteemed neighbors they could be no more worthy of your confidence than they now are, coming, as they do, from well known, intelligent, and trustworthy citizens, who, in their several neighborhoods, enjoy the fullest confidence and respect of all who know them. The subject of the above portrait is a well known and much respected lady, Mrs. John G. Foster, residing at No. 33 Chapin Street, Canandaigua, N. Y. She writes to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Chief Consulting Physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute at Buffalo, N. Y., as follows: "I was troubled with eczema, or salt-rheum, seven years. I doctored with a number of our home physicians and received no benefit whatever. I also took treatment from physicians in Rochester, New York, Philadelphia, Jersey City, Binghamton, and received no benefit from them. In fact I have paid out hundreds of dollars to the doctors without benefit. My brother came to visit us from the West and he told me to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. He had taken it and it had cured him. I have taken ten bottles of the 'Discovery,' and am entirely cured, and if there should be any one wishing any information I would gladly correspond with them, if they enclose return stamped envelope."

Not less remarkable is the following from Mr. J. A. Buxton, a prominent merchant of Jackson, N. C., who says: "I had been troubled with skin disease all my life. As I grew older the disease seemed to be taking a stronger hold upon me. I tried many advertised remedies with no benefit, until I was led to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When I began taking it my health was very poor; in fact, several persons have since told me that they thought I had the consumption. I weighed only about 125 pounds. The eruption on my skin was accompanied by severe itching. It was first confined to my face, but afterwards spread over the neck and head, and the itching became simply unbearable. This was my condition when I began taking the 'Discovery.' When I would rub the parts affected a kind of branny scale would fall off.

For a while I saw no change or benefit from taking the 'Discovery,' but I persisted in its use, keeping my bowels open by taking Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, and taking as much outdoor exercise as was possible, until I began to gain in flesh, and gradually the disease released its hold. I took during the year somewhere from fifteen to eighteen bottles of the 'Discovery.' It has now been four years since I first used it, and though not using scarcely any since the first year, my health continues good. My average weight being 155 to 160 pounds, instead of 125, as it was when I began the use of the 'Discovery.' Many persons have reminded me of my improved appearance. Some say I look younger than I did six years ago when I was married. I am now forty-eight years old, and stronger, and enjoy better health than I have ever done before in my life."

Yours truly,

J. A. Buxton

Thousands bear testimony, in equally strong terms, to the efficacy of this wonderful remedy in curing the most obstinate diseases. It rouses every organ into healthy action, purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood, and, through it, cleanses and renews the whole system. All blood, skin, and scalp diseases, from a common blotch, or eruption, to the worst scrofula are cured by it. For tetter, salt-rheum, eczema, erysipelas, boils, carbuncles, goitre, or thick neck, and enlarged glands and swellings, it is an unequaled remedy. Virulent, contagious, blood-poison is robbed of its terrors by the "Discovery" and by its persevering use the most tainted system renovated and built up anew.

For Lame Back.

The most painful cases of rheumatism may be relieved by a few applications of Chamberlain's Pain Balm; its continued use will cure any case, no matter of how long standing. It is equally beneficial for lame back, pain in the side, pain in the chest, lameness, and in all painful affections requiring an external remedy. A piece of flannel saturated with Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain is superior to any plaster. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Highly Recommended.

While Mr. T. J. Richey, of Altona, Mo., was traveling in Kansas he was taken violently ill with cholera morbus. He called at a drug store to get some medicine and the druggist recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy so highly he concluded to try it. The result was immediate relief, and a few doses cured him completely. It is made for bowel complaint and nothing else. It never fails. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Well Supply Store.

The veteran well driver, W. S. Purdy, has, in partnership with Ed. Metcalf opened a store of well supplies and fixtures, in the room next south of H. J. Mossey's bakery, on Main St. They will keep a good stock of well supplies, fixtures and repairs and ask all who need anything in this line to give them a call. Both are experienced men in this work and are sure to suit all.

Republican State Platform.

It is a funny document, for it is full of absurdities. It is absurd when it speaks against the "democratic gerrymander," for the democratic way of districting the state was not half as bad as the way it was done several times by the republicans. We have often called on republican editors to disprove this assertion, and not one has ever attempted it.

They have a plank that favors legislation that will secure the safety of employes. But every law for this purpose ever passed in Indiana, was put on the statute books by democratic legislatures, and against the opposition of republican members. Talk is the one great and heap commodity of republicans.

They rail against our state debt, as usual. But if they would look at the records they would find that the last republican state government, on going into office found a state debt of $6,770,608 34. And when it went out it left a state debt of $8,830,615.12. It had increased under four years of their able management, about two millions, or at the rate of half a million a year. Democrats have had the state less than a year and a half and have paid off three-quarters of a million, and would have paid over a million if he railroads had paid over their taxes as required by a democratic law.

They ask for "non-partisan management of state charitable institutions." If they were not ignorant they would know that the charitable institutions of the state are already managed by a non-partisan State Board of Charities. Republicans delight to palm themselves off as reformers on a false basis.

The most amusing thing is the plank that declares that the party is the friend of silver, when every vote taken in congress, and every speech they have made for twenty years gives the assertion the lie.

They also ask for higher protection, notwithstanding the fact that our products have steadily gone down in price as the tariff rates were put higher. And we now have the highest rate of protective duty we ever had and "unemployed" men are marching through the land.

Another funny thing is they "demand a rigid enforcement of our immigration laws" to exclude bad foreigners, when everyone knows these foreigners came here during republican administrations, though these same laws were on the statute books. The first time these laws have been even poorly enforced, is now, and this bad lot of foreigners is being shut out, as reports of the past year will show.

Then they shed a few bitter tears over the fact that Cleveland got in in time to prevent Harrison from giving the Sandwich queen a pension of $20,000 a year, and $150,000 to her heir, and 3¼ millions to the few men who are running her government just now.

As To That Bridge.

The Dispatch is never so happy as when it is very unhappy. Hence it never loses a chance to grumble and complain. It and the Waterloo Press are quite a pair of twins when it comes to complaining. Both are telling the people that the new bridge at Waterloo was not needed. What are we to infer from their talk? If the commissioners build a bridge that is not needed and that no one wants, it must be because the commissioners are fond of building bridges. Will either of these papers claim that the commissioners build bridges merely because they enjoy building them? But this is the only reason for building them, if we are to believe these two papers. True, the bridge has its iron abutments, broken, and they have been gradually spreading for several years. If they had broken down when some team was passing, the county would have been obliged to pay damages. But what of that? These two editors would have had another enjoyment grumbling over that expense. Last fall, finding the bridge not safe, the commissioners ordered it closed up. At once there went up a complaint all over that section. The people objected to going over the bridge at Uniontown and the commissioners paid $25 to have some supports made to enable people to cross the bridge till spring. But if the people did not want the bridge, why do not these editors do what the COURIER has several times asked them to do, carry around a remonstrance and get the people northwest of Waterloo to sign it? That would settle the matter. But they do not dare to do it. To show more completely how false they know their statements to be, Commissioner Lockwood offered to take Mr. Campbell of the Dispatch up to Waterloo, free of charge, and let him look at the bridge for himself and see whether a new one was needed or not. But Mr. Campbell positively declined. The honest thing for a newspaper to say is, that we are sorry our county is compelled to build such a great number of bridges. But so it is. The new abutments at the Waterloo bridge, though built of stone to last for a hundred years or more, will cost less than did the iron ones put in a few years ago that are now broken. But cheap or dear, these parties are not complaining of the right party. They may not know that it was God who created DeKalb county, and made the land very rich and ran over every part of its surface numerous living streams. And having these streams, we have no choice except to bridge them, ford them, jump them or get over them on a log or a pole or a rope bridge. Which of these ways would suit these critics best? The COURIER is not afraid to say a bridge is the most desirable.

PAYING THE CITY DEBT.

The Town Fathers Show a Reduction of Nearly $1,300 00 for the Past Year.

We publish in this issue the report of the treasurer to the town board at their last regular meeting, so as to see how it compares with the showing made at the last annual report. The report dated April 3 of last year, showed a total debt for the town of $10,861.94, while this year the report shows a total debt of $9,596.69, a decrease in the debt for the past year of $1,265 25. Or, placed in a more convenient form, and separating the two items of the debt, it would stand,

Municipal orders, April 3, '93,	$ 8 130 03
Road orders, April 3, '93,	2 731 91
Total debt, April 3, '93,	$10 861 94
Municipal orders, April 5, '94,	$ 7 559 28
Road orders, April 5, '93,	2 037 41
Total debt, April 5, '94,	$ 9 596 69

COMPARED.

Total debt, April 3, 1893,	$10 861 94
Total debt, April 5, 1894,	9 596 69
Decrease during the year,	$ 1 265 25

Besides this, our school board has paid nearly $4,000 on the new school house during the past year.

A payment of this size on our debt in one year is a pretty good showing, and we are glad to call attention to it. It is especially gratifying just at this time, when we remember that during the year just past, we have put out a good deal of needed expense in graveling several of our streets, especially South Main and West Seventh. On the last named part alone we have expended something more than $130 over and above the ordinary amount of road work. And the two streets just named have never been in such good shape since the town was built. We call attention to this good showing, for we believe that credit should be given for good work done. It should be added right here that every man on the democratic ticket has pledged himself to keep the debt going down grade during the coming year, if he is elected. No one who cares for the success of our city management can afford to take any chances by going back on the men we have on our ticket.

In order to make this statement even plainer and fuller, we submit the following figures furnished by Treasurer Jones, which are absolutely correct, and show the real debt of the incorporated town of Auburn for the past five years:

TOTAL INDEBTEDNESS OF THE TOWN OF AUBURN, IND., ON THE FOLLOWING DATES:

	Municipal and Road Orders outstanding.
April 7, 1890,	"	$ 8,600.94
" 6, 1891,	"	10,599.80
" 4, 1892,	"	11,967.56
" 3, 1893,	"	10,861.94
" 5, 1894,	"	9,596.69

The Dispatch's "Business Ticket."

The Dispatch last week has the usual articles lauding to the skies the members of the republican tickets and belittling at the same time, the equally good men on the democratic ticket. We are tired of this abuse of our citizens, and propose to tell a few simple truths about the republican candidates and let them see how they like this kind of a campaign. The COURIER knows these candidates themselves will bear witness that we have always avoided personalities, and have even in the face of abuse of our candidates by the Dispatch, gone right on and treated the republican candidates with a respect that sometimes was not deserved, and as it would appear, was often not appreciated. We have tried to be decent in politics. But we have found the same old abuse goes on. Why should we stand this in silence? Why should democrats be asked to vote for candidates of a party that has no good word for democrats, and nothing but abuse for the democratic candidates? Two of the men on the republican ticket have held county office, Mr. Hague having been auditor four years, and Mr. Bishop clerk for four years. Mr. Hague has also been township trustee, justice of the peace, and has run for a number of minor offices. Can any good reason be given why these men should be kept in office all their lives? Is it not about time someone else had a chance? What reason have we for believing that either would be a better officer for the town than Dr. Fitch or Doc. Baird, neither of whom has worn out a path on our election records by having his name on about every poll book for years? And if there is any money in the office, neither Hague nor Bishop need it. Mr. Hague is a well to-do business man, running a profitable shoe trade. Mr. Bishop is part owner of the largest store in town and a large stockholder in the electric light company. If he is elected a member of the town board this electric light contract will come up during his term of office, and he will have a chance to renew this very nice contract with himself. We suppose he was put on the ticket for that very purpose. We are not opposing the electric lights, but how can we get a more liberal contract out of them, if their president is on the town council with several of his political friends. It stands everyone in hand to come out to the polls, and if he wants to see this condition of things brought about he can get it by voting the republican ticket. As to Mr. Ober, we wish to quote exactly what the Dispatch says, so there may be no mistake. It says:

"D. S. Ober, our candidate for trustee in the first ward, has proved himself capable of making a good officer by his MANAGEMENT OF HIS PERSONAL AFFAIRS. He is a man who will not let his political belief stand in the way of his judgment. With him our citizens will get the benefit of BUSINESS MANAGEMENT of affairs, which is so badly needed."

The Dispatch has evidently let its enthusiasm warp its judgment, or else it does not know Mr. Ober's "business ability," or if it knows it is concealing the truth to deceive the people and get votes. What are the facts as to Mr. Ober's "business ability, etc.?" Twice within five years Mr. Ober has "filed a schedule" to save paying debts. Both are on file in the county clerk's office. The first schedule is dated the 4th day of November, 1889, and was given as a defense against paying a judgment of $314 rendered against him on a claim for support of his mother, Anna Ober. The total value of property shown in the schedule, including some small notes, suit of clothes, boots, shoes, overcoat, corn, hay and a town lot, as appraised by Wm. McIntyre and S. Rogers, is $162.07. There was also an undivided ⅔ of 37 acres of land, but it was encumbered to its full appraised value, as sworn to by the above appraisers before G. A. Bishop, then clerk, the 23d day of November, 1889. Mr. Bishop is on the ticket with Mr. Ober now, and will know whether this statement is correct.

The schedule is made to Phil. Plum as sheriff, and sworn to before G. A. Bishop Nov. 22, 1889, and signed by Mr. Ober. The second "schedule" was made last year. Sept 12, 1693, signed by Mr. Ober, and sworn to by him before C. E. Emanuel, Notary Public. It is given as a defense against paying the same judgment as in the other case, except that the last one includes some interest and costs, making a total of $386,69. This second schedule was filed with G. C. Ralston as sheriff, by R. Blum, deputy, when said sheriff went to levy on property to satisfy the execution issued on the judgment. Personally we have no feeling against Mr. Ober, though we lost a small amount between him and Charley Beugnot when they made their other failure a few years ago. But as we said at the start, we have borne these personal attacks on better men, till we will bear it no longer. We have given fair warning, that if this kind of campaign must be had, we propose to give as good as sent. We hope every voter of Auburn will stop and study the two sets of candidates and see which one is likely to give the town, the best "business administration." And especially, let them judge which is the best "business man" Mr. Brandon or Mr. Ober, judged by the history of each. After noting thus briefly, the Beugnot & Ober failure, the schedule of '89, and the schedule '93, we ask the voters to read again the Dispatch's opening words; "With a town ticket in the field, representing as it does successful management in private affairs, etc."

Last Day of School.

Thursday, April 26, school closed at No. 6, Union township, known as the Pyle school house, where a general good time was had. The parents and friends from that and adjoining districts surprised the teacher with an old fashioned picnic dinner. Each one came with his basket loaded, and after all partook of the good things spread before them and spent a short time in social conversation, order was called and we listened to declamations and songs by the little folks, with several speeches from older heads. The teacher, Henry Krabill, wishes to tender his thanks for this mark of respect shown him and also for the kindness of parents and pupils during the term. Those neither absent nor tardy during the long term of eight months were Birda Hornberger, Pearl Hornberger and Isaac Cosper, for which each received a fine book. Miss Ida Walsworth also received a book for having the greatest number of head marks. He sends out one graduate, Miss Birda Hornberger. The teacher, Mr. Krabill, has won the good opinion of both parents and pupils in the district and is deservedly popular everywhere. As one of the patrons of the school said to the COURIER reporter, "You cannot speak too highly of Mr. Krabill."

It cures blood and skin disorders. It does this quickly and permanently. Is there any good reasons why you should not use DeWitt's Sarsaparilla? It recommends itself.

Shot With an Air Gun.

Rieksville News.

Orley Lybarger, the 14-year-old son of Mrs. Hugh Nelson, accidentally shot his mother with an air gun last Friday night. He had been fooling with the gun and thought he had withdrawn the load, but it's always the gun that is not loaded that kills. Picking it up he requested his mother to hold up her hand for a target, assuring her it was not loaded. She repeatedly told him to put the dangerous thing away, but boy-like he grabbed her hand and pulled the trigger, sending a bullet into his mother's right hand between the index and second fingers. Dr. Combs was called, but could not find the bullet, which probably lodged deep in the joint. Mrs. Nelson is suffering extreme pain and is rendered helpless.

This should indeed be a lesson to boys and especially to parents who tolerate such a dangerous and treacherous plaything as an air gun.

It is needless to say that when Mr. Nelson returned home the gun passed out of existence, and he is of the opinion that every parent should institute a similar revolution as regards air guns.

Nothing in This World

Is so cheap as a newspaper, whether it be measured by the cost of its production or by its value to the consumer. We are talking about an American, metropolitan, daily paper of the first class like THE CHICAGO RECORD. It's so cheap and so good you can't afford in this day of progress to be without it. There are other papers possibly as good, but none better, and none just like it. It prints all the real news of the world—the news you care for—every day, and prints it in the shortest possible space. You can read THE CHICAGO RECORD and do a day's work too. It is an independent paper and gives all political news free from the taint of party bias. In a word—it's a complete, condensed, clean, honest family newspaper, and it has the largest morning circulation in Chicago or the west—125,000 to 140,000 a day.

Prof. J. T. Hatfield of the Northwestern University says: "THE CHICAGO RECORD comes as near being the ideal daily journal as we are for some time likely to find on these mortal shores."

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

GEN. RANDALL'S BARRACKS

A Day With the Coxey Army of Chicago.

Sunday, April 29, Coxey's "Department of Chicago" reached its highwater mark, as far as numbers and interest were concerned. Its roll showed that day a little over 1,200 men, "rank and file." The "barracks" on Rawson street that day contained the greater part of these, and also, many visitors. The COURIER reporter was in the city that day, mingling with its million and a half of citizens, and made a journey in to the north division to see "Gen. Randall's division" of the Coxey army of the "Commonweal of Christ," as they call themselves. The "barracks" are on Rawson street which runs east and west, and the whole plan can be seen in the diagram at the head of this article. The "barracks" is a two story brick building lately used as a cooper shop. It faces south on Rawson street, and our cut shows the ground plan. Above in the second story there are no offices and the the entire three rooms are all open from one to the other, so that one can go all around the building, except along the north. Approaching the barracks from the west one sees a lot of loungers with a few policemen in front of a plain, and rather dingy brick two-story building. From the top of the front wall hangs a big white flag, and near each end a smaller American flag sets off the building and gives the whole an unusual though somewhat military air. The newspaper man passes through the crowd of sight-seers, and on passes the "commissary," shown in the map, and up to "headquarters." The crowd outside is mainly working people in their Sunday clothes, and though evidently poor, they are neat and well behaved. They are "workmen" who would not willingly join a Coxey crusade. They are all talking about the "wealers" and with the "wealers," and everyone has a different opinion of the matter. There is no time to hear all they say, though it is very interesting. Coming to the "headquarters" we find a slouchy individual "on guard," who informs us we can't get in just yet, as "the adjutant is busy, but will be at liberty soon." So we wait and look around. Soon a man of about forty comes up and explains further, and we ask if he is connected with the "Commonweal." He answers with quite a show of pride. "Oh, yes. I am officer of the day." The very article we are looking for, and he says he hopes we will not misrepresent them. Our reply that "the COURIER never misrepresents," seems to have a soothing effect on him, and he soon had calls elsewhere. After a time the sentry at headquarters motioned us to draw near, and we drew. He said we could now enter, which we did. See map. In this little room, which had evidently been the office of the factory, were three men of the most ordinary appearance. The youngest was headquarters clerk. The adjutant directed our name, business, etc., to be entered by the clerk, and said something about "a great many visitors make a little contribution." We took the hint, for an appeal from the downtrodden is never made in vain to a member of the COURIER force. The adjutant smiled blandly at the unusual sight and sound of a coin, and told an underling to "pass this gentleman into the gate." The gate was a few feet to the east, and resembled a double doored gate for teams, at a fair ground. In front of this door stood another sentry, his loose fitting garments chock full of the importance of his office. In his hand he held a big club-like cane, evidently cut somewhere in the country, and with this he gave three distinct whacks on the big door. As the door opened to this signal the guide went away, and the sentry outside said hurriedly to another standing on the inside, "this gentleman has a pass." We forgave him for this lie, for the man inside just then stepped aside, as we stepped in—and there we were! It was a strange sight that met the eye, as we faced an open area of ground over which and around which straggled in all possible shapes, as motley a crowd as ever Fallstaff swore he would not "march through Coventry" with. A brief description of these will answer for all the 800 or 900 we found here and in the buildings above and below. They were mostly young men, in general, plainly, sometimes poorly, dressed, though all had been washed up recently. Their poorly washed clothes were hung on the "side wall" of boards shown in our map, as well as in all unoccupied places on both floors. But many of the men were tramps, and some of the older, had been such for years, as was very plain from their ways and their talk. Some lounged about the sides of the enclosure, some sat inside on barrels or work benches, or lounged about the big fire places of which there were several on each floor. These were the big open hearths where barrels are "burned" in a cooper shop. In these fire places were several old milk cans placed on three bricks, and with a fire made of picked up boards, etc., a sort of dinner was cooking, in charge of several men who evidently felt the importance of the duty assigned them. Down in the open court where we first entered, a squad was drilling. The drill sergeant was a young fellow, who had evidently been in the militia a few days, for he could jerk out a command very nearly in the orthodox way. And every few minutes a great big "lieutenant" would run up to him and order to him to do it in another way. There seemed to be a clash of authority with these two men. One was probably following Hardee's tactics, and the other Coxey's, or "Gen." Randall's. But it gave the poor fellows in the ranks a much needed rest, for the sun beat down in the little court, and made it hot work for them. In one of these little rests one of the men remarked to his next file; "This is too d — d much like work." To this his comrade agreed. The men, however, seemed very much in earnest, and "two'd" and "foured," and wheeled and backed up and down, and ran over one another in lively shape.

Ligonier Banner:—Ten years ago Henry D. Wilson left the democratic party on account of its position on the temperance question. Last Thursday he was nominated for judge in a republican convention at Shipshewana where it is said that it took nearly three hundred kegs of beer and a relative amount of other drinks to satisfy the burning thirst of his partisans. It would seem that judge Wilson had jumped from the frying pan into the fire, but there is a balm in Gilead in the shape of a good fat office and Mr. Wilson's temperance theory is safe.

Republican State Convention.

The republican state convention at Indianapolis last week, nominated. Ex-congressman, W. D. Owen for secretary of state, beating Aron Jones of South Bend. W. A. Ketcham of Indianapolis, for attorney-general; A. C. Daily, of Lebanon for auditor of state, beating Wilson of Ft. Wayne, while Liggett, of Columbia City, got only 16 votes. F. J. Scholtz, of Vanderburg, got the nomination for treasurer. Then came the struggle for the clerk of the supreme court, for which O. P. Ensley was a candidate.

The first ballot was close, the vote being distributed among so many candidates. The result was as follows:

Brown	23
McClelland	13
Tichenor	25
Tuthill	23
Ensley	26
Hess	278
Black	11
Harvey	7

SECOND FOR CLERK.

The second ballot for clerk of the supreme court was taken without any unusual occurrence. There was much delay occasioned by the the senseless idea of delegates that they must yell louder han other delegates when a favorite candidate received a large vote. Henricks county deserted its candidate on this ballot and went for Brown and Ensley. The vote was as follows:

Brown	226
McClelland	42
Tichenor	258
Tuthill	272
Ensley	297
Hess	372
Black	243
Harvey	2

THIRD BALLOT.

The third ballot resulted as follows;

Brown	283
McClelland	4
Tichenor	278
Tuthill	270
Ensley	192
Hess	450
Black	233

FOURTH BALLOT.

The convention was in a state of turmoil after the announcement of the third ballot and electioneering was in order on all sides. There was a long wait after the result had been announced—a wait in which it was hoped some of the weaker candidate would withdraw and throw their strength where it would do some good, but the hope was never realized, even the candidate who received but four votes hanging on to a forlorn hope. The resulted as follows:

Brown	349
Tichenor	254
Tuthill	292
Ensley	173
Hess	549
Black	98

FIFTH BALLOT.

Just before the call of the roll on the fifth ballot began the names of Ensley and Tichenor were withdrawn. While this ballot was in progress the confusion became so great that the chairman called the attention of the convention to the fact that it had been in continuous session for thirteen hours (it being then 11 o'clock), and that unless better order was preserved daylight would find it still plodding along. The ballot resulted as follows:

Brown	637
Hess	784
Tuthill	257
Black	37

SIXTH FOR CLERK.

Before the sixth ballot was called the chairman secured comparative quiet for a short time by calling the attention of delegates to the fact that it was past 11 o'clock and unless the work of the convention should not be obstructed by the unnecessary confusion occasioned by the promenading of delegates in the aisles and the vocal demonstrations of enthusiasts the convention would be in session until daylight. The fifth ballot showed that Mr. Tuthill held the balance of power, and the tenacity of his friends in sticking to him might have caused the balloting to continue for an indefinite period. That gentleman, however, asked permission after a few counties had been called for the sixth ballot, to have his name withdrawn. The permission was granted by the unanimous vote of the convention. This left the fight between Brown and Hess, and it was evident the fight would be a bitter one, the friends of both men being loath to give an inch of ground to the opponent. Madison county gave Brown 36 and Marion county gave him 99, while Hess received from the latter county 31 votes. The total vote was as follows.

Hess	873½
Brown	832½

This nominated Hess and the usual motion to make unanimous, made by Mr. Brown, was carried. Capt. Alex Hess was therefore declared the unanimous choice of the convention for the office of clerk of the supreme court.

It is since claimed that sleepy clerks made a miscount of 100 against Ensley, and that if counted correctly he would have led on the first ballot and probably been nominated.

Hess is from Wabash. One reason Ensley ran down at the third ballot was that Allen county came about the first on the list, being letter A, and as it was getting late in the night, when Allen was called, a great many of her delegates had gone out, presumably to "see a man" and those remaining, gave Ensley but 7 votes, when he should have had 37. This dropping off stampeded the other counties, and helped to defeat him.

D. M. Geeting, of Madison county, was nominated for superintendent of public instruction. F. J. Thompson of Shelby county, was chosen for statistician. For state geologist, W. S. Blatchley of Terre Haute, was chosen. If elected he can go in and finish up all the incomplete drunks left incomplete by our own darling Gorby.

The attendance was large, and there was the usual amount of foaming speeches that characterize a republican convention. This caused the meeting to last away into the night, and they did not close till about 4 in the morning. The regular chairman was Uncle Dick Thompson, the "old Mariener of the Wabash." Ex-president Harrison was present and made a speech. The usual cut and dried resolutions were passed. The one favoring "home markets only" for the sale of American products, must have appealed strongly to the intelligence (?) of the people. Farmers of DeKalb county who are waiting to sell 100,000 bushels of surplus wheat to be eaten by the people within DeKalb county, can study over this plank.

HICKS' MAY FORECASTS.

The month opens at the end of April's closing storm period, with storm disturbances disappearing in extreme eastern parts of the country, and cooler weather prevailing in central and western sections. An equinox of Mercury is central on the 3d, and will cause cloudiness and tendency to continued drizzle. In the extreme north sleet n[illegible]t prove a surprise. By the 4th [illegible]d change to warmer will develop in the west, and during the 5th to 7th, reactionary storms will pass over the country, being central about the time of new moon on the 5th. A sharp change to cooler will follow the disturbances at this time, with strong probabilies of frost along the northern side of the country from about 7th to 10th.

From 10th to 14th is the next regula period of change and storm. A very warm wave is apt to appear by the 11th, in western regions, and during the three days next following storms of much energy and wide scope will traverse the country from west to east. Another very cool wave for the season will come in behind the storms, causing several days of much cooler weather in the country generally. Heavy rains may reasonably be expected during the last named disturbances—namely, about the 11th, 12th and 13th, during which time a series of daily storms, recurring near the same time of day, or night, for several days, need not be unlooked for. Watch barometers, temperature and direction of wind; if barometer fails to rise after one storm passes, with wind still in east and south, expect another storm from the west, and so on until conditions change.

The cool weather following the storms of the last period will give place to warmer, and secondary storms will appear in many places about the 17th and 18th, immediately after which, the barometer will rise rapidly to a very high reading, attended by a sharp change to cooler.

From 21st to 25th, falls the next storm period, during which time it will grow very warm, and many storms of rain, thunder and wind will appear. In all these disturbances, the intelligent use of the barometer, and correct observation of wind currents, will foreshadow with much certainty the coming and the intensity of storms. About the 27th and and 28th, will be central the last disturbances for May, bringing fair and cooler days and nights for the closing month.

In the nature of things, May must bring more or less violence, in a meteorological way, but there is a marked absence of disturbing causes, so far as other planets are concerned. There are reasons to believe that storms will not be unusually frequent and heavy; but it will be the part of prudence to watch them all, and be prepared to take refuge from all that may carry in their cloudy folds the desolators of towns and hearts and homes.

Queen Victoria's Birthday.

Alexandrina Victoria, when but a girl of eighteen, became, through the death of her uncle, King William IV, the royal head of the only empire that encircles the earth, writes Arthur Warren in the May Ladies' Home Journal. On the twenty-fourth day of this month will be celebrated the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Queen's birth.

For fifty-seven years Victoria has now reigned as queen. It may be truly said of this long reign that it has been marked from the beginning with strong womanly qualities that made have Victoria the most beloved queen of England. Her very first act as Queen was womanly. Immediately upon her accession she indited a letter of condolence to the bereaved widow of King William. This letter she addressed to "Her Majesty, the Queen." Some privileged person, fearing that the young monarch, unused to her new dignity, had overlooked the peculiar etiquette of her position, ventured to explain that the form of address was incorrect; that she, Victoria, was the only one entitled to be known as "Her Majesty, the Queen," Adelaide being only the Queen Dowager. Victoria replied: "Yes, but I shall not be the first to remind her of that fact."

BUTLER.

M. F. Campbell is about to take a course in short hand at Fort Wayne.

The prospects for cherries, pears, peaches and small fruits seem very good in this vicinity. Apple trees make a poor show.

But a single week intervenes, before our corporation election. Both parties have good men selected for the offices, so that there is not much probability of strife.

Charles L Sine, formerly of Butler, now of Ashley, had a quite serious fire last week in the building he occupies, and lost a large part of their effects. Insured.

J. A. Campbell adjusted the Maurer loss in Jackson township last week $619,-33 to the full satisfaction of Mr. Maurer. The "Hartford," always makes friends of its worthy unfortunates.

The much talked of canning factory at this place has finally materialized. The company has been formed, plenty of stock subscribed and officers chosen, and many contracts already let for the raising of vegetables. Butler still has a little life left and big hopes.

Mr Cozens and wife have been visiting their daughter, Mrs. Romain Campbell Mr. C. has returned to his home in Toledo, but Mrs. Cozens is prolonging her visit with her parents and sisters in Steuben county. Her daughter Sadie came last Saturday.

The saddest event of the week was the accidental and unfortunate death of William H. Bard, a former well known business man of Butler and later a trusted and faithful employe of the new Wabash. Mr. Bard had been promoted to conductor some time ago, and last Thursday morning he attempted to pass from the caboose to the engine as he neared Chicago while the train was in rapid motion, and from some cause unknown fell between the cars and was instantly killed and badly mutilated. At the time of his death he lived in Del Rey, Mich., near Detroit. His funeral took place from the M. E church at Bryan, O, last Sunday, and was attended by a large number of Knights of Pythias and Oddfellows, of both of which orders he was a member. A special Lake Shore train carried the two lodges from Butler, The funeral was also largely attended by citizens of Bryan, near which place he grew up. Mr. Bard was just in the vigor of early manhood, had not quite reached his 30th year, and was highly respected by all who knew him. He leaves a wife and three small children.

WATERLOO.

Miss Ella Phillips, is at home for a brief visit, and to call on her frends.

The L. M. C. will meet at the home of Mrs. S. C. S. Winslow Tuesday evening May 8.

Jasper Waterman, has just purchased a very fine hearse He intends evidently his undertaking outfit shall be as good as the best.

Mr. Baker has taken possession of Mrs. Bigler's building, where they are busy getting settled, and making ready for customers. Mr. B. is from Auburn, and will keep a restaurant.

One of the church bells tolled May 31, to announce the death of the child of Mr. and Mr James Blanchard, who live at present in Butler. The sorrowing mother is a daughter of Leander Goodwin, of this place.

Monday of this week, a colored gentleman appeared upon our streets, attracting the gaze of all, on account of his unusual height, which he claims is eight feet and three inches. He is from the south and is accompained by a white man.

Tuesday or this week, R. J. Fisk was riding behind one of his fast horses, his man driving, when the animal got the bit between its teeth and started to run, when in trying to turn against something, the buggy upset, and now Mr. Fisk walks with two canes.

One of Alvin Hand's horses was taken very suddenly sick Thursday morning and although worked over constantly through the day and night also, it died at ten o'clock Friday forenoon. Mr. Hand is a poor man, and as his living came largely from daily labor with his team, this is a severe loss to him.

"The melancholy days have come, the saddest of the year" and it is not November either, but the period when the farmers are hard at work, their wives and families also; in town every body cleaning house, and making garden, and business men sit most of the days out side their doors watching for a chance customer, whittling meanwhile, purchance whistling, or exchanging words of simpathy with each other.

Wild Runaways.

Uncle Andrew Smith, from south of town, had a wild runaway Saturday afternoon. For some reason his team wanted some fun, and started to go at a rapid gait along Seventh street. He thought he could cool them down at first, but they were going wild as they passed this office, striking a buggy near the Farmers Bank, and colliding with another team a little west, when the wagon seat was thrown out. He managed to turn them down South Jackson, and a hundred people watched the line of dust as far as they could see the team. It turned out that after crossing the Wabash tracks he managed to turn them into the grounds in front of the Auburn Foundry and Machine Works, and halted them at the big building, with team and driver safe and sound, though badly shaken up and excited. For a man of Mr. Smith's age, he showed a wonderful coolness and muscle. And that saved him and the team.

D. T. Smith's team ran away Tuesday noon in town, and came near killing his boy, Marion. The lad was left in charge of the team, and seeing the lines drop down between the horses, got out onto the wagon tongue to pick them up, In doing this, he slipped and to keep from falling, threw his arm out and it hit one of the horses, and the horse jumped and being colts, both started up Main street on a run. The boy tried to get on one of the horses, so as to be safe from falling between them, but could only get one leg over, and the backband of the harness then slipped, and he fell to the ground, the wagon going harmlessly over him. But he had got caught in the lines, and could not get free, but was dragged along on the ground and the spectators looked to see him torn in pieces. At Hebel's corners, the wagon struck the old natural gas lamp post, an iron one, and broke it into three pieces. They stopped in front of old Mrs. Hebel's, and the lad was picked up and carried into Dr. Hines' office, where his wounds were dressed. He had a bad scalp would, but Dr. Hines hopes it will not be serious.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly For May, 1894.

In the May number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly appears, under the characteristic heading "On the Spot," the first of a series of personal reminiscences of an artist at the front, in the Secession War of 1861-'65. These reminiscences, written and illustrated by Mr. Joseph Becker, the famous original "special for Leslie's," touch upon the contrasted humors and tragedies of war from the point of view of the soldier in the ranks; and being copiously illustrated with fac-similes of Documents, sketches made on the field under fire, etc., present aspects of the great struggle in a new and peculiarly vivid light. Mr. Cecil Charles, the well-known Latin-American newspaper correspondent, contributes to this number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly a timely Brazilian paper, on "The Revolt of the Fleet." Another feature is Dr. Sherwood-Dunn's comprehensive article on "Medical Education in France," superbly illustrated with views of the Paris Ecole de Medecine, the great hospitals, clinics and experiments of Charcot at the Salpetriere, Luys at La Charite, Sainte-Claire Deville at Sorbonne, and Claude Bernard at the College of France; and portrait of Messrs. Pasteur, Patraire, Guyon, Pean, Brouardel, Pozzi, Pinard, Fournier and Francois-Frank. Other illustrated articles are: "The Romance of O'Tama Chiovara," by Alice Howard Cady; "Cloisters and Corners," by Grace Ellery Channing; "A Day in Upsala," by Charles Edwardes; "Birds of Fact and Fable," by Nellie Hart Woodworth; and "Sugar-beet Culture in Southern California," by Frederick M. Turner.

Taking Children to Church.

Children of two and a half years old have gone to church and behaved with a propriety that might have shamed some of their irreverent elders, writes Elizabeth Robinson Scovil in an article on "Children's Church Going" in the May Ladies' Home Journal. To others of this age it would be simply impossible to keep still for more than five minutes at a time, and their fidgeting would certainly disturb everyone in their immediate neighborhood and cause their friends much needless disquietude.

When the service is bright and hearty, varied by frequent change of position and interspersed with music, which usually delights children, there is less fear of its overtaxing their small powers of endurance. When the great desert of the sermon, as it must seem to their unappreciative minds, arrives it is well to withdraw them if they show signs of fatigue. If this cannot be done conveniently they may at least be allowed to go to sleep with their heads in the safe shelter of mother's lap or leaning against father's arm.

Queer Old Laws.

Wm. E. Curtis, the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Record, has this in one of his recent letters:

The jury system of the District of Columbia is peculiar and has been unchanged since the time of Lord Baltimore and Queen Elizabeth. We are governed here by the old colonial laws of Maryland, under which the court can even now punish a woman for gossiping or telling tales to her neighbors or failing to keep her house neat and clean. The district attorney might prosecute even Mrs. Cleveland for scolding her husband or wearing an untidy dress. The law prohibits planters from feeding their workmen terrapin and canvas-back duck and requires that housekeepers shall give their servants wholesome food. People can be fined so many pounds of tobacco for swearing on the streets or for not attending church. At the time those laws were made all men were honest and upright and the fashion of jury-fixing was unknown.

Obituary.

Nathaniel Beaber was born in Union township, Union county, Pennsylvania, June 14, 1820. On Dec. 9, 1845 he was married to Elizabeth Walter, who still survives him. They came to Indiana in 1857. To this unnion were born fifteen children, of whom eleven are still living, and also one aged sister. He was a member of the Evangelical church and was a faithful attendant at church until 14 years ago when he was stricken with a disease from which he never recovered Although he suffered as few are called on to suffer, yet he bore it all with christian patience, and only a few days before the end came he said "I am not afraid to die, my place is ready over there," and as quietly, as a babe falls asleep in its mother's arms, so he fell asleep April 27. 1894, aged 73 years, 10 months and 13 days.

The funeral services were at Cedar Chapel, Sunday, April 29, and the remains laid to rest in the cemetery near by.

A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but she received no benefit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 106 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Nervine has brought her.

When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. R. Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

GEN. RANDALL'S BARRACKS

A Day With the Coxey Army of Chicago.

Sunday, April 29, Coxey's "Department of Chicago" reached its highwater mark, as far as numbers and interest were concerned. Its roll showed that day a little over 1,200 men, "rank and file." The "barracks" on Rawson street that day contained the greater part of these, and also, many visitors. The COURIER reporter was in the city that day, mingling with its million and a half of citizens, and made a journey in to the north division to see "Gen. Randall's division" of the Coxey army of the "Commonweal of Christ," as they call themselves. The "barracks" are on Rawson street which runs east and west, and the whole plan can be seen in the diagram at the head of this article The "barracks" is a two story brick building lately used as a cooper shop. It faces south on Rawson street, and our cut shows the ground plan. Above in the second story there are no offices and the the entire three rooms are all open from one to the other, so that one can go all around the building, except along the north. Approaching the barracks from the west one sees a lot of loungers with a few policemen in front of a plain, and rather dingy brick two-story building. From the top of the front wall hangs a big white flag, and near each end a smaller American flag sets off the building and gives the whole an unusual though somewhat military air. The newspaper man passes through the crowd of sight-seers, and on pass the "commissary," shown in the map, and up to "headquarters." The crowd outside is mainly working people in their Sunday clothes, and though evidently poor, they are neat and well behaved. They are "workmen" who would not willingly join a Coxey crusade. They are all talking about the "wealers" and with the "wealers," and everyone has a different opinion of the matter. There is no time to hear all they say, though it is very interesting. Coming to the "headquarters" we find a slouchy individual "on guard," who informs us we can't get in just yet, as "the adjutant is busy, but will be at liberty soon" So we wait and look around. Soon a man of about forty comes up and explains further, and we ask if he is connected with the "Commonweal." He answers with quite a show of pride. "Oh, yes. I am officer of the day." The very article we are looking for, and he says he hopes we will not misrepresent them Our reply that "the COURIER never misrepresents," seems to have a soothing effect on him, and he soon had calls elsewhere. After a time the sentry at headquarters motioned us to draw near, and we drew. He said we could now enter, which we did. See map. In this little room, which had evidently been the office of the factory, were three men of the most ordinary appearance The youngest was headquarters clerk. The adjutant directed our name, business, etc., to be entered by the clerk, and said something about "a great many visitors make a little contribution." We took the hint, for an appeal from the downtrodden is never made in vain to a member of the COURIER force. The adjutant smiled blandly at the unusual sight and sound of a coin, and told an underling to "pass this gentleman into the gate." The gate was a few feet to the east, and resembled a double doored gate for teams, at a fair ground. In front of this door stood another sentry, his loose fitting garments chock full of the importance of his office. In his hand he held a big club-like cane, evidently cut somewhere in the country, and with this he gave three distinct whacks on the big door. As the door opened to this signal the guide went away, and the sentry outside said hurriedly to another standing on the inside, "this gentleman has a pass." We forgave him for this lie, for the man inside just then stepped aside, as we stepped in—and there we were! It was a strange sight that met the eye, as we faced an open area of ground over which and around which straggled in all possible shapes, as motley a crowd as ever Fallstaff swore he would not "march through Coventry" with, A brief description of these will answer for all the 800 or 900 we found here and in the buildings above and below. They were mostly young men, in general, plainly, sometimes poorly, dressed, though all had been washed up recently. Their poorly washed clothes were hung on the "side wall" of boards shown in our map, as well as in all unoccupied places on both floors. But many of the men were tramps, and some of the older, had been such for years, as was very plain from their ways and their talk Some lounged about the sides of the enclosure, some sat inside on barrels or work benches, or lounged about the big fire places of which there were several on each floor. These were the big open hearths where barrels are "burned" in a cooper shop. In these fire places were several old milk cans placed on three bricks, and with a fire made of picked up boards, etc., a sort of dinner was cooking, in charge of several men who evidently felt the importance of the duty assigned them. Down in the open court where we first entered, a squad was drilling. The drill sergeant was a young fellow, who had evidently been in the militia a few days, for he could jerk out a command very nearly in the orthodox way. And every few minutes a great big "lieutenant" would run up to him and order to him to do it in another way. There seemed to be a clash of authority with these two men. One was probably following Hardee's tactics, and the other Coxey's, or "Gen." Randall's But it gave the poor fellows in the ranks a much needed rest, for the sun beat down in the little court, and made it hot work for them. In one of these little rests one of the men remarked to his next file; "This is too d — d much like work." To this his comrade agreed. The men, however, seemed very much in earnest, and "two'd" and "foured," and wheeled and backed up and down, and ran over one another in lively shape.

Ligonier Banner:—Ten years ago Henry D. Wilson left the democratic party on account of its position on the temperance question. Last Thursday he was nominated for judge in a republican convention at Shipshewana where it is said that it took nearly three hundred kegs of beer and a relative amount of other drinks to satisfy the burning thirst of his partisans. It would seem that judge Wilson had jumped from the frying pan into the fire, but there is a balm in Gilead in the shape of a good fat office and Mr. Wilson's temperance theory is safe.

CIRCLING THE GLOBE.

CONCISE HISTORY OF SEVEN DAYS' DOINGS.

Sharp Scheme of the West to Get Rid of Their Tramps—Workmen Fatally Burned by Sewer Gas Explosions—Cleveland Militiamen—A Town Destroyed by Fire.

SLICK SCHEME.

How the West Disposes of Undesirable Citizens.

Fergus Falls (Minn.) special: A Coxey organizer here with a wing of the "army," in an interview, said that $5,000 were raised in Butte to help take the army which he was organizing from the West to the East. He says other cities on the coast are raising large sums to send unemployed workmen East. They care nothing about the effect of the movement upon legislation. While the organizer was here a wealthy man gave him a list of 104 undesirable citizens and offered him $10 per head for as many as he would take East, the money payable when he reached Pittsburgh, so that the men will not drift back all at once. The West, it is asserted, has been getting the dead beats and undesirable citizens of the East and is now shipping them back by the freight train load.

Cleveland Militiamen.

Col. C. L. Kennan of the Fifth regiment, O. N. G., has been notified that three members of Company B. have been discharged by their employers for responding to Mayor Blee's call for militia to suppress the riots at Cleveland. The discharged men are E. L. Bruck of the Morreau Gas Fixture Company; W. Byron, employed at Rumsey's bath rooms, and the third man's name is missing. Mayor Blee has taken the matter up and will force a settlement with the employers. The Ohio law imposes a penalty of six months imprisonment and $1,000 fine for just such attempts to prevent a soldier from responding to a call, and it is altogether probable that the indiscretion of the employers will result uncomfortably for them.

In the Wrong Channel.

Department Commander Watrous, of the Wisconsin G. A. R., has given out a statement to the effect that funds which have annually been sent to Virginia to be used in decorating the graves of Union soldiers burried on and near Southern battlefields, have not all been used for the purpose intended. The matter is one that will interest Grand Army men all over the country and will cause quite a stir. Commander Watrous intimates that a large portion of the money received by the Richmond Post has been used to build a Memorial Hall in the city of Richmond.

Breckinridge Denounces Ministers.

Fifteen hundred people listened to the speech of Col. W. C. P. Breckinridge and Hon. Evan Settle in presenting their claims for a Congressional nomination at Paris, Ky. The speech of Col. Breckinridge was about the same as the one delivered at Lexington, Saturday, except that he was more severe on the preachers who are opposing him and denounced the Courier-Journal and the press generally for their attacks on him.

Mr. Settle's remarks were eloquent and he made several cuts at Col. Breckinridge.

Griffo Whips Murphy.

The Griffo-Murphy fight at Boston was won by Griffo in the eighth round. At the end of the eighth round Griffo was awarded the decision, amid scenes of wild disorder and confusion. It was a Murphy crowd throughout the contest. When the decision was announced by the referee, Murphy, who was just as fresh as when he entered the ring, threw up both hands and made an attempt to speak to the audience, claiming the decision was unfair. He was hustled off the stage.

Cut Engineers' Wages.

Mobile & Ohio locomotive engineers have accepted a cut of 8 per cent. in wages. They agree that this 8 per cent. reduction shall go into effect May 12, and remain in force until December, then wages will be restored for the following months. If at the end of these four months business does not justify full wages, the 8 per cent. cut will be made again. Committees representing the three divisions of the road were present and signed the agreement.

A German Town Destroyed.

Berlin special: The little village of Gatow, near Spandau, was entirely destroyed by fire. The fire department of Spandau and a number of engines of the Berlin fire brigade were sent to the scene, but too late to be of any service. The Emperor, at the head of the Spandau engines, was early on the ground, and worked hard to save the burning buildings.

Sewer Gas Explosion.

By an explosion of sewer gas at the corner of Findley and John streets, Cincinnati, Charles Peck and Louis Work were fatally burned. They were at work in the sewer at the time. Wm. Peck, a brother of Charles, was also badly burned about the face.

William E. Edwards Ill.

Berlin special: The United States Consul General, William Hayden Edwards, is seriously ill with influenza.

Forest Fire Raging.

West Superior (Mich.) special: A big forest fire is raging two miles this side of Fon du Lac, on the St. Louis River, and is making rapid progress before a strong wind.

Three Men Drowned.

Four young men of Nicolet, Quebec, took a skiff and went down the river for a sail. While returning the boat upset and all but one were drowned.

Royalists of Hawaii Hope to Capture the Government.

A special from Honolulu, via Port Townsend, per U. S. S. Adams, says: News of the appointment of Admiral Walker to succeed Admiral Irwin and the announcement of the intention of the United States to take possession of Pearl Harbor and establish a coaling and naval station, which was received here April 10, followed by the arrival of Admiral Walker two days later, have set the populace talking and many conjectures are being made as to the result of the Admiral's appointment and instructions. The royalist papers declare that the Admiral comes for the purpose of taking possession of Pearl harbor, and that as soon as it is accomplished he will proceed to organize a new Government. They even go so far as to say that Admiral Walker will restore the ex-Queen to the throne.

RIOT AT CLEVELAND.

A Mob Out on a Mission of Destruction.

Cleveland (Ohio) special: A mob numbering 6,000 or 7,000 men again assembled in the public square Thursday morning and marched out on a mission of destruction. On Scranton Avenue every window was broken at the Variety Iron Works and the entire force of men working ran out. At the Upson Nut and Bolt Works windows were broken, machinery smashed and the men driven away. Twenty-five men were driven from the church furniture works. At this point the police charged the mob and drove it up the hill on Jennings avenue. Police were hurried to the scene from all available sources. All the reserve force of the police, including the mounted men, were ordered out. Many arrests were made.

The mob, after moving up Jennings avenue, reformed and were again and again recharged by the police. The rioters had meantime raided a scrap iron yard and armed themselves with pieces of iron. They were in a frenzy of excitement and were constantly urged on by their leaders to resist the officers.

At this juncture a large reinforcement of police arrived upon the scene and another charge was made on the mob with drawn clubs. The crowd showed fight only for a moment and then their ranks were broken and scattered in all directions. The police, meantime, had used their clubs to such effect that many of the rioters were laid low. Patrol wagons were loaded with prisoners and hastily sent to the nearest station. Many of the men threw stones and other missiles at the blue coats from the vantage ground of Abbey street bridge. They were forced away, however, and ran like sheep, making occasional stands to resist the power of the law.

While a part of the mob were fighting the police another mob at Faulkabers made an unsuccessful attempt to hold up a mail train on the Nickel Plate road as it was passing that point. The train slackened speed in order to not run down any of the fellows, but sped on its way unharmed.

In the afternoon Mayor Blee announced that no more rioting would be permmitted, and issued a proclamation commanding the people not to assemble on the streets. At the same time he called upon the Cleveland Grays, Gatling gun battery, and resident companies of the Ohio National Guard to assemble in their armories and await his call. There was a ready response to the call and 500 men are under arms awaiting any emergency.

ENCOURAGEMENT

Found by R. G. Dun & Co. in the Heavy Purchases of Wool.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: The point of encouragement is the heavy buying of wool, amounting to 6,492,000 pounds for the week at the three chief markets, against 4,661,000 pounds last year, and April sales of 21,858,958 pounds against 16,988,950 last year. As these sales have for years been in steady relation to the entire consumption of wool, it is fair to infer that in spite of the stoppage of some important works, and in spite of uncertainties as to labor and legislation, the consumption will continue large for some weeks at least. The enormous unsold stock of wheat, which made lower average prices in February, March, and April than were ever known in any previous months, depressed May wheat to the lowest on record, although Western receipts were only 1,080,736 bushels against 2,488,050 last year, and Atlantic exports 1,143,285, against 1,518,910 last year. Corn yielded one-quarter, exports falling suddenly below, while Western receipts nearly doubled last year, and pork products were lower. Cotton speculators who have seen larger receipts from plantations in April than a year ago, have lost faith and grip with favoring accounts of the acreage planted and the price declined an eighth. The most encouraging sign is the marked decrease of liabilities, $1,448,144 for the last week of April, and for the four weeks $8,722,708. Amount of liabilities south $2,919,419 against $3,111,032 in the Eastern and $2,692,257 in the Western states. Failures 233, against 216 last year, and thirty-five in Canada against twenty-seven last year.

ADMIRAL DA GAMA.

He Bitterly Denounces Cleveland and Rear Admiral Benham.

A New York Herald correspondent telegraphs from Montevideo, Uruguay, via Galveston, as follows: Admiral Da Gama, whose recent surrender of the revolutionary fleet in the harbor of Rio Janeiro, Brazil, put an end to hostilities in that vicinity, was in a cheerful frame of mind, notwithstanding his wounds, when I saw him recently, and he talked freely of the final events which worked his overthrow.

The wounds in his neck and thigh have healed, but his right arm remain in a serious condition. The Admiral is obliged to carry it in a sling, and splinters from the shattered bone are working out through the flesh. He suffers much from this injury, although it is believed his complete recovery is assured.

He is far from despondent, and is surrounded by his officers and cadets, who live as though they were in barracks.

Admiral Da Gama bitterly denounces President Cleveland and Rear Admiral Benham for their interference in Brazilian affairs while the opposing forces were confronting each other in Rio Janeiro Harbor, and it is to the action taken by them that he attributes President Peixoto's triumph at that point. He declares that had it not been for the effect produced by the attitude of the United States the revolutionists would not have yielded to the national forces.

Senator Stockbridge's Successor.

Lansing, (Mich.) special: Governor Rich announced the appointment of John Patton, Jr., as United States Senator Stockbridge, deceased, until a successor is elected by the Legislature next January. Mr. Patton is considered one of the brainiest lawyers and orators in Grand Rapids. He is a college-bred man, personally popular, and has done much for Republicanism. He is a native of Pennsylvania, 44 years of age and a lawyer by profession. He is an eloquent and forceful speaker, and in all State and National campaigns is in much demand as a campaign orator. His speeches are characterized by breadth of view, purity of diction and comprehensive knowledge of the subject.

A Serious Crisis.

A special from Buenos Ayres says: A ministerial and financial crisis has come upon this country and its disastrous effects promise to be most serious. Business is paralyzed throughout the Republic, and so great is the uncertainty in financial affairs that a panic is imminent. Nobody knows where to look for relief and there is the greatest alarm in all quarters at a condition of things which, it is believed by many, must surely precipitate a revolution.

Riotous Coke Strikers.

Connellsville (Pa.) special: The coke strikers made an assault on the Fort Hill plant and forced the workmen to flee for their lives. In the melee, a number of the men were badly beaten. The plant is now closed down. The capture of the Morewood dynamiters and the attack on Fort Hill has caused the greatest excitement and the feeling of unrest is more pronounced than at any time since the last strike began. Mobs are marching through the country and raids are feared at several points. The women made an attack on the Davidson works, but left disgusted when they found but one man at work.

Flee in Nightgowns.

The famous Jumbo saloon and variety theater, on Washington avenue, Mineapolis, Minn., was discovered to be on fire, and in a short time the old shell was burned to the ground. On one side of the building was the Warwick Hotel and on the other the North Star lodging house, where a large number of girls employed at the Jumbo lodged. They narrowly escaped being caught in the flames, and nearly all came out in their night apparel, some being carried down ladders by the firemen. The total loss will be about $15,000. The fire originated in the rear of the stage from an unknown cause.

A Buried Treasure.

A special from the City of Mexico says the supposed discovery of the long sought and historic Spanish treasure is a matter over which excitement prevails. For a long time tradition has existed that on the Salapa ranch in the State of Mexico, some $5,000,000 had been buried. The other day, while a clerk of the ranch was riding horseback across a portion of the property, he discovered a hole in which was a square stone with the inscription: "Below this stone are deposited $5,000,000." Guards are now watching the spot until the question of who is to dig for the supposed treasure is decided.

A Coal Famine.

St. Louis special: Coal supplies here which seemed ample to last through a long strike, have begun to diminish to an extent that occasions large consumers some uneasiness. The large companies are now only supplying contract customers. Even the railways are feeling the shortage and it is said that forty cars disappeared from the east side tracks the other night, presumably having been seized by the railroads. It is considered probable that if the general strike is not soon settled every mine in St. Louis territory will be closed within ten days.

Bloody Conflict.

San Diego (Cal.) special: News has just been received here that at least 200 of the 500 Mexican troops that were sent to quell the uprising of the Yaqui Indians in Lower California, either have been killed or wounded in ambush. The Yaquis stationed themselves above the troops, marching through the canyon, and destroyed them with bullets and rocks, rolled down from the cliffs. A surgeon and escort who were sent to attend the wounded were captured by the Yaquis and tortured.

Another Set of Coxeyites.

Labor union leaders of Cincinnati, are trying to get rates for box cars to carry three to seven thousand unemployed to Washington, May 15. While they propose to co-operate with Coxey, they will go there to urge the passage of the Davis bill to make good the fifty millions lost on national currency since the war, and for a large appropriation for irrigating western bad land, enlisting men for one year to build the necessary canals, and then turn the lands so improved over to these men.

Inter Ocean is Sold.

H. H. Kohlsaat no longer owns any part of the Chicago Inter Ocean. His entire holdings of the stock of the company have been transferred to William Penn Nixon. The transfer was made in the editor's name, and he stands for the men who put up the hard cash to buy Mr. Kohlsaat out. The price was $400,000, and capitalists friendly to Ex-President Harrison are behind the purchase.

Disastrous Blaze.

The Union School Building burned at Ypsilanti, Mich. The puplis jumped from the windows, piling over each other in their fright. Oliver Collins spine was permanently injured and several children were hurt. Loss upward of $35,000; insurance $34,000.

Base Ball Circles Troubled.

Mark Baldwin, pitcher, has sued Von der Ahe of St. Louis, for $10,000 damages for false arrest and imprisonment in St. Louis in 1893 for conspiracy.

Perished in the Flames.

Mrs. Marmory McIntyre, aged 70 years, was burned to death in the Glen House, at Rochester, N. J., which was destroyed.

UNCLE SAM VIEWS THE CONVERGING INDUSTRIAL ARMIES.

COXEY IN THE CAPITAL

HE AND BROWNE PLACED UNDER ARREST.

Washington Police Prevent the Invasion of the Federal Capitol Grounds—Attempt to Hold a Meeting on the Steps—Given a Drowsy Reception.

Police Charge the Army.

Gen. Coxey and his commonweal army arrived in the national capital Tuesday. The day—the proudest in the history of Gen. Coxey—was perfect in its appointments. Fair weather and a large and good-natured crowd lined Pennsylvania avenue, from the

GEN. J. S. COXEY.

Treasury Department to the Capitol grounds. Around the Peace monument at the base of the Capitol grounds the spectators formed a bank of humanity. But not a flag fluttered in the breeze, nor was there a token of welcome held out to the weary army of the commonweal, as it trudged along, except the banner at the local Coxey headquarters.

The Commonweal army was astir early upon Brightwood heights with preparations for the great procession to the capital. There was an early breakfast of eggs, coffee and bread. Tents were struck and packed into wagons and the whole army was in line before 9 o'clock. All the men carried staves, on which fluttered white flags with the motto: "Peace on Earth, Good Will Toward Men, but Death to Interest on Bonds."

There was much marching and countermarching on the grounds, prancing of steeds and hauling of the commissary wagons into line. The men had passed a cold night, most of them sleeping on the ground. Before the start Carl Browne formed the men into a hollow square and put them through a most remarkable drill. The staves were handled like guns, and when Browne shouted "gloria and peace" they cheered three times shrilly and waved their sticks in the air. These evolutions were performed by the main body of the army.

After traversing four miles the army, headed by a mounted band of those imbeciles in blue coats and pewter buttons, to whom sarcastic fate has given it to guard life, property and public peace in Washington, debouched into Pennsylvania avenue, a magnificent, smoothly-paved, 80-foot wide thoroughfare. Down this Appian way of the republic every elected President since John Adams has passed on his journey to the Capitol to take the oath of office.

The avenue was crowded as on inauguration. The whole city had turned out to see these strange visitors, these men who had come on foot to ask legislation they conceive would remedy conditions. Following the grim-looking officers was the commonweal band of musicians. Then came Bandmaster Thayer, "Oklahoma Sam" and Private Secretary Kirk, who were mounted on the best of horses. Back of these three men was a young woman. She was the daughter of Commander Coxey. Mounted upon a horse as white as the blossoms of the chestnut trees in the neighboring yards, the maiden led her father's column for six miles between two walls of men and women. She was cheered repeatedly. Chief Marshal Carl Browne followed just behind this white-robed angel of peace. Then came Commander Coxey, Mrs. Coxey and little Legal Tender, the Commonwealer's youngest child. The six communes of the Commonweal came behind the commander's vehicle. Now and then a cheer burst from the tremendous crowd as the procession passed.

Arriving at the Capitol grounds the column turned south along the front and then east again on B street, skirting the Capitol grounds. All along B street the line of the grounds is marked and the symmetry maintained by a stone retaining wall some two feet high. Bordering the wall and fairly overhanging it is a wide, crosslike strip of bushes, thick as a hedge. Beyond this dense brush fringe are the open Capitol grounds, with their wide grass plots and walks. A rank of mounted police was drawn up across New Jersey avenue and along the line of B street. They were there to keep the commonweal parade from entering the ground at that point. But Browne and Coxey were bound to enter. Browne got off his horse and went up to Coxey's carriage and conferred with that gentleman. The line had come to a halt. It had fairly climbed the hill and the right of the column had New Jersey avenue, which cuts B street and runs north and south about the center of the Capitol grounds. Coxey left his carriage, and both men scaled the low stone wall and disappeared in the foliage of the inclosure.

Charge of the Mounted Police.

As Coxey and Browne ducked into the brush the crowd outside howled its approval. In an instant those valuable aids to society, the mounted police—sixteen in number—came tearing down the B street sidewalk. Men, women and children were knocked right and left before the valorous charge of these sixteen mounted ruffians, whose sole admitted aim was to intercept and apprehend two trespassers on the Capitol grounds. That was the crime, mind you. And the malefactors numbered two. And sixteen crazy policemen, as criminally crazy and as crazily criminal as any who ever in the vice of police making found themselves endowed with club and 6-shooter and horse and a mission to ride down innocent women and children, came charging along a crowded sidewalk for 100 yards to make these arrests. On they came, full tilt, yelling, swearing, cursing, clubs whirling and flying, people knocked right and left, women screaming with their children, men cursing. It took only a few seconds, yet by this time Coxey and Browne had worked through the bushes and were pushing along in among the cheering people on the grounds. The sixteen tremendous idiots with horses and clubs and silver badges, too late for Coxey and scenting still further openings for their valorship to win crimson glory and undying fame, squared their horses at the laurels and lilacs, and jumped them over the two-foot wall and into the slim thicket through which Browne and Coxey had disappeared. There was a crashing, tearing moment as man and horse beat the astounded bushes, and then like ambushed tigers, these police creatures burst on the thick-crowded grounds.

COXEY'S ARMY ON THE MARCH.

NIGHT IN A COMMONWEAL CAMP.

As these sixteen protectors of public interest burst through the bushes they yelled like demons, and their clubs cracked heads right and left. There was not a law-breaker in this crowd. It was a scene of peace—a gala scene. There were children romping on the grass, women in white dresses; the most deadly weapon was a parasol. Yet fifty men, women and children were clubbed and trampled on in that one indiscriminate moment of police crime. One big negro was clubbed until the blood streamed down his chest. Marshal Browne was being dragged by the neck and shoulders from the grounds. His head was uncovered, his shirt in rags and his face almost colorless in rage. During all this excitement a slender man wearing glasses and pale as death in a chalk mine was elbowing his way to the steps of the Capitol. He nervously fumbled a scroll of manuscript in the side pocket of his coat and daintily lifted his hat to the crowd as it cheered him. This slender man climbed ten of the marble steps, when he stopped, cleared his throat and placed his hat beneath his arm. The stranger was Jacob Sechly Coxey. Captain Garden, of the Capitol police, stepped to one side of him and Lieutenant Kelly, of the city police, was at his other arm. The other officers formed solidly about him, and he was almost carried from the steps of the Capitol.

At the foot of the steps the great crowd greeted Coxey and the officers with a storm of shouts. Again the mounted officers charged. The crowd surged, and women and children fell in the stampede. As Commander Coxey left the white steps he tossed his typewritten protest, which he had endeavored to read, to the newspaper men who were following him.

The police escorted Coxey to his carriage, where he stood looking fiercely over the crowd for a moment, and then bowing right and left amid cheers from his followers he led the way and was followed to camp by the industrials.

A Washington dispatch says the dash made by the twin reformers this afternoon has made them a great many friends. No one really believed that an attempt to speak would be ventured. Coxey is as hopeful as usual to-night. He says he expects to make another trial before long. In his protest, which he attempted to read from the Capitol steps, he said:

The Constitution of the United States guarantees to all citizens the right to peacefully assemble and petition for redress of grievances, and, furthermore, declares that the right of free speech shall not be abridged. We stand here to-day to test these guaranties of our Constitution. We chose this place of assemblage because it is the property of the people, and if it be true that the right of the people to peacefully assemble upon their own premises and with their petitions has been abridged by the passage of laws in direct violation of the Constitution, we are here to draw the eyes of the nation to this shameful fact.

Gen. Coxey said to a reporter at the camp: "This is the beginning of the movement: that is all. The people are with us—the common people. Look at the thousands who cheered our cause. We will remain right here. Other bands of unemployed will join us. Congress will see the will of the people and will pass our bills."

Coxey Under Arrest.

Wednesday morning Gen. Coxey was arrested, charged with unlawfully entering the United States Capitol grounds and there injuring certain plants and shrubs. The commonweal leader was held in $500 bail and locked up in a cell along with his lieutenants, Carl Browne and Christopher Columbus Jones. Judge Miller, who held Coxey for trial, refused to accept $500 cash bail for his appearance, and it was not until noon that Frank Hume, a wholesale liquor-dealer, secured the commonwealer's release by furnishing real estate security for his appearance when wanted.

FARMERS PREPARING FOR WAR.

Kansas Secretary of State Says They Are Arming for the Conflict.

Secretary of State Osborn, of Kansas, said relative to the arrest of Coxey and Browne:

I want to make this prediction: There will be no overt act until the next election, then simultaneous with the returns the flames will shoot up into the air from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and every palatial residence will be destroyed in the uprising of the people. Woe unto them then who have sought to stay this tide for the last six months. The farmers are preparing for this; they are selling a horse or cow and buying Winchesters, and many mechanics are doing the same.

Des Moines, Iowa—The Grand Opera House held two large assemblies today. Kelley, Speed, and Baker addressed each one, and almost $500 was taken in at the door. Half of that money goes to the army.

Portland, Ore.—The industrial army is camped near the Northern Pacific Mill. The men and a number of sympathizers paraded the principal streets. There were about 1,000 men in line and 100 women.

Omaha, Neb.—Efforts are being made to organize an army in Omaha. A mass-meeting was held for that purpose. About 300 men agreed to march to Washington.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Gen. Aubrey, with twenty-nine commonwealers, deserted Gen. Frye and started to Washington on foot. Frye still has nearly 300 men under his command.

Lincoln, Neb.—The superintendent of the Burlington offered employment to all members of Col. Duff's industrials. Sixteen accepted the offer and were given transportation to Montana. They will work on an extension of the road and will be paid $1.40 per day.

DOING CAMP DUTY.

A SNEAK-THIEF at Elmwood, Ind., stole a box containing $1,000 that was to be used in paying the employes of the Kelly axe works.

BISHOP JOYCE has announced that the annual session of the Northwest Indiana Conference of the M. E. Church will convene at Lafayette Sept. 5. Bishop Mallalieu will preside.

THE blacksmith shop, paint shop, and wagon shop of Carl & Danielson and shoe shop of William Zufall at Stockwell, were burned by an incendiary. Loss, $2,000; insurance, $1,200.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN SMITH'S 16-months-old baby fell from the second-story-window of the family residence, at Lafayette, striking its head on a rain barrel, fracturing the skull and causing death two hours later.

JOHN SLATE and Frank Stoner were crushed to death and William Spinn fatally injured while making repairs at the bottom of an elevator shaft of the Hotel Hays, at Warsaw. The elevator cage broke loose and fell on them.

AT the home of Mrs. Frank Sheets, near Brownstown, Miss Nora Jarvis, aged 20, took a large dose of carbolic acid. She is a sister of Thornton Jarvis, who is now confined to the county jail, awaiting trial on the charge of the murder of Peter Boling at that place a few months ago. Since her brother's arrest she has grieved much and it is thought that it worked on her mind to such an extent that it became unbalanced. She is not expected to recover.

RANDOLPH COUNTY was visited by one of the hardest storms the other night that has been seen for several years. Farmers report a great amount of fruit trees blown down, some being pulled out by the roots. Several buildings were completely demolished. During the storm hail as large as marbles fell. Several parties from Farmland attending the theater at Winchester were caught in the storm and their carriage blown from a bridge, but all escaped with slight bruises.

BURGLARS forced an entrance to the Postoffice at Orleans, blew open the safe, secured $153.93 in money, 3,000 one-cent stamps, twenty-six fours, twenty tens, fifty-three fifteens, thirty-seven special delivery stamps, and $11.26 worth of newspaper and periodical stamps, together with sixty blank money orders numbered from 25,445 to 25,500 inclusive and postal notes 5,242 5,400 inclusive. They also took the dater, so they could fill out the money orders. The safe was wrecked, and the concussion caused by the explosion broke the large plate glass in front. It is presumed that "home talent" did the work, as the large safe of the Bank of Orleans at the next door was untouched.

THE first oil found in Delaware County has developed in Liberty Township, seven miles east of Muncie, near Selma. The other day ex-County Auditor William Murray was in Muncie with a bottle filled with the petroleum which came from a gas well near his home. The oil is of a very good grade, and except in color, resembles coal oil. The well from which it flowed was drilled for natural gas, and a big flow was struck. Since last February it has been dripping small quantities of oil, daily increasing in quantity, until it now flows about thirty barrels a day. The find has caused considerable excitement among the few who know it. There is no question in the minds of those on the inside but that a big oil field underlies the bed of gas, and a test well will be put down to the bottom. The well is located on the southeastern edge of the Indiana gas field.

PATENTS have been awarded to residents of Indiana as follows: George A. Gemmer, Williamsport, hay rake; Micajah C. Henley, Richmond, boiler tube cleaner; Frank E. Herdman, Indianapolis, electric motor; Frank E. Herdman, Indianapolis, electric elevator; Frank E. Herdman, Indianapolis, elevator; Frank E. Herdman, Indianapolis, regulator for electric motors; Frank E. Herdman, Indianapolis, controlling device for electric motors; Frank E. Herdman, Indianapolis, electric motor controlling apparatus; Frank E. Herdman, Winnetka, Ill., elevator controlling device; Luke Housee, Montpellier, roasting and calcining kiln; George S. Ingle, Evansville, Ind., portable elevating and bag machine; Harvey A. Moore, assignor of one-half to S. D. Pray, Indianapolis, burglar alarm; Joseph Sego and C. Faucher, Valparaiso, bridge gate; Albert E. Whitney, Muncie, burial apparatus.

BURGLARS made a raid on the town of New London the other night, securing several hundred dollars worth of booty. Seven residences were burglarized, when the citizens gathered and drove the burglars from the village. The marauders were supposed to be gypsies.

AT Muncie, Charles Willis attempted to throw a half pound dynamite stick in Buck Creek to kill fish. The explosion occurred too soon and his left hand and arm was torn in fragments above the wrist. Dr. Bunch amputated the arm. The man is believed to be fatally injured.

RECENTLY Charles Summer, who resides near Winchester, and is almost eighty-eight years old, drove to town in a hand-made, single buggy nearly fifty years old. He was driving a horse which he very appropriately styles his "war colt," and which was foaled on his farm in 1861.

WHILE returning from Loogootee, and while driving through a farm gate entering his premises, Thomas Murphy, a prominent farmer of Davies County, was thrown from his buggy. His neck was broken by the fall. Life was extinct when the body was found a few minutes after the accident occurred. Deceased was about 70 years old.

UNITED AT LAST

BY

CHAPTER VI—Continued.

At Marchbrook everything went pleasantly enough for the plighted lovers. Lord Clanyarde had filled the house with company, and his youngest daughter had very little time for reflection or regret upon the subject of her approaching marriage. Everybody congratulated her upon her conquest, and praised Gilbert Sinclair with such a show of enthusiasm that she began to think he must be worthier of a warmer regard than she was yet able to feel for him. She told herself that in common gratitude she was bound to return his affection, and she tried her utmost to please him by a ready submission to all his wishes; but the long drives and rides, in which they were always side by side, were very wearisome to her, nor could his gayest talk of the future, the houses, the yacht, the carriages and horses that were to be hers, inspire her with any expectation of happiness.

They rode over to Davenant with Lord Clanyarde one morning, and explored the old house, Gilbert looking at everything in a business-like spirit, which jarred a little upon Constance, remembering that luckless exile who had loved the place so well. Her lover consulted her about the disposition of the rooms, the colors of new draperies, and the style of the furniture.

"We'll get rid of the gloomy old tapestries and have everything modern and bright," he said; but Lord Clanyarde pleaded hard for the preservation of the tapestry on the principal floor, which was very fine and in excellent condition.

"Oh, very well," answered Gilbert, carelessly. "In that case we'll keep the tapestry. I suppose the best plan will be to get some first-class London man to furnish the house. Those fellows always have good taste. But of course he must defer to you in all matters, Constance."

"You are very good," she returned, listlessly. "But I don't think there will be any necessity for my interference."

"Don't say that, Constance. That looks as if you were not interested in the subject," Gilbert said, with rather a discontented air.

The listlessness of manner which his betrothed so often displayed was by no means pleasing to him. There was a disagreeable suspicion growing in his mind that Miss Clanyarde's heart had not quite gone with her acceptance of his offer, that family influence had something to do with her consent to become his wife. He was not the less resolved on this account to hold her to her promise; but his selfish, tyrannical nature resented her coldness, and he was determined that the balance should be adjusted between them in the future.

"Perhaps you don't like this place, Constance," he said, presently, after watching her thoughtful face for some minutes in silence.

"Oh, yes, Gilbert, I am very fond of Davenant. I have known it all my life, you know."

"Then I wish you would look a little more cheerful about my intended purchase. I thought it would please you to have a country-house so near your own family."

"And it does please her very much, I am sure, Sinclair," said Lord Clanyarde, with a stealthy frown at his daughter. "She can't fail to appreciate the kindness and delicacy of your choice."

"Papa is quite right, Gilbert," added Constance. "I should be very ungrateful if I were not pleased with your kindness."

After this she tried her utmost to sustain an appearance of interest in the discussion of furniture and decorations; but every now and then she found her mind wandering away to the banished owner of those rooms, and she wished that Gilbert Sinclair had chosen any other habitation upon this earth for her future home.

October came, and with it the inevitable day which was to witness one more perjury from the lips of a bride. The wedding took place at the little village church near Marchbrook, and was altogether a very brilliant affair, attended by all the relatives of the Clanyarde family, who were numerous, and by a great many acquaintances of bride and bridegroom. Notable among the friends of the latter was James Wyatt, the solicitor who had been employed in the drawing up of the marriage settlement, which was a most liberal one, and highly satisfactory to Viscount Clanyarde. Mr. Wyatt made himself excessively agreeable at the breakfast, and was amazingly popular among the bridesmaids. He did not long avail himself of the Marchbrook hospitalities, but went quietly back to town by rail almost immediately after the departure of the newly married couple on their honeymoon trip to the south of France. He had an engagement in Half-Moon street that evening at eight o'clock.

The neighboring clocks were striking the hour as he knocked at the door. Mrs. Walsingham was quite alone in the drawing-room, and looked unusually pale in the light of the lamps. The solicitor shook his head reproachfully as he pressed her hand.

"This is very sad," he murmured, in a semi-paternal manner. "You have been worrying yourself all day long, I know. You are as pale as a ghost."

"I am a little tired, that is all."

"You have been out to-day? You told me you should not stir from the house."

"I changed my mind at the last moment. Anything was better than staying at home keeping the day like a black fast. Besides, I wanted to see how Gilbert and his bride would look at the altar."

"You have been down to Kent?"

"Yes; I was behind the curtains of the organ-loft. The business was easily managed by means of a sovereign to the clerk. I wore my plainest dress and a thick veil, so there was very little risk of detection."

"What folly!" exclaimed Wyatt.

"Yes, it was great folly, no doubt; but it is the nature of women to be foolish. And now tell me all about the wedding. Did Gilbert look very happy?"

"He looked like a man who has got his own way, and who cares very little what price he has paid, or may have to pay, for the getting it."

"And do you think he will be happy?"

"Not if his happiness depends on the love of his wife."

"Then you don't think she loves him?"

"I am sure she does not. I made a study of her face during the ceremony and afterward; and if ever a woman sold herself, or was sold by her people, this woman is guilty of such a bargain."

"Perhaps you say this to please me," said Clara, doubtfully.

"I do not, Mrs. Walsingham. I am convinced that this affair has been brought about by Lord Clanyarde's necessities, and not the young lady's choice. But I doubt whether this will make much difference to Gilbert in the long run. He is not a man of fine feelings, you know, and I think he will be satisfied with the fact of having won the woman he wanted to marry. I should think matters would go smoothly enough with him so long as he has no cause for jealousy. He would be rather an ugly customer if he took it into his head to be jealous."

"And you think his life will go smoothly," said Clara, "and that he will go on to the end unpunished for his perfidy to me?"

"What good would his punishment be to you?"

"It would be all the world to me."

"And if I could bring about the retribution you desire, if it were in my power to avenge your wrongs, what reward would you give me?"

She hesitated for a moment, knowing there was only one reward he was likely to claim from her.

"If you were a poor man, I would offer you two-thirds of my fortune," she said.

"But you know that I am not a poor man. If I can come to you some day, and tell you that Gilbert Sinclair and his wife are parted forever, will you accept me for your husband?"

"Yes," she answered suddenly; "break the knot between those two; let me be assured that he has lost the woman for whose sake he jilted me, and I will refuse you nothing."

"Consider it done. There is nothing in the world I would not achieve to win you for my wife."

CHAPTER VII.

"GREEN-EYED JEALOUSY."

It was not till early spring that Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair returned to England. They had spent the winter in Rome, where Gilbert had found some congenial friends, and where their time had been occupied in one perpetual round of gayety and dissipation. Constance had shown a great taste for pleasure since her marriage. She seemed to know no weariness of visiting and being visited, and people who remembered her in her girlish days were surprised to find what a thorough woman of the world she had become. Nor was Gilbert displeased that it was so. He liked to see his wife occupy a prominent position in society, and having no taste himself for the pleasures of the domestic hearth, he was neither surprised nor vexed by Constance's indifference to her home. Of course it would be all different at Davenant Park: there would be plenty of home life there—a little too much, perhaps, Gilbert thought, with a yawn.

They had been married nearly four months, and there had not been the shadow of a disagreement between them. Constance's manner to her husband was amiability itself. She treated him a little de haut en bas it is true, made her own plans for the most past without reference to him, and graciously informed him of her arrangements after they were completed. But then, on the other hand, she never objected to his disposal of his time, was never exacting, or jealous, or capricious, as Clara Walsingham had been. She was always agreeable to his friends, and was eminently popular with all of them; so Gilbert Sinclair was, upon the whole, perfectly satisfied with the result of his marriage, and had no fear of evil days in the future. What James Wyatt had said of him was perfectly true. He was not gifted with very fine feelings, and that sense of something wanting in such a union, which would have disturbed the mind of a nobler man, did not trouble him.

They returned to England early in February, and went at once to Davenant, which had been furnished in the modern mediæval style by a West End upholsterer. The staff of servants had been provided by Lady Clanyarde, who had bestowed much pains and labor upon the task of selection, bitterly bewailing the degeneracy of the race she had to deal with during the performance of this difficult service. All was ready when Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair arrived. A pompous housekeeper simpered and courtesied in the hall; an accomplished cook hovered tenderly over the roasts and the stew-pans in the great kitchen; house-maids in smart caps flitted about the passages and poked the fires in bed-rooms and dressing-rooms, bath-rooms and morning-room, eager to get an early look at their new lady; a butler of the usual clerical appearance ushered the way to the lamp-lit drawing-room, while two ponderous footmen conveyed the rugs and newspapers and morocco bags from the carriage, leaving all the heavier luggage to the care of unknown underlings attached to the stable department. Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair dined alone upon this first evening of their return, under the inspection of the clerical butler and the two ponderous footmen. They talked chiefly about the house, which rooms were most successful in their new arrangement, and so on; a little about what they had been doing in Rome; and a little about their plans for the next month, what guests were to be invited, and what rooms they were to occupy. It was all the most matter-of-fact conventional talk, but the three men retired with the impression that Gilbert Sinclair and his wife were a very happy couple, and reported to that effect in the house-keeper's room and the servants' hall.

Before the week had ended the great house was full of company. That feverish desire for gayety and change which had seemed a part of Constance's nature since her marriage in no way subsided on her arrival at Davenant. She appeared to exist for pleasure, and pleasure only, and her guests declared her the most charming hostess that ever reigned over a country house. Lavish as he was, Mr. Sinclair opened his eyes to their widest extent when he perceived his wife's capacity for spending money.

"It's rather lucky for you that you didn't marry a poor man, Constance," he said, with a boastful laugh.

She looked at him for a moment with a strange expression, and then turned very pale. "I should not have been afraid to face poverty," she said, "if it had been my fate to do so."

"If you could have faced it with the man you liked, eh, Constance? That's about what you mean, isn't it?"

"Is this intended for a complaint, Gilbert?" his wife asked in her coldest tones. "Have I been spending too much money?"

"No, no; I didn't mean that. I was only congratulating you upon your fitness for the position of a rich man's wife."

This was the first little outbreak of jealousy of which Gilbert Sinclair had been guilty. He knew that his wife did not love him, that his conquest had been achieved through the influence of her family, and he was almost angry with himself for being so fond of her. He could not forget those vague hints that had been dropped about Sir Cyprian Davenant, and was tormented with the idea that James Wyatt knew a great deal more than he had revealed on this point. This hidden jealousy had been at the bottom of the purchase of the Davenant estate. He took a savage delight in reigning over the the little kingdom from which his rival had been deposed.

Among the visitors from London appeared Mr. Wyatt, always unobtrusive, and always useful. He contrived to ingratiate himself very rapidly in Mrs. Sinclair's favor, and established himself as a kind of adjutant in her household corps, always ready with advice upon every social subject, from the costumes in a tableau vivant to the composition of the menu for a dinner-party. Constance did not particularly like him; but she lived in a world in which it is not necessary to have a very sincere regard for one's acquaintance, and she considered him an agreeable person, much to be preferred to the generality of her husband's chosen companions, who were men without a thought beyond the hunting field and race-course.

Mr. Wyatt, on his part, was a little surprised to see the manner in which Lord Clanyarde's daughter filled her new position, the unfailing vivacity which she displayed in the performance of her duties as a hostess, and the excellent terms upon which she appeared to live with her husband. He was accustomed, however, to look below the surface of things, and by the the time he had been a fortnight at Davenant he had discovered that all this brightness and gayety on the part of the wife indicated an artificial state of being, which was very far from real happiness, and that there was a growing sense of disappointment on the part of the husband.

He was not in the habit of standing upon much ceremony in his intercourse with Gilbert Sinclair, and on the first convenient occasion questioned him with blunt directness upon the subject of his marriage.

"I hope the alliance has brought you all the happiness you anticipated?" he said.

"Oh, yes, Jim," Mr. Sinclair answered, rather moodily, "my wife suits me pretty well. We get on very well together. She's a little too fond of playing the woman of fashion; but she'll be tired of that in time, I dare say. I'm fond of society myself, you know, couldn't lead a solitary life for any woman in Christendom; but I should like a wife who seemed to care a little more for my company, and was not always occupied with other people. I don't think we have dined alone three times since we were married."

CIVILIZED SAVAGES.

African Tribes Who Have a Good Idea of the Mechanical Arts.

Most people think of the natives of tropical Africa as naked savages, without any of the resources of civilization, says an ex-missionary, but the fact is that many of the tribes are acquainted with not a few of the mechanical arts. You are probably aware that the mining and working of iron have been understood by the natives of that part of the world ever since prehistoric times. In Liberia the Mande are smelters of iron and workers in gold and silver. They are also tanners of leather and weavers of cloth, and they make an infinite variety of domestic articles. The Makolos are excellent wood carvers, the Djours are skillful iron workers, and the Bechuanas are good metal workers, fur dressers and architects.

The Baganidas of Victoria Nyanza do beautiful work in brass, copper and ivory. On the slave coast the people of Dahomey, who otherwise possess an unenviable reputation, are accorded a very respectable position in industrial artisanship. Glass-making is not unknown among them. They make cloths of cotton and many other textiles, and their dyes of blue, red and yellow owe their peculiar richness to native coloring substances. Tanning they also understand, and they obtain salt from sea water by evaporation.

The Mandegnas have attained a considerable degree of cultivation and knowledge of the common arts. Their musical instruments are the flute, zither, harp, bell and drum. The Veis of Liberia, having obtained an acquaintance with letters from contact with Arabs, have invented an alphabetical primer of their own language, original and independent both of the Arabic and English characters. This is the greatest effort ever made by an African tribe toward the advancement of culture. The Veis make pens of reeds and use indigo for ink.

Called Lord Salisbury a Crank.

Although Lord and Lady Salisbury make a point of spending the major part of every winter and spring at their chateau of Beaulieu, which is close to Monte Carlo, yet both of them carefully avoid ever setting foot on the property controlled by the managers of the Casino. This is due to the treatment to which they were subjected a few years ago. Walking up the steps of the Casino with his wife, Lord Salisbury was directed, as is always the case with strangers, to apply at the office for a ticket of admission.

Lord Salisbury is exceedingly careless in his attire while the marchioness is equally dowdy-looking in her dress. The consequence was that when, in reply to the usual request to state his occupation, Lord Salisbury replied that he was prime minister of England—which he was at the time—he was greeted with a shout of laughter and an invitation to "get out," on the ground that "cranks and wags and people like you" were not admitted.

Thrifty Norwegian Immigrants.

No country contributes so many immigrants to the United States in proportion to population as Norway. It is chiefly the rural Norse that come to America, and the immigrants are for the most part under 30 years of age. The Norse are good farmers and thrifty citizens. They, as well as their neighbors, the Swedes, have a strong desire to make homes for themselves and to have land and the conveniences of life. They frequently return to visit their native country, but they become permanent citizens of the United States. Most of those that come are of marked peasant type.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

THIS IS THEIR DEPARTMENT OF THE PAPER.

Quaint Sayings and Cute Doings of the Little Folks Everywhere, Gathered and Printed Here for All Other Little Ones to Read.

A Boy's Ode to the Goat.

I'm a goat,
Facetiously and derisively
Called William,
And Billy for short.

I walk with stately tread,
Like one to purple bred,
City and town.
And on the old back lot,
Among the sans-culotte,
I lay me down.

At break of day
I'm up, and wander away
Up and down the deck,
Among old tin cans
And naturalized codfish,
Or take the alley in
Where there's more tin
And runaway rubber shoes,
And feed on boot-tops, heels and Scraps of barbed-wire fence.

I nibble cinders
And sample corduroy
And macadamized pavements
And tiling and gaspipes
While I wait.
Talk about your ostrich—
He ain't in it with me.
He's a canary bird
Along with me.

When the ostrich fills
His stomach, he hides
His head in the sand
Or the highest place at hand.
He's ashamed to look Around to see
Where he's at,
But with me;
I'm a goat
All over.

I can live on sand
In any land,
Or rope, or currycombs,
Or rakes, or spikes,
Or tenpenny nails,
Or old tin pails
That have had their day
As growlers,
Or gallnses, or screws
Red with rust
And garnished with Old paint brushes.

And I can amble away,
Any time of the day,
And lay me down
In the shade,
And enjoy a siesta
Like one of the 400—
Never have to chew
Gum for my digestion.

With a goat
There's no after-claps
From late suppers.
No nightmare
Monkeys with a goat.
And there's no statistics
As to sick goats.

The goat's the only thing
That renews its youth
Ad valorem.
After it quits foraging in the alleys,
And loses its appetite
And gets sore and sore-eyed.

Thinking of the good times
It has had,
It grows sad,
But not for long.
The tanner man is a fairy
To the goat
And takes its hide.

And that's when the goat
Gets right in the swim—
And he takes a front seat
At the banquet,
Or at the opera,
Or in the dreamy waltz,
As a six-button kid.

I'm a goat,
An ambling goat
'Round town.
Always up or down.

I walk
With stately tread,
Like a "bute" trimmed in red,
City and town,
And on the old back lot
Among the sans-culotte
I lay me down.

WILLIAM METHEMETT.

TOO NOBLE TO ACT IT.

Salvini Thought Booth Too Good at Heart to Play Macbeth.

The celebrated actor Edwin Booth was at this time in Baltimore, a city distant one hour from the capital. I had heard so much about this superior artist that I was anxious to see him, and on my off nights I went to Baltimore with my impresario's agent.

A box had been reserved for me without my knowledge, and was draped with the Italian colors. I regretted to be made so conspicuous, but I could not fail to appreciate the courteous and complimentary desire to do me honor shown by the American artist, writes Salvini in the Century.

It was only natural that I should be most kindly influenced toward him, but without the courtesy which predisposed me in his favor he would equally have won my sympathy by his attractive and artistic lineaments, and his graceful and well-proportioned figure. The play was "Hamlet." This part brought him great fame, and justly; for in addition to the artistic worth with which he has adorned it, his elegant personality was admirably adapted to it.

His long and wavy hair, his large and expressive eyes, his youthful and flexible movements, accorded perfectly with the ideal of the young Prince of Denmark which now obtains everywhere. His splendid delivery, and the penetrating philosophy with which he informed his phrases, were his most remarkable qualities.

I was so fortunate as to see him also as Richelieu and Iago, and in all three of these parts, so diverse in their character, I found him absolutely admirable. I cannot say so much for his Macbeth, which I saw one night when passing through Philadelphia. The part seemed to me not adapted to his nature. Macbeth was an ambitious man, and Booth was not. Macbeth had barbarous and ferocious instincts, and Booth was agreeable, urbane and courteous. Macbeth destroyed his enemies traitorously—did this even to gain possession of their goods—while Booth was noble, lofty-minded, and generous of his wealth.

It is thus plain that however much art he might expend, his nature rebelled against his portrayal of that personage, and he could never hope to transform himself into the ambitious, venal and sanguinary Scottish king.

PATENT POSTAL WRAPPERS.

It Does Away with the Trouble Usually Encountered in Opening Papers.

The patent postal wrapper shown below is designed to do away with the trouble usually experienced in opening a tightly rolled parcel. It is an English idea, and is described as follows: Running from end to end of the wrapper are two series of perforations, half an inch or so apart, and inclining toward each other, in the manner shown in our illustration, while at the left-hand side the outer two perforations come right up to the edge, and provide a small tab or slip that can easily be grasped between the thumb and finger. To open the wrapper, it is held in the manner shown and the tab firmly pulled, when at once a thin slip is torn out of the wrapper throughout its length, the strip being strictly limited to the width of the perforations, and thus preventing any damage either to the papers within or to any advertisements that may, as is sometimes the case, be printed inside the wrapper.

PHOTOGRAPHED WITH DOGS.

A New Fad Which Has Taken Possession of Englishwomen.

There is a new fad among the fair debutantes on the other side of the water. Its growth can be traced directly to the ever-growing interest that modern women are taking in well-bred dogs, coupled with the old-fashioned liking for being photographed, which dates back a long way, as everybody knows. The mania which has taken possession of the English girls is that of being photographed with their favorite setters or collies in the same position as that affected by "dearest friends" when they sit for joint portraits—heads together. The young woman in the cut is Lady Hilda Keith Falconer, who has recently enjoyed the honor of being presented to her majesty Queen Victoria along with dozens of her compatriots. It will not be long doubtless before American girls fall in line.

Properties of Asbestos.

Some of the common ideas concerning asbestos appear to have resulted in mistakes of a serious practical nature. Thus, the usual conception that it is in nowise affected by heat is true only to the extent that, though infusible except at very high temperature, it is a fact that only a very moderate degree of heat—heating to low redness in a platinum crucible, for instance—is required to entirely destroy the flexibility of the fiber and render it so brittle that it may easily be crumbled between the thumb and finger. Another mistake is that relating to its high non-conductivity or power of resisting the action of the heat—the assumption being that because asbestos is infusible it must, of necessity, be a good non-conductor. The contrary assertion to this is made and proved on good authority, namely, that by placing a vessel of water on a sheet of asbestos cardboard and applying heat from below, or more simple proof still, by placing a piece of wood on a sheet of asbestos millboard on a hot stove. If, however, asbestos is teased out and worked into a fluffy mass, there is thus obtained a non-conducting material, but it is the air inclosed by the fibers that is the real non-conductor, the asbestos serving simply to entangle the air.

At the Head.

Bishop Polk, afterward General Polk, was one of those men who wear the seal of authority upon their brows. On one of his episcopal visitations he stopped for the night at a country inn, when his host at once addressed him as "General."

"No, my friend," said Polk, "you are mistaken; I am not a soldier."

"Judge, then," hazarded the innkeeper.

"That is not the title given me by those who know me," replied Polk, beginning to be amused.

"Bishop, then!"

"Right," said Polk, laughing.

"Well, I knew you were at the head of your profession, whatever it was," said the innkeeper.

THE small boy may occasionally fail in other things, but you can depend upon it that there is one thing he will always do—get to a show in time—Siftings.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....MAY 10, 1894.

THOMAS E. BENEDICT, of New York is again made public printer. He had the same place in Cleveland's first term.

JOHN PATTON, of Grand Rapids, has been chosen to succeed the late Senator Stockbridge of Michigan, in the senate.

EIGHT horses were killed by lightning, at one stroke, near Crown Point last week. They were bunched together against a wire fence.

FELLING trees by electricity is said to be coming into use. A platinum wire is drawn against the tree, and a current passed through its.

ANTWERP, Belgium, opened its World fair Saturday. King Leopold "pressed the button." The United States has a fine building and large exhibit there.

INTER-OCEAN of Chicago, has changed hands, Wm. Penn Nixon, the editor, bought out the controlling stock owned by the manager, H. H. Kohlsaat for about $400,000.

BI-METALLIC convention is in session in London. There is a better prospect than ever before that the nations will join in a plan by which both gold and silver will be used all over the world. It is the best plan, all things considered.

IN THE second Ohio district last week a congressman was elected in place of one who had died. The issue was squarely made on the Wilson bill as a platform and the democrats not only won on their old time majority, but they redeemed many towns that McKinley carried by heavy majorities last year.

REPUBLICAN bad management for the past thirty years has brought these hard times. It is needless for them to insult intelligence of the people by saying that people got rich during Harrison's administration. If they had been as rich and as prosperous as they claim what has become of their wealth?

NUGGET of silver taken from a Colorado mine last week, weighed 3,300 pounds, and worth $25,000. The largest ever found. And yet they say there that the silver industry is killed. And how can populists here account for the finding of such a chunk of silver with "Cleveland and the gold bugs of Wall street ruining silver?"

FARM lands have been depreciating steadily for twenty-five years. Prices of farm produce have been all the time getting lower. And all these years, republicans made all the laws we have had, and still have, and all the time they kept putting the tariff higher, until now we have the highest rate we ever had. And every time things got worse. Then they would tell the people, a higher tariff tax was what was needed, and then they would put it a notch higher. But prices of products and the wages of labor kept falling, and again they told the people we must put on more, and things kept on going down. The condition of the country to day is the result of this foolish practice. Now there are strikes all over the land. Factories are shut down, men are idle or working at half pay, and all this, under the McKinley law, with the highest rate of tariff ever known in the country. And the republicans bosses are calling for more tariff.

"GEN. RANDALL'S" army of Coxeyites of whom we give a long account elsewhere marched through Chicago May 1, and started across Indiana. They staid over Sunday at the fair ground in Valparaiso. Tuesday they reached Laporte but were ordered not to come into the city, as it was believed there was danger of small pox. Randall and his officers became abusive, and were sent to jail. The rest marched around the city, and camped near by. Less than half their number remains and all will likely separate before they get to Ft. Wayne.

RECENTLY we were told, the Churubusco Truth was circulating a statement, in regard to a business matter in which the COURIER figured, but of which we had never heard. It was telling for truth, what it had no reason to consider true and we took it to task. Instead of admitting its mistake, as a person with any sense of decency would, it goes off onto two or three matters not in the least connected with the item in controversy, and which, if they were true, could have no bearing on the question. We defy the Untruth to give a single name in Auburn that will concede the truth of either of the miserably spelled statements it makes. The editor has evidently been inoculated with the Clipper baccillus. We do not know whether the editor of the Untruth is fit company for the drunken dead beat who fills the columns of the Clipper with unspeakable slush, but if he were a man of any sense of propriety he would not set afloat such truck without knowingly whether there was anything in it.

CITY ELECTION.

The election was like all those under the Australian law, very quiet. But it afforded a good many democrats, as well as some republicans, an opportunity to get even. It was a sort of free-for-all struggle, and those who wanted office the worst and worked hardest for it, got it. No one talked about the "fitness," for the men stood about even in that regard. Surely, no democrat had any reason to bolt his ticket, or even a part of it. Still, that is just what many did. The vote by precincts is as follows:

Good Political Sense.

The South Bend Times has the right view of the senseless criticisms often indulged in by newspapers when they speak of men in responsible places: It says:

Who are the newspaper scribes that speak so flippantly and sometimes so contemptuously of the men upon whom rests the duty and responsibility of acting upon important measures affecting the public weal? So far as the metropolitan press, with some honorable exceptions, is concerned, the bulk of these coarse criticisms emanates from persons who have no sort of standing in the community in which they hold forth; who have neither conviction nor conscience; who are mere hirelings, writing for one side today and for the other tomorrow; individuals who haven't sufficient business capacity to successfully run a peanut stand. From such sources the great reading public, in so far as it depends upon so-called metropolitan sheets for information, derives its enlightenment on important, far-reaching business questions that baffle the understanding of the wisest and most sagacious men of the land. Thoughtful men should go slow in adopting the ipse dixits emanating from such unsavory sources.

Political Notes.

Surveyor Cal. VanAuken announces his name this week as a candidate for renomination. We have no doubt but he will be unanimously chosen, as he should be. He is an able officer and runs the business on economical principles.

We insert the name of John P. Crimmins, of Garrett, this week, as a candidate for recorder. He is a leading young democrat of his city, by profession a telegraph operator, and, as we believe, is train dispatcher for the B. & O.

George Pierson, whose name is this week announced for commissioner of the north district, is a life-long democrat of Smithfield township. He is a farmer and stock buyer and we are told is a successful business man, and would be a good commissioner.

Henry Hines, announced for treasurer this week, is a well known and prosperous farmer and sawmill man in Jackson township. He was many years justice of the peace and is a man of good ability and thoroughly honest.

Sol. Barney is announced this week as a candidate for clerk. He is a well known business man of St. Joe where he has had a general store for many years. He had also been in the same business for many years at Spencerville his former home. He is a son of George Barney who was twice elected county treasurer once in 1861 and again 1863. The father was a good county officer and we know no reason why the son would not do as well, though in another office.

Daniel Tomlinson, whose name appears this week among the candidates for auditor, is one of the best known citizens of Wilmingtn. He is a prosperous farmer, and thorough-going democrat. He was elected two terms trustee of his township, the banner republican township of the county, which speaks well for his popularity.

Wm. L. Blair is a man well known all over DeKalb county, for he is one of its earliest citizens, and always actively engaged in some way advancing its interests. He has been a candidate for this office before, and was for several terms, chairman of the democratic county committee, in which position he did excellent service. He is a man of ability and integrity, and would make a good officer.

WM. H. KIBLINGER.

The subject of this sketch was born near Fish Lake, in Lagrange county, Ind., May 24, 1848. He was a son of Peter F. and Henrietta (Hoffman) Kiblinger. He received his earlier education in the common schools and later at the Seminary at Ontario, in the same county, then under the management of Rev. Rufus Patch, one of the best known of the early educators of Northern Indiana. He took a course in the Eastman Business College of Chicago, graduating in the fall of 1864. He became a clerk in the wholesale tobacco house of Samuel Barbosin in Chicago, remaining with them a year, when he became book-keeper for Speakman & Proctor, wholesale book dealers in the same city In the spring of 1867, he went into partnership with his father in the hardware business at Williamsburg, Ind., under the firm name of Kiblinger & Co. He was united in marriage to Miss Martha McBride Aug. 21, 1873, who survives to mourn his early death. In 1877 he sold out his interest and in November of that year moved to Auburn. He began business with a hardware store north of the public square in the room now occupied by Brown, Culbertson & Boland. In the summer of 1880 he bought the lot on the corner of Seventh and Main streets and built the two story brick since occupied by his hardware store and the COURIER office. In 1887 he bought out I. N. Cool in the buggy business, getting the small room on the corner of Eighth and Jackson streets, where Mr. Cool had been carrying on a buggy manufacturing business for a time. He at once began to push the business, and soon needed more room. Additional ground was bought and built on as the business grew, and so on, till he owned and had two-story brick buildings on all the west half of the block between 7th and 8th streets, and then he bought and built the west half of the block to the south, that is the block between 8th and 9th streets, both blocks lying along Jackson street. His business in general was prosperous and the year 1891, showed a record of over 4,000 finished buggies sent out. When the poor crops of 1892, cut down orders he had to curtail business somewhat, but recently it has grown again to about its full proportions—even since his poor health has compelled him to relinguish the close personal attention he had always given his business. No death that has happened in Auburn for years has produced such profound and earnest sorrow.

A year or two ago his health began to fail, owing, no doubt, to too close attention to business and close confinement. Last winter, he was obliged to cease work and was confined to his room. The disease became seated on his lungs and in his throat and could not be checked, and he was advised to try a change of climate.

Sunday, April 8, Mr. Kiblinger, accompanied by his wife and little Katie, their adopted daughter, as well as by his family physician, Dr. Nusbaum, started for the south, hoping that the milder climate would at least give him ease and prolong his life, if it did not restore his health. They were accompanied to the train which they took over the B. & O. from the Junction, by a large number of our people, including many of the employes of the factory. They went first to Chattanooga, and then to Thomasville, Georgia, not far from the Gulf, a very pleasant place, where the mild, spring-like climate seemed to soothe the sufferer, if it did not relieve him. Later, they came back into the mild hill country of Georgia and located at Marietta. Here the fresh air and delightfully mild climate seemed to have a further beneficial effect, though it would appear that the disease was really going on with its deadly work. Dr. Nusbaum came home for a few days to see to his own business here, but returned south April 28. He found the patient about as he had left him, weak, but hopeful, and not suffering much. Under the impression that he was at least no worse, or at all events would not die soon, he encouraged his wife to come home, promising to follow her in a few days, when he hoped to be a little stronger. And even if not stronger, she could not help him, as Dr. Nusbaum, who had now been joined by S. O. Snyder, of Angola, could render him all the assistance that could be given, either while waiting or on the way home. After parting from his wife, he still grew weaker, till on Wednesday it was seen he would not likely survive the night. Soon after five o'clock next morning, Thursday, May 3, he died. Dr. Nusbaum at once telegraphed home, and he and Mr. Snyder had the remains prepared for the long journey and started north, reaching here here on the north-bound evening train on the Lake Shore road at 5:30 of May 4. They were met at the train by a large number of his sorrowing townsmen and women, and escorted to the home where he had so lately started on the last sad journey. The funeral services on Sunday, May 6, at 2 p. m. in the M.E church, were largely attended and the sermon by Rev. A S. Wooton was one of unusual eloquence and feeling.

A noticeable feature of the services, was the abundance of lovely flowers, borne by a committee of ladies, the friends of the family. The men from the factory attended in a body and were deeply moved as they listened to the last sad services over the remains of their late employer. There was a feeling of deep sorrow over the entire audience and hundreds of eyes unused to tears wept in sympathy with the bereaved family, and for the friend they had lost, for Mr. Kiblinger was a man of large heart and generous impulses.

The body was laid to laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery south of town, Woodlawn.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WORK,

In the Life Saving Stations, Light Houses and Light Ships of America, United Kingdom of Great Britain and the British Provinces.

Much interest has centered in the Christian Endeavor work in life saving stations, and at the International Convention in Montreal, Canada, an advanced movement was made by adding the light houses and light ships to the work; also including the United Kingdom of Great Britain in the field of operation. Men were chosen to represent England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales on the International Committee, which consists of representatives from every state and province where life saving stations, light houses and light ships are located. Rev. S. Edward Young, Asbury Park, N. J., is chairman; Rev. J. Lester Wells, 188 Grand St. Jersey City, N. J., is secretary. They delivered addresses at the Montreal Convention, the former speaking of the spiritual wants and the latter of the intellectual and physical needs of the crews. The life savers of the world are the bravest men, and continually hazard their lives for others; they guard twenty thousand miles or more of dangerous coasts and have rescued more than a million people from shipwreck. As the most of them are isolated from home and friends, it is highly fitting that world-wide sympathy should be extended to them, also to the men connected with the light houses and light ships, upon whom vessels frieghted with precious lives depend for safety. Christian Endeavor Societies, located near stations or light houses are recommended to conduct appropriate services for the crews and furnish comfort bags, books, magazines, papers, mits, muffers, wristlets, socks, yarn caps and the like, for the comfort of the surfmen. Those who desire further information with reference to this noble movement may address the secretary.

Cures Dyspepsia.

Rebecca Wilkinson, of Brownsvalley, Ind., says: "I have been in a distressed condition for three years from nervousness, weakness of the stomach, dyspepsia and indigestion until my health was gone, I had been doctoring constantly with no relief. I bought one bottle of South American Nervine, which did me more good good any $50 worth of doctoring I ever did in my life. I would advise every weakly person to use this valuable and lovely remedy: a few bottles of it has cured me completely. I consider it the grandest medicine in the world." Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottle 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord.

Committee Meeting.

The democratic central committee met at Waterloo, Wednesday, May 2, to consider matters connected with the coming county convention. They decided to change somewhat the order of work, so that at the convention, the first office disposed of shall be commissioner The next in order will be representive, then clerk, auditor Sheriff, treasurer recorder, coroner and surveyor, the usual order except as to commissioner. They also decided that the townships should be called in alphabetical order, as the counties are in a state convention, and the states in a national convention. The question of the manner of voting came up but was properly left to be decided by the covention itself. They settled on Saturday, May 19, at 2 p. m. for the caucuses to select delegates to all of the conventions.

Luxury in Travel.

The North-Western Line, embracing nearly 8,000 miles of standard railway, has long been known as one of the most progressive railways in the west, and it certainly merits this distinction, as we can testify from an extended trip recently made over a major portion of its lines. One of the handsomest trains we have ever traveled in (and nobody could wish for finer service) is the "North-Western Limited," leaving Chicago at 6:30 P. M. daily for St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth. It is vestibuled throughout and lighted with gas, and has justly described as the most complete and elegant train in the west, the Hon. T. B. Bryan, vice president of the World's Fair Commission referring to it as "the finest on wheels." One has but to glance at the rich upholstering, tapestry, ornaments and carvings to confirm the fact that the highest degree of the carbuilder's art has been employed in the construction of the handsome equipment of this North Western flyer. The coaches, library cars, the 16-section palace sleeping cars, and the compartment sleeping cars, each compartment being supplied with hot and cold water and lavatory, certainly seem to preclude the possibility of further improvement in making travel a luxury. Supper is served in the elegant dining car, and the buffet library car is well stocked with reading material, metropolitan dailies, magazines and leading pictorial publications for the the evening's entertainment. The management of the Chicago & North-Western R'y believes that perfect service is the strongest possible advertisement for securing passenger traffic, and we are told by one of its officials that its train service and accommodations are always carefully planned with this end in view. The results are so satisfactory that a person who once goes over the line generally selects it whenever and wherever he goes. 19 0-21

Notice of Petition to Annex Territory to the Town of Auburn.

Notice is herby given that there will be a petition presented to the Board of Commissioners of DeKalb County, State of Indiana, at their regular June session, 1894, by the Board of Trustees of the town of Auburn, said county, praying said Board of Commissioners to annex to said town the following territory contiguous thereto, cosisting of four tracts of land situate in said county, respectively described as follows, to wit.

1st. A part of the northeast fourth of the southwest quarter of section 29, in township 34, north of range 13 east, described as follows:

Commencing at the northwest corner of Parks' addition to said town of Auburn, thence east 426 feet, to the center of the Auburn and Waterloo road, thence north twenty degrees east 731 feet along the center line of said road, to the east and west center line of said section 29, thence west upon said section line 552 feet, to the northwest corner, of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of said section, thence south 580 feet upon the west line of said northeast quarter, to the place of beginning, containing 7.69 acres, belonging to Malinda Barclay, Julia A., Bard, Oliver Grogg and Nellie Lower.

2nd. A part of the northeast quarter of section 31, in township 34, north of range 13 east, described as follows:

Commencing 23 feet south of the northeast corner of said section 31, thence west 767 feet, thence south 24 degrees west 470 feet, thence east 958 feet, to the east line of said section, thence north on said section line, 429 feet to the place of beginning, containing 8.49 acres, belonging a part to Philip Fluke, a part to Eliza J. Gibson and a part to Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Company.

3rd Commencing at a point 273 feet south of the southwest corner, of the northwest quarter, of section 32, in township 34, north of range 13 east, thence east 310 feet to the southwest corner of Sprott's addition to said town, thence north 493 feet, to the northwest corner of said addition, thence east 309 feet, to the west line of said section, thence south 493 feet to the place of beginning, containing 3.40 acres, belonging to Elizabeth McCune.

4th. Commencing at a point 309 feet west, and 2.0 feet north, of the southwest corner, of the northwest quarter, of section 32, in township 34, north of range 13 east, at the southeast corner of S. W. Ralston's addition to said town, thence north 621¾ feet, to the south line of McIntyre's addition to said town, thence east 202 feet to the west line of Spencer's (western) addition to said town, thence south along said line 620¼ feet, thence east 263 feet, to the place of beginning, containing 3.73 acres, belonging to Rosa Shull.

By orders of the Board of Trustees of the town of Auburn.
JOSEPH E. ENSLEY President of Board.
U. S. RAUT, Town Clerk.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb circuit court, in a cause wherein Frank D Wefmore is plaintiff and Cyrus C. Boyer, Mary E. Boyer, Emma Boyer, Carey Boyer, Nellie Boyer, John W. Baxter Ex. of will of Sarah Boyer deceased, Samuel Kennedy, Walter Thompson and William D. Boyle are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of four thousand nine hundred and fourteen dollars and ten cents, with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at Public Sale, to the highest bidder, on between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m., and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day, at the door of the court house, of DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, to-wit:

Ninety-nine and thirty-four one hundredths (99 34-100) acres off of the south side of the north east quarter (¼) and fifty and forty one-hundredths (50 40-100) acres off of the south end of the east half of the northwest quarter (¼) of section twenty (20) in township thirty five (35) north of range fourteen (14) east, situated in DeKalb county, state of Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and cost, I will at the same time and place, expose at public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation and appraisement laws.
G. C. RALSTON, Sheriff of DeKalb County,
By E. Blum Deputy.
Auburn, Indiana, April 23d, A. D. 1894.

People out southeast of town are complaining a great deal of the poor condition of the strip of road from the bend just east of the creek southeast to the Jackson township line. A man was overheard to remark the other day that his wagon wheels dropped into a big rut and he was obliged to drive all the way to Spencerville to turn around.

Rev. W. L. Meese, is now selling a very valuable work, which will take the place to a certain extent, of a costy encyclopedia. It is the "Manual of Useful Information," a book that in a brief way treats of almost everything. There are five books in the series, and these are usually taken by teachers. But this one volume is a great value to the general public.

Last Sunday morning, when the hailstorm had passed by, there was heavy thunder and intense flashes of lightning. One bolt struck a post on North Cedar street and ran along a telegraph wire that George Boland had connected with McDougal's office. It ran along the wire to Mr. Boland's house and burned the covering of the wire and scorched the house a little, but did no further damage.

Steuben Republican: A gentleman in this county who is making a success of farming remarked to us recently that he endeavored to avoid raising those things for sale which his neighbors were producing in abundance. He illustrated his meaning by saying that when he noticed that other farmers were planting more potatoes than usual he only put out enough for his own use and devoted his energies to raising something that he had reason to think would be scarce.

Cowan Sisters are having a big foreign trade now. Last week Mrs. Dr. Combs and Mrs. Boone, of Hicksville, came up here and bought liberal bills of goods, and on Monday of this week another Mrs. Boone and Mrs. Bevington, of the same place, bought quite a supply of millinery, such as delights the female mind and taste. Hicksville ladies evidently have good taste and a good eye for advantageous bargains. On Tuesday, there was a telephone call from Decatur; in regard to goods, and a few days ago, they sent out handsome orders to Ann Arbor and Angola. Auburn is doing business again.

Mr. Click, who has charge of the public square, put up some wire last thursday, to keep people from cutting more paths on the grass. He was also mowing the lawn, and the grass seed, newly sown on the bare places, was starting up nicely.

Mrs. R. C. Baxter and Mrs. R. E. Salyer are at Terre Haute this week, as delegates to the state meeting of the ladies of the A. O. U. W. which is in session there. They went by way of Indianapolis, where we believe they will call on friends.

Kutzner & Myers have a first-class livery establishment at their barn on West Sixth street. They are always prepared to fit out their patrons with a good rig of any sort, and at fair rates. Don't forget them when you need a rig to go anywhere.

Mr. Meese is this week getting out a large lot of the Swing Washers, which he will at once put on the market. He has already sold an unusual number of these popular machines, and the outlook is better than ever before, for increased sales. Every housewife in the county ought to lighten her burdens by using one of these labor-saving Swing Washers.

Dr. Ford and John Boots reached home yesterday afternoon from their long visit in California and that region. They are well, only that Doc. was feeling the effects of some alkali water he got hold of. They bring word that those they met are well, including J. C. Somers at Pueblo, Colo., Cochran and Ensley at Ontario, and Hull Sheets at Los Angeles. The last has thanks for subscription to the COURIER, which we hope will reach him O. K.

The big Kiblinger factory started up in full force this morning. They had been closed only since the news of his death, which reached here just one week ago. W. H. McIntyre has been appointed administrator, of the estate, and will also have full charge of the business. The choice is an excellent one for he has proved himself capable in all the the various lines he has had to care for. The starting up of the factory will be good news to fifty or sixty employes.

Concord township will have the first gravel road in the county. It starts from the Allen county line and runs north through Spencerville and St. Joe, ending about a mile north of the latter place. There is also a branch at St. Joe, running east through the town to the river. The viewers met here Tuesday to select chain bearers, etc. They are: R. N. Crooks, John Yard and Adam Deets. J. J. VanAuken is the engineer and Judge McClellan is attorney for the petitioners. Who knows but this is the beginning of some sensible road improvements in DeKalb county.

Inspection will prove that R. W. Cobb has the largest and finest equipped bicycle salesroom in Northern Indiana. Ft. Wayne is not in it.

James Gilliland was able to get down town on crutches last week. He has been laid up now nearly a year, and is looking rather feeble.

Wm. Sthair, now a resident of Ft. Wayne, was here over Sunday to attend the funeral of Mr. Kiblinger. He had been an employe in the factory many years.

Mrs. Frank Ryan, of Fremont, is here at present. She came to remain at Cook Ford's and be company for Maggie while Mrs. Ford is at Philadelphia. Mrs. Ryan is Mrs. Ford's aunt.

Among those from outside of town who attended Mr. Kiblinger's funeral, were John Leasure and wife and Simon Snyder, of Angola, and John Leas and wife, of Waterloo, and Daniel and Milo Thomas, from Corunna.

W. H. Mader will be in the buggy business this year, selling Kiblinger buggies, road wagons and carriages. He will be found at the Kiblinger factory, his room being on 8th St. west of the Davis hardware store. Come and see me before you buy. tf

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.—The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Robbins & McCord. tf

Now you ought to just see the work J. G. Clapp is doing. Well, it is surprising how much work he has on hand, and still they go. If times are dull people want to see how they look just the same. So they go pushing in and sit for the best photo on earth. Did you ever get left? Yes, but with J. G. Clapp's work we never did; he's all right.

The Auburn Swing washer, made and sold by Mr. Meese, is the only washing machine made in the county. It is no longer an experiment, as it has been in use here nearly four years. Clothes washed with it last longer, because they are not injured by rubbing, and being closed in, have the benefit of cleansing by steam. There is an advantage in buying this washer, as any repairs needed can be had right here, at all times of Mr. Meese.

Buzz Saw Accident.

Cornelius Platter, who resides just west of Mrs. Houghton's, but works at the Monitor Factory at the Junction, had a serious accident Tuesday. He was ripping lumber when he stepped on a small block that tipped him, and he fell, throwing his hand on the buzz saw. It took off the thumb of his left hand. He was brought up town, and Dr. Swarts amputated the thumb near the joint. It was considerably chawed up, but the rest of the thumb will be saved all right. He was pretty sick, though, as a result of taking chloroform, and the Doctor had to take him home on a bed, but he is all right now.

CONGRESSMEN who attend to business are wondering how they can set in the way of reform such other Congressmen as do not. The method of disciplining employes by docking their wages when they fail to earn them has been found efficacious in some lines of industry.

AN observant Washington correspondent has noted the fact that nearly all the statesmen in both Houses of Congress go around with their hands in their pockets. The habit is a slovenly one, but from the character of some of the gentlemen who are supposed to be making laws for us it may be considered fortunate that they are satisfied to keep their hands in their own pockets.

PRINCESS COLONNA is not the first American wife who has condoned the offenses of a "noble" husband and returned to his roof. But she is not likely to be the first American wife to discover that that sort of husband proves any better on a second trial than he did during the first. The chronicles of foreign American marriages afford no instance up to date of repentence that lasted beyond settling up his creditors' demands.

IT is to be hoped that the tests applied to the steel breastplate sent by Emperor William to Bismarck were conducted in a proper manner, and that there are neither flaws nor air bubbles in it. If any such were discovered it would be a matter for a committee of the Reichstag to investigate, and ought to close up the rolling mill (as well as the armorer) that produced it, without delay. Its close should be the mirror of high memories for a thousand years, longer than any ship's plate is expected to last, and a good deal longer than any now extant dynasty, Hohenzellern or other, will last.

A REMARKABLE story of misfortune at sea, ending with a wreck on the sands of Long Island and the salvation of the crew by means of the breeches buoy, the vessel being a total loss, is that of the American bark Elmiranda. That a vessil sailing from New York for so short a trip as that to Portland, Me., should five days later be in Hampton Roads in distress, and after repairing and sailing once more on her voyage leave her timbers to bleach on the sea-swept reaches of Long Island's dangerous coast, seems as thoughfate took at times a sort of grim delight in baffling the best endeavors that man could put forth.

GREECE is indeed a much-afflicted country. Notwithstanding the sagacity of its ruler and the traditional pholosophy and intelligence of its people, to whose ancestors the world is indebted for much of its civilization and enlightenment, it is the scene of constant political shakeups, which injuriously affect its prosperity and development. Nor are these the only kind of disturbances from which the little kingdom suffers. For there is no portion of Europe so frequently visited by earthquakes as Greece, and the shocks which are reported as having occurred there seem to have proved unusually disastrous to life and property, the ancient city of Thebes being nearly entirely destroyed.

THE project of a Grand Rapids musical society to edit and publish one daily issue of the Press of that city has the charm of novelty. If it is successful, as no doubt it will be, the custom may become a fashion. Instead of hiring a theater or opera house for an amateur performance, the association or individual to be benefited hires a newspaper. Their friends and acquaintances and the public generally will take the same interest in reading their public utterances, and guessing their identity where it is not revealed, as in seeing them and hearing them on the stage. Instead of the role of Juliet, or Mrs. Malaprop, or Martha, or Carmen, or Hamlet, or Sir Joseph Porter of the Pinafore, the prominent ladies and gentlemen of the community will act as editors and reporters of the various departments. It does not follow, of course, that they will come any nearer professional proficiency than they do on the stage, but that is often one of the great attractions of amateur performances. If they did as well as professionals there would not be as much curiosity to see them.

A PHILADELPHIA scoundrel forced a young girl under threat of killing her to go to a minister's house in Camden and marry him. He was 33 and she only 15. The minister asked her how old she was, and under intimidation from the brute beside her she answered that her age was 18. After the marriage she escaped to her home, and her parents prosecuted the bridegroom for marrying a minor without their consent. Judge Gordon, in charging the jury, denounced the Camden minister in unmeasured terms for performing the ceremony under such circumstances, when a glance at the bride in her short dress and with her hair hanging girlishly down her back ought to have convinced him that she was a child. He declared that if the minister were within the jurisdiction of the Court there would be two prisoners in the dock instead of one. As the jury rendered a verdict of guilty against the bridegroom, and he was sentenced to three years' imprisonment, it is to be regretted that Camden was outside the Court's jurisdiction.

THERES, famed in song and story, has suffered more from the recent earthquake than from the silent attacks of centuries, and infinitely more than from the siege that Æschlus has made not less renowned than that of Troy. Athens, too, has suffered, though in less degree. But far more serious than any destruction of venerable marble or of historic stone is the devastation of villages and regions populated by humble vine dressers and fishermen, and the sudden ending of hundreds of joyous lives. Measured by an American standard, the pecuniary loss cannot be prodigious. But the loss to the peasants and the vine dressers is total. All that they had is gone, and far beyond the loss of property is the loss of life. The sound of the modern Rachel weeping for her children, and refusing to be comforted because they are not, comes to us across the interlying seas. These are spiritual sounds that need no aid of telephone. They are carried upon the wings of the wind, and penetrate the secret nerves of the world.

THE semi-annual massacre of the members of the notorious Dalton gang of cutthroats and highwaymen was celebrated with the usual eclat recently, this time near Ingalls, in Oklahoma Territory. While reports from the scene of the festivities are rather meager, it is quite certain that three of the Dalton gang were fatally wounded, and two of the officers were killed. This is not the usual generous showing, but the comparatively small notoriety is no doubt due to the fact that this is an off year. Possibly, however, it may be that the correspondents on the scene are less murderous than heretofore. Time was when they scorned to send any report of the exciting proceedings unless the working majority of the Dalton gang was cold in death, and an entire Sheriff's posse full of lead bullets. Statisticians who have kept their eye on the career of the desperate Western crew of desperadoes hold that according to the records, at least 164 Daltons have been killed outright, 227 fatally wounded, and 963 slightly wounded, all in the brief space of three years. The semi-annual holocausts have been held in every State and Territory west of the Mississippi River during that time, and the deputies of every Sheriff in every county in those States have at one period or another faced the desperadoes in mortal combat. The extent of the Dalton fatalities have prevented any manager from attempting to present a truthful stage picture of the career of the gang, as too large a company would be required for its adequate performance. This is the one bright spot in the carnival of rapine and murder. The next capture of the gang is booked for October.

Boy Character.

It is the greatest delusion in the world for a boy to get the idea that his life is of no consequence, and that the character of it will not be noticed. A manly, truthful boy will shine like a star in any community. A boy may possess as much of noble character as a man. He may so speak and so live the truth that there shall be no discount on his word. And there are such noble Christian boys; and wider and deeper than they are apt to think is their influence. They are the king boys among their fellows, having an immense influence for good, and loved and respected because of the simple fact of living the truth.

Dear boys, do be truthful. Keep your word as absolutely sacred. Keep your appointments at the house of God. Be known for your fidelity to the interests of the church and Sunday-school. Be true to every friendship. Help others to be and do good. —Child's Paper.

The Standard of True Refinement.

A certain punctilious old gentleman used to say that no true lady would ever wear a stocking with a hole in it. The same idea was voiced by a young girl of a later generation, who declared that she never felt like a lady when there was a button off her shoe. Each put into words an appreciation of the fact that more is required than outward correctness of appearance to mark the woman whose innate impulses are all toward refinement.

As the man of thorough breeding is to be recognized by his bearing to his inferiors rather than by his conduct to his equals, as the good housekeeper is judged by the condition of her cellar and pantries rather than by the state of her parlors, so is the truly refined lady distinguished more by the unnoticeable minutiæ of her dress than by the general outward effect.—Demorest's Magazine.

"What makes Smith stutter? He didn't use to." "Well, you see, when he asks a man to loan him $5, and says it over three times, he sometimes gets fifteen."

ADDLED CENSUS STATISTICS.

Protected Manufacturers Who Will Not "Give Away" Their Business.

Not until we have no protected industries will we have any reliable statistics of our industries. Specially favored industries are not likely to "give themselves away" by producing statistics that would cause an agitation for the withdrawal of the special favors. If such industries produce any statistics at all they are about certain to misrepresent, if they do not actually pervert, facts.

The Sugar Trust, which refines about 90 per cent. of our sugar, refused to give any statistics whatever, to the Census Department, concerning its largest refineries. The matter was placed in the hands of the Attorney General, but in spite of his efforts the Sugar Trust has persistently and successfully defied the census laws. One reason why it has done so is because it could not easily juggle its statistics so that they would not show that sugar is refined for less than one-third of a cent per pound instead of over one-half cent, as the refiners claim when they ask for the continuation of protective duties. Then, again the total labor cost of refining sugar is now less than one-tenth of a cent per pound, while the refiners are protected by duties of five-tenths and six-tenths cents per pound, ostensibly to cover the "difference of labor cost" of refining between this and foreign countries. Under such circumstances it is unsafe to attempt to juggle statistics, and the trust wisely acted upon the maxim that "silence is golden."

Strange to say, Labor Commissioner Carroll D. Wright, now in charge of the census work, has sent out reports purporting to give the totals of manufactures, and the manufactures in 165 of our largest cities, in which he makes no specific mention of the refusal of this great industry to comply with census laws, and in which he says that the "comparatively few" omissions to produce statistics "affect the statistical value of the data but slightly." The omission in this one industry probably exceeds $100,000,000. Even a few such omissions would seriously affect the statistical value of manufacturing statistics.

Take another protected industry—that of shirts, collars and cuffs. Troy, N. Y., is the principal center of this industry. It claims to make over 10 per cent. of all linen collars and cuffs and about 20 per cent. of all linen shirts made in this country. It is this Troy industry that has caused Congressman Haines and Senator Murphy to forget which platform they stood upon when elected. The duty on shirts is 55 per cent. ad valorem; on collars and cuffs 30 cents per dozen pieces and 35 per cent., amounting to over 65 per cent.

The census of 1890 gives the total value of shirts, collars and cuffs manufactured in Troy as $6,217,785; the average number of employes, 8,713; total wages paid, $2,474,255. The average yearly wages, then, are $283; average weekly wages, $5.60. The wages paid equal 39 per cent. of the value of the product.

These statistics, though official and sent to the census officials by the manufacturers themselves, were not at all satisfactory for purposes of retaining highly protective duties. Now, when these manufacturers were suddenly notified by Congressman Haines that they could have a hearing before the Ways and Means Committee, if they would go to Washington at once, what did they do? They had not time to manufacture new statistics; to use those of the census of 1890 was out of the question. Because, as one of the manufacturers' Tariff Committee has since said, the census made the total value of the product "ridiculously low." As a last resort they resurrected some statistics prepared for the Ways and Means Committee in 1888. These they presented as "from latest statistics obtainable, and which are substantially correct to-day." They said nothing about the age of the statistics, but attached statements which would lead the committee to believe that the statistics were from the census of 1890 or for a later year, instead of for 1887. These statistics showed "annual sales" of $9,902,685.49; wages paid, $4,289,299.45; whole numbers of employes, 15,749. This shows an average yearly wages of $272.35, or weekly wages of $5.44. The manufacturers stated that wages were 44½ per cent. of sales, though their statistics make the percentage but 43½. The manufacturers stated that wages were 60 per cent. of cost. The total cost then of goods sold for $9,902,685 is $7,148,832, and the profit $2,753,853. The average profit on sales, therefore, was 38½ per cent., and the profits on the capital employed ($5,000,000) were 55 per cent.

If the manufacturers had analyzed their statistics in this manner, or had supposed that the "wicked Democrats" would do so, they would perhaps have preferred the census figures, which showed only a profit of about 20 per cent. on the capital invested and 13 per cent. on the sales.

How now were these manufacturers' statistics prepared, which have done duty in Congress since 1887 and in several of Peck's New York State labor reports? The manufacttrers, being suspicious of each other, would not permit any committee of manufacturers to examine books or see statements. The banker tabulated the statements, and announced the result. No means were employed to criticise or correct misstatements; any manufacturer could hand in whatever figure he might please to the banker: the banker may have patriotically increased Troy's linen industry 50 per cent. while it was passing through his hands.

This is the way in which statistics were prepared "specially for the Tariff committee of 1888," as one of the manufacturers says. They liked the plan so well that they have, within a few weeks, prepared in this way, statistics for the Senate Finance Committee, which shows a total product of over $11,000,000.

It should be observed that the manufacturers and their representatives in Congress have always claimed that the average weekly wages in Troy is about $8. Also that the census reports but twelve shirt, collar and cuff establishments in Troy in 1890, while the manufacturers claim twenty-seven.

It is quite certain that the census statistics are incomplete, if not otherwise inaccurate. It is also quite certain that the statistics of the manufacturers are not now, and never were, accurate. Some of the manufacturers may make 55 per cent. on the capital employed, but it is improbable that the average is so high. In fact, they are always ready to assert that the average profits are not above 6 or 7 per cent. This rate, however, is undoubtedly too low. It does not account for the score or more of men who have grown wealthy in a few years from the manufacture of shirts, collars and cuffs in Troy.

It is probable that the statistics of hundreds of other protected industries, if examined carefully, would show the same unsatisfactory results. The census reports are unreliable if not worthless, as regards manufactures, because of omitted or "juggled" statistics from the protected industries.—Byron W. Holt.

Tariff Literature in Great Demand.

The tariff question is not dead. It will not be settled by the passage of the Wilson bill. This much can be stated positively because the people are just beginning to get very much interested in the tariff question and to read and reflect on the subject. The demand for tariff speeches is said to be greater than ever before. Several millions of copies of speeches have already been distributed, an unusual proportion of them going to the manufacturing centers of the East.

Tom Johnson's speeches are, perhaps, in greatest demand. He has had an edition of 250,000 printed and may have to duplicate it. He is the steel rail manufacturer who exposed the steel rail trust and showed the absurdity and injustice of leaving any duty on steel rails. The value of his speech, however, consists more in in his frank and honest declarations in favor of absolute free trade and of Democratic principles.

Chairman Wilson's speeches are in great demand, and 100,000 have already been sent out. His speech, though not so radical as Johnson's, presents an honest front, and deals with the various schedules of the bill in a very satisfactory manner.

Burrows and Reed are each said to have sent out more than 100,000 of their speeches. Burke Cockran has sent out nearly 100,000. Other speeches in great demand are these of John De Witt Warner, Benton McMillin, Jerry Simpson, Uriel S. Hall, William D. Bynum, Michael D. Harter, W. J. Bryan, W. A. McKeighan, and Henry G. Turner.

The more the farmers, mechanics, and factory hands read these speeches the more certain it is that the tariff question will never be settled as long as one tariff duty is left on top of another—for they do rest upon each other.

Allison's Flip-Flop.

"The tariff of 1846, although confessedly and professedly a tariff for revenue, was, so far as regards all the great interests of the country, as perfect a tariff as any that we have ever had. When we compare the growth of the country from 1840 to 1850 with the growth of the country from 1850 to 1860, the latter decade being entirely under the tariff of 1846, or the amended and greatly reduced tariff of 1857, we find that the increase in our wealth between 1850 and 1860 was equivalent to 126 per cent., while it was only 64 per cent. between 1840 and 1850, four years of which decade were under the tariff of 1842, known as a high protective tariff. Our industries were generally prosperous in 1860, with the exception possibly of the iron industry. This was the statement of Mr. Morrill, of Vermont, during the discussion of the tariff of 1864."

The above paragraph is from a speech of Wm. B. Allison, delivered in 1870 while he was a Republican member of the House of Representatives from an Iowa district. This is the same Wm. B. Allison, now a Senator from Iowa, who opened the debate for the Republicans in opposition to the Wilson tariff bill, in which he said that there was not an industry in the country that would not be injured by the bill, while many would be strangled to death.

Mr. Allison in 1870 demonstrated that the bill of 1846 brought prosperity, as did Mr. Blaine in his book. The figures submitted have never been discredited, and they cannot be. The trouble about the Wilson bill is that it is not so radical a measure of revenue reform as the bill of 1846. If Mr. Allison opposed it for this reason he would be on strong ground. But he opposes it on the opposite ground, which is a radical departure from the sound views which he and Mr. Blaine once entertained and avowed.—New Age.

Speedy Action Needed.

If the Wilson bill is to be defeated it must be defeated by votes and not by talk, and if it can be defeated by votes that fact could be made apparent in four weeks' time just as well as in four months' time. If it cannot be defeated and must become a law, it is the opinion of manufacturers, merchants and other business men in this part of the country that the sooner it is enacted and the present suspense is over, the better. Business can adjust itself to known conditions, even though these may seem to some merchants and manufacturers exceedingly onerous, while it is utterly impossible to accommodate business to conditions that are absolutely unknown. The former state may be hard to endure, but the latter is paralyzing, and as we have before remarked, those of our contemporaries whe have been urging the Republican minority in the Senate to adopt the policy of filibustering have shown in so doing an entire want of business sagacity. What they have urged may seem to be shrewd policy from a political point of view, but the lives of the great mass of our people are not bound up indissolubly in politics. They and their families are very much more concerned with the possibilities of having business carried on in an active and fairly prosperous manner.—Boston Herald.

A Genuine Speech.

General debate in the Senate on the tariff bill reached a brilliant and worthy close Tuesday in the speech of that grand and undiscouraged tariff reformer, Roger Q. Mills, of Texas. It was the speech of a statesman, as contrasted with the utterances of petifogging politicians: it lifted the debate to the level of which a question of such vast import should be discussed; and it was a genuine speech, not an essay read from proofs or manuscript. Not the least striking passage of a speech which was impressive throughout was that in which Senator Mills declared in ringing words that if forty-four members on his side of the chamber were of the same opinion as he, and the forty-fifth in the Vice President's chair, he would pass the tariff bill in less than forty-eight hours. In closing Mr. Mills said:

Mr. President, there is a duty devolving upon this body. It cannot be excused. We must pass this bill and make it as good as we can, but pass it. We must not only pass it but we must stop this business of continually talking about the bill. The American people have made up their minds about this measure. We were not sent up here to discuss this for a whole year. We have been here nearly a year discussing this question of taxation since they sent us here to execute their will. They have tried and condemned the present system. They have told us to sweep it into banishment. They did not send us here to hear arguments for a new trial; they sent us here to execute their judgment and to drive the criminal out of the country, and restore prosperity and bring the people and the country back to the enjoyment of their natural rights. That is our duty.

It is our duty to so order the parliamentary rules of this body that we can close this debate and thus bring this matter to an issue. I do not care what the traditions of this body are as to debate. In the early history of the body there was no such thing as filibustering known. It began with the agitation of the slavery question, but now it is here in defiance of all laws and the minority boldly assume that they will prevent the majority from executing its will. I will say that if the forty-four members of this side of the chamber were of the same opinion that I am (and the forty-fifth is in the Vice President's chair) I would pass this bill in less than forty-eight hours. We have been sent here to execute the judgment of the people, to restore to them the right to work and their right to enjoy the benefits of their work, not to wait until they are starved to death, not to wait until the whole land is paralyzed, not to wait until thousands of them are in their graves, but now to pass the bill and put it on the statute books and let business and prosperity revive in the country. Sir, whenever we do that then conditions will be changed, the night will disappear, darkness and distress will leave the land and a new day will dawn upon it, prosperity will come to all our borders, happiness will be in all our bosoms.

The Parrots Are Learning.

The processes of education are slow but sure. Two months ago the World stated in its Washington dispatches that the income tax would secure more votes in the Senate than any other feature of the Tariff bill. It stated in explanation of this that any defection on the part of Democrats would be more than made up by Republicans who would vote for the income-tax feature while opposed to the bill as a whole.

The parrots were too busy with their "monarchical" and "inquisitorial" chatter to give any heed to this, but knowledge has overtaken them unawares. Recently one of their organs announced with gusto, as "a new and important turn," the information which to the World's readers is two months old. It discovered that the thirteen silver Republicans are almost sure to vote for the income-tax proposition, and that Senator Allison, of Iowa, and Hale, of Maine, "may add their names to the income-tax column." According to this estimate the opponents of the tax will be able to muster only 33 votes, while its friends will have 52 votes, a majority of 19. There is no likelihood that the majority for the tariff bill as a whole will be more than a fourth as large.

Another fact which the parrots will learn later is that if the Senate should vote it down the income tax would remain in the bill as finally passed. After the Senate acts the House has its turn again, and no one knowing the temper of the House believes there is the least likelihood that it would accept a bill from which the income tax has been stricken in order to give the Sugar Trust and the Whisky Trust what they demand.—New York World.

Magnetized the Bayonets.

A singular aberration of the sidearms of marines on board English ships is reported. It appears that the bayonets belonging to the marines have, in many cases, become highly magnetized through contact with, or close proximity to, dynamos, and the result is that compasses have become affected by sentries passing near there when wearing these sidearms. An order has been issued that in future sentries are not to wear sidearms when on duty in the neighborhood of dynamos, and it is expected that this will overcome the difficulty.—Electrical Review.

FLATHEAD VALLEY.

A PICTURESQUE AND DECIDEDLY FERTILE REGION.

Rich Farming Lands—Excellent Timber—Varied Mineral Wealth—Large Rivers and Lakes—Mild and Healthful Climate—A Paradise for Sportsmen.

Garden of the Northwest.

Kalispell, Mont., correspondence:

In only two localities in the United States can the Rocky Mountains be seen from a steamboat, and both of these are in Montana; first on the Missouri River at Fort Benton, east of the range, and then on the Flathead river and lake, west of it. Surprises await the tourist who descends into the mountain-girted valley of the Flathead, where he finds everything of a magnitude in keeping with the general features of Western Montana, where Nature has created rivers, lakes, forests, prairies, and valleys upon a large scale. The Flathead, instead of being a shallow rivulet dashing down the mountain sides, is a majestic stream larger than the Mississippi at St. Paul. Flathead Lake is the largest body of fresh water west of the great lakes, and is but one of a number of pretty bodies of water scattered over the valley. Situated upon the Pacific side of the continent, the climate gives mild winters and fine summers, much in contrast with the seasons in the same parallel on the Atlantic coast. There are no blizzards and cyclones. The liberal rainfall has nurtured forests of pine and other trees, not only on the mountain sides, but in the valley itself, the timber being interlaced with prairies which give the country a park-like appearance resembling the oak openings of Michigan, Ohio, and New York. Unlike the soil where pine grows in other localities, here it is rich loam and makes the best kind of agricultural land when cleared.

"Seeing is believing" is an adage as old as it is true, and there are those so incredulous that only with reluctance will they accept any but this kind of proof. To all such a visit to this valley is a source of delight, and the common admission is that "the half has never been told." What a change, too, after the magnificent trip through the Rockies, over which the railway has conquered a path, solid and safe, to pass down among peaceful and attractive prairies with cultivated fields and gardens, and see busy towns with hundreds of people engaged in the pursuits of peace and home-seeking, where only a short time ago a few Indians roamed in search of game and fish. A few years and thousands more whites will be here sharing the plenty industry is certain to give all willing to woo the earth with its treasures of field, mine, forest and water.

Flathead County, formed by the last Legislature, has an area of 7,100 square miles, a territory larger than the States of Connecticut and Rhode Island combined. The Great Northern Railway from its first station in the county on the east to its last on the west runs a distance of 198 miles. The Flathead River and tributaries, with logging waters aggregating 600 miles in length, converge at Kalispell, and the manufacture of lumber and shingles is becoming an important industry. The principal forest trees are the cedar, fir, birch, pine, and tamarack, the latter often attaining a diameter of six feet, instead of being a mere telegraph pole as in the east. It makes fine furniture, samples of which were seen in the Montana Building at the World's Fair.

There is much that is attractive from a health-giving, scenic and sporting standpoint in this region. Snow peaks are in view all the year round, and the winters are seldom cold enough to close the streams to navigation. Lake McDonald, near by, is becoming a noted resort. Among the visitors last summer were Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, and Vice President Webb, of the New York Central Railroad. Lakes and streams abound with trout and the hunter has chances to look along his gun barrel at deer and grouse. Farmers distant from town are said to build high fences around their gardens to keep the deer out. Skins to be seen at stores show that bear are still to be found.

The mountains in all directions contain precious and base metals, and in the northern part of the county large beds of coal and petroleum springs exist. Railway surveyors have been over a route to this section and also on a line south to Anaconda and Butte. New sources of wealth making are being constantly brought to light as settlement progresses from the common centers along the railway, which gives connections between St. Paul, Minneapolis and Puget Sound. Much of the country is still Government land, and valuable tracts of timber and farming land can be taken up under the homestead law. Two years ago the site of Kalispell was a vacant spot on the prairie; now it has over 2,000 people, several banks, three newspapers, schools, churches, electric lights, waterworks, large flouring mill, saw mills, business houses and excellent hotels.

The other towns along the Great Northern Railway in this country are Columbia Falls, Pleasant Valley, Jennings, Troy and Libby Creek, the latter being a prominent point in the Kootenai mining district. Jennings is a steamer point for the Fort Steele gold district in British Columbia. Kalispell is county seat and division point of the Great Northern Railway, with a two-story brick passenger depot and office building. The writer is under obligations to C. E. Conrad, President of the Conrad National Bank, Kalispell, Mont., for printed matter and other information. All applicants and inquirers will get prompt attention from the same gentleman.

Electric Wires.

Some writer very aptly likens the nerves to electric wires, and the general working of their system to that of electric cars. A man who "slips his trolley" like Mr. Jeremiah Eney, 1812 W. Lombard St., Baltimore, Md., will need something better than even a galvanic battery to set him all right. Mr. Eney found that something in the following way. "I suffered" he says, "a long time with neuralgia in the head. I gave St. Jacobs Oil a fair trial and am entirely cured." In this way the great remedy acts as a mortorman to restore broken wires, and set the system to perfect action.

A Remarkable Plant.

The kobea scandens is a most remarkable annual of late becoming popular with lovers of plants. It runs up a house like a lightning rod if permitted to have its own way, but may be made to branch and spread so as to form an excellent screen. One of the Central Park gardeners finds that the plant may be transferred to the greenhouse upon the approach of winter and made to keep on growing indefinitely. A kobea is now growing in one of the propagating houses of the Central Park nursery, and the gardener in charge says that it could be easily made to serve instead of whitewashed glass to temper the sun's rays to delicate young plants.—New York Sun.

RIOTERS SHOT DOWN.

MOB OF COKE STRIKERS MEET WITH BULLETS.

Wives of Strikers Precipitate a Bloody Conflict—Guards Fire on the Amazons—Excitement Throughout the Region—More Trouble Predicted.

Fifteen Laid Low.

The coke strike resulted in a bloody riot at the Painter works, near Scottdale, Pa., in which fifteen persons, including a number of women, were shot, several of them fatally. The trouble was started by a mob of women, wives of the strikers, who had determined to drive out the "blacklegs" at work for the McClure Coke Company. The women assembled about six o'clock in the morning, and with tin pans, clubs, cokeforks, and brooms marched to the cokeyard. Sanford White, mine superintendent; Ewing B. Roddy, book-keeper, and a lot of deputies were on guard. A shot was fired to scare the women. In less than a minute the men living in the houses near by rushed to the scene and White opened fire on the crowd, that numbered over one hundred. The affray occurred between blocks of ovens, and at the first fire from White and the deputies three men fell, wounded. One was shot through the thigh, one through both legs and the third in the neck. The women carried off the wounded, and the now infuriated men set upon White and Roddy, whom they seemed to regard as responsible for the shooting. Before a sufficient number of deputies could be massed at this point Sanford White was completely surrounded. He was brutally beaten over the head, knocked down, kicked and bruised about the body. His recovery is doubtful.

While all this was going on the deputies had begun to use their Winchesters, and shot one woman. Roddy, the bookkeeper, was thought at first to be badly injured, but he escaped with only slight bruises. There is great excitement throughout the entire region. The strikers are becoming desperate, and mobs are assembling at various points to raid the plants now in operation. The operators and leaders of the strike predict turbulent times within the next few days.

DEMOCRATS VOTE ON TARIFF.

Senators in Caucus Agree Upon the Compromise Measure.

Incomes will be taxed and the tariff bill will soon pass the Senate, says a Washington dispatch. By a vote of 37 to 1 the Democratic members of the Senate adopted a resolution in caucus agreeing to support the tariff bill of the Finance Committee, including the compromise amendments that have been agreed upon in the conferences of the last two weeks. The e amendments do not materially affect the income tax provision. The vote in the caucus was as follows:

Absent and Not Voting—Murphy, Mills, Lindsay, Irby, Butler, Gibson—6.

The resolution was presented by Senator Gorman of Maryland, the chairman of the caucus, and was discussed at some length, as the session lasted from a few minutes after four o'clock until nearly seven o'clock. It was claimed that the six absent Senators were all accounted for, and assurances were given that they would support the tariff bill. The only persons in whose absence there might be any significance are Senators Murphy and Mills. Senator Mills was not at the Senate during the day, and the call for the caucus was sent to his house. It is believed that he has some objections to the concessions that have been made, but he has previously announced that he would support any bill that provided for reductions in the present law.

In presenting the resolution and stating the object of the caucus, Senator Gorman made a conciliatory speech. He said it was necessary to make concessions in order to secure the united support of the party, and he further asserted that it would need a Democratic majority to pass the bill. Secator Smith said, while he was not satisfied with the bill, and was unalterably opposed to the income tax, he was ready to support the measure with the amendments which had been agreed upon.

PUTTING DOWN THE RIOTS.

Magazine Broken Open and a Quantity of Dynamite Stolen.

A Duluth, Minn., special says: There has been conside able rioting on the Mesaba range. Gov. Nelson called out the militia, and latest reports are to the effect that they are quelling the trouble. Word was received from Virginia that 700 strikers were marching up and down the streets denouncing the owners of the mines and the men still at work in the most violent terms. Much excitement was caused at Virginia when it was learned that a magazine at a mine near the village had been broken open during the night and a number of kegs of gunpowder and some dynamite seized. About 500 men were out. The militiamen were greeted with hoots and jeers while they were forming in line.

The seat of greatest trouble seems to be at the Franklin mine, where the men claim that the wages paid are not sufficient to live on. They have been getting 20 cents a car. At the Oliver and Auburn mines and on the Auburn spur $1.35 to $1.50 day was paid. The men demand $1.65 for miners and $1.50 for common labor.

A strikers' committee was in conference with the owners and managers of the mines nearly all the afternoon and evening. Sheriff Sharvy and the militia have been called to Mountain Iron, where an outbreak in which there was some shooting is reported, and preparations were made to move at once to that place, leaving Virginia for the time being to the mercy of the strikers. As the strike covers much territory it is quite probable that more of Duluth's militiamen will be called out. The men are in waiting.

Arbitration Settles It.

Arbitration as proposed by the company has happily settled the difference between employes and the Great Northern Railway, and wheels are again turning on all parts of the line. The company now announces half-fare excursions for homeseekers and investors May 8 and 29 from St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth, and West Superior to points in Minnesota, the Dakotas, and Montana. Tickets good for thirty days, with stop-over privileges.

THE NATION'S SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

Personalities entered largely into the debate on the tariff bill in the Senate Monday. Senator Turpie made a bitter attack on Senator Aldrich, whom he accused of uttering falsehoods. When the House met at noon Mr. Meiklejohn, called up the Senate bill for the construction of a bridge across the Niobrara River, near the town of Nebraska City, Neb., and it passed. At 12:27 the House went into committee of the whole to consider the army appropriation bill. Mr. Outhwaite offered a committee amendment that no appointment of Assistant Adjutant General with rank of Major should be made until the number of officers in that grade had been reduced below four, and that hereafter there should be only four officers in said grade, and that future promotions in the adjutant general's, paymaster's, and smaller branches should be filled from the next lowest grades. The amendment was agreed to by a vote of 49 to 88. Mr. Pickler offered an amendment that no officer of the army should be detailed to act as Indian agent unless the President should consider it best to do so. The chairman ruled the amendment out on a point of order. The appropriation for the purchase of machine guns, improved musket caliber, was raised from $10,000 to $20,000. An amendment offered by Mr. Frye, striking out the provision that hereafter no appointments should be made to the grade of assistant surgeon until the number is reduced to ninety, and that the number hereafter should not exceed ninety, was disagreed to by the vote of 62 to 95. At 5 o'clock the committee of the whole arose, and the bill, with amendments, was reported to the House and at 5:11 p. m. it passed. The House then adjourned.

In respect to the late Senator Stockbridge, the Senate adjourned Tuesday afternoon, appointing a committee of seven with a committee from the House of Representatives to attend the funeral at Kalamazoo, Mich. The session of the House was brief, also, on account of the death of Senator Stockbridge, relative to which appropriate resolutions were moved by Mr. Burrows and adopted, and Messrs. Burrows, Bynum, McCreary, Boutelle, Payne (New York), Aitken, Thomas and Richardson were appointed a committee to attend the funeral.

The Senate proceedings were rather dull Wednesday, most of the afternoon being consumed by Senator Squire, of Washington, who made a carefully prepared speech in general opposition to the tariff. Before the tariff bill was taken up Mr. Hoar tried to pass his anti-lottery bill, but it ultimately went over without action. The House at 12:35 took up the bill to improve the methods of accounting in the Treasury Department, and it was agreed that general debate on the bill should be limited to two hours. The House went into committee of the whole, with Mr. Hatch, of Missouri, in the chair. At present the offices affected by the bill employ 759 clerks at a cost of $1,065,760. Under the pending bill there will be 624 clerks at an annual cost of $886,000. Mr. Wanger, of Pennsylvania, moved to amend the last paragraph by changing the date for the bill to go into effect from July 1, 1894, to July 1, 1895. The amendment was disagreed to. The committee rose and the bill was passed without amendment. The House again went into committee of the whole to consider appropriation bills, and Mr. Catching called up the river and harbor appropriation bill. Mr. Grosvenor, of Ohio, opposed the passage of a bill carrying nearly $9,000,000 without some further explanation. At 5 o'clock the committee rose and the House adjourned without taking any action on the bill.

The Senate listened Thursday to two installments of two unfinished speeches on the tariff, tried to go into executive session, failed because of lack of a quorum, and adjourned. No business was transacted in the morning hour in the House, the regular order being demanded when it was sought to obtain consideration of a bill. The time of the House from 12:24 until 4 o'clock was taken up in the consideration of the river and harbor bill. Speeches were made by Messrs. Cannon, Wendock, Ellis, Hepburn and Ray. At 4 o'clock Mr. Catchings sought to have general debate close at 5 o'clock. Some opposition was developed when Mr. Catchings moved to close debate in twenty minutes, and on this demanded the previous question, which was ordered, and his motion was agreed to. Discussion was resumed, and Mr. Boatner opposed the method of improving the Red River in Louisiana according to the present plan. At 5:30 the House adjourned.

The House Friday went into committee of the whole, on motion of Mr. Catchings, for the purpose of considering the river and harbor bill, with Mr. Hatch in the chair. The appropriation for the outer harbor at Michigan City, Mich., was reduced from $16,000 to $11,000, and the sum taken from this appropriation was added to the appropriation for the inner harbor at the same point, making it $10,000. Mr. Boen offered an amendment appropriating $10,000 for a survey of the Red River of the North, which was defeated. An amendment was agreed to appropriating $8,000 for the rectification of the channel of the White River in Arkansas. Mr. Ellis offered an amendment increasing the appropriation for rebuilding lock No. 2 in Green River, Kentucky, from $85,000 to $105,000. The consideration of the bill without action being taken on any further amendments was continued until shortly after 6 o'clock, when the committee of the whole rose, reported the bill to the House and it was passed. The Senate continued its tariff debate.

To Her Art.

Madame D'Albertin, one of the lesser painters of France, was as conceited about her artistic ability as she was notorious for her excessive use of cosmetics of all kinds. Her face was a study in enamel, rouge and penciling, and the older she grew the more pronounced it became. On one occasion, a certain count, who held her in much disesteem, lost a bet to her.

"And what will madame choose?" he asked, with mock courtesy.

"Something in my art," she simpered; "something I can paint."

"Very well, madame," he replied, bowing himself out.

A day later madame received a package from the count, which, upon being opened, revealed a life-size drawing of her own face in outline.

Memorial Service.

An exchange tells the following story of the pie-shop in London before which Charles Dickens used to stand when, as a child, he drudged in a blacking factory. Every day, on the way to and from his work, he paused to devour the viands with his eyes, and sometimes he pressed his tongue to the window-pane, as if by so doing he got a taste of the good things which were "so near and yet so far."

An American railroad man who admires Dickens hunted up this pie-shop when in London in order to gratify his curiosity and his sentiment. It proved to be a mere box of a place in a poor quarter of the city, but the original business was still carried on there. As the traveller peered into the shadowy interior, a voice was heard at his elbow:

"Please, sir, will you buy me a weal pie?"

The owner of the voice was a small, dishevelled person, with whom a pie of veal, or anything else of a "hearty" nature, would have agreed right well.

"How many boys do you think this shop will hold?" asked the American.

"I dunno. About fifteen or sixteen, I should think."

"Well, go and get fifteen boys, and bring them back here."

The boy studied the man's face for a moment, as if to make sure that he was in the enjoyment of his senses, and then with a yell hurried into a side street. Hardly a minute elapsed before he returned at the head of a procession of sixteen gamins, of assorted sizes, unanimous in appetite and hope.

This ragged battalion assembled close behind its benefactor and followed him into the shop, where he announced that he was going to give all the boys all the pie they wanted. They wanted a great deal, as it proved; their capacity for "weal pie" was something marvellous. But their benefactor was as good as his word, and sixteen happy and satisfied boys left the shop singing his praises.

One member of the party was a small maid of 9, and to her the young soldier devoted most of his attention. "Here," said the soldier, as they stood before two worn brass cannon, "are two guns we took from your people at the battle of Bunker Hill," and he smiled in triumph.

Nonplussed for a moment, the child was still, then she looked up. "Come home with me," she said softly, "and I'll show you a whole country we took away from your people about the same time."—Life.

Hard Times for Buzzards.

"A sight so strange I could hardly credit my own eyes," said Justice John W. Streaker of Jonestown, at the court house to-day, "was that of a red fox surrounded by a multitude of buzzards, which had evidently determined to devour the little animal. The birds with their wings raised as if to do battle, seemed about to close in on the fox. He was very much alarmed, and as soon as I scared his tormentors away he made off on a double quick. His troubles were not yet ended, however, for away in the distance I observed a flock of crows fly down at him and peck him unmercifully, but he finally escaped to the woods"—Baltimore Sun.

A NO-TO-BAC MIRACLE

PHYSICAL PERFECTION PREVENTED BY THE USE OF TOBACCO.

An Old-Timer of Twenty-three Years' Tobacco Chewing and Smoking Cured, and Gains Twenty Pounds in Thirty Days.

LAKE GENEVA, Wis., May 5.—Special. The ladies of our beautiful little town are making an interesting and exciting time for tobacco-using husbands, since the injurious effects of tobacco and the ease with which it can be cured by a preparation called No-To-Bac have been so plainly demonstrated by the cure of Mr. F. C. Waite. In a written statement he says: "I smoked and chewed tobacco for twenty-three years, and I am sure that my case was one of the worst in this part of the country. Even after I went to bed at night, if I woke up I would want to chew or smoke. It was not only killing me but my wife was also ailing from the injurious effects. Two boxes of No-To-Bac cured me, and I have no more desire for tobacco than I have to jump out of the window. I have gained twenty pounds in thirty days, my wife is well, and we are indeed both happy to say that No-To-Bac is truly 'worth its weight in gold' to us."

The cure and improvement in Mr. Waite's case is looked upon as a miracle—in fact, it is the talk of the town and county, and it is estimated that over a thousand tobacco users will be using No-To-Bac within a few weeks. The peculiarity about No-To-Bac as a patent medicine is that the makers, the Sterling Remedy Company, No. 45 Randolph street, Chicago, absolutely guarantee the use of three boxes to cure or refund the money, and the cost, $2.50, is so trifling as compared with the expensive and unnecessary use of tobacco that tobacco-using husbands have no good excuse to offer when their wives insist upon their taking No-To-Bac and getting result in the way of pure, sweet breath, wonderful improvement in their mental and physical condition, with a practical revitalization of their nicotized nerves

A Long-Sought Material.

The production of a new glass having the valuable property of supporting sudden variations of temperature has been announced by two German chemists, Winklemann and Schott. Retorts and other laboratory utensils made of this glass could be exposed without any precaution to flame of a Bunsen burner or even of a blowpipe. This means, to the chemist at least, a great economy, for much heat is lost by the ordinary process of interposing wire gauze between the flame and the utensil, and it is claimed that liquids can be heated in the new glass with less than half the time and gas necessary by the usual method.—Boston Herald.

Bogus Barber Shop Bay Rum.

The fluid that the barber applies to the face and neck of the customer, after shaving is supposed by many to be bay rum, but in the majority of cases it is only a base imitation. The article has an odor much like bay rum and that is all. Modern chemistry has evolved a great number of fakes, and a liquid from coal tar that resembles the oil of the bay leaf is one of them. With one ounce of the bogus material a barber can convert one gallon of water into the favorite face wash.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Did You Ever Meet a Truly Good Man?

No doubt you think you have, but we'll wager a dime or so he did not have the rheumatism. If he did, he swore occasionally, and no man can be truly good who swears occasionally. Health, nerve tranquility and morality are apt to go hand in hand. Painful spasmodic diseases like rheumatism and neuralgia, ruin the temper, make one morose, peevish and rebellious. This is a sad fact, but it is none the less true. Drive away the pain, mollify the temper, restore tranquility of mind in cases of rheumatism and neuralgia with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, an anodyne and tonic of comprehensive range and effect. It healthfully stimulates the kidneys, bladder, stomach, liver and bowels when inactive, and induces sleep and appetite. A very quieting effect, not an unnatural, stupefying one like that of an opiate, is produced by a wineglassful before retiring. It is incomparable in malarial disease.

Kossuth and His Mother.

One of the most painful trials of Kossuth's exile was his inability to be present at the deathbed of his mother. She lived in poverty in Brussels, and she expressed a desire to see her son once more before she died. The Belgian Government of that day would not grant his request to visit her unless he consented to be accompanied wherever he went by an officer of police. He might have concented to this degrading condition, says one biographer, for her sake; but no sooner did his mother hear of it than she herself forbade him to come to her, and she expired in the last days of 1852, blessing him with her dying breath.

Those Pimples

Are tell-tale symptoms that your blood is not right—full of impurities, causing a sluggish and unsightly complexion. A few bottles of S. S. S. will remove all foreign and impure matter, cleanse the blood thoroughly and give a clear and rosy complexion. It is most effectual, and entirely harmless.

Chas. Heaton, 73 Laurel St., Phila., says:—"I have had for years a humor in my blood which made me dread to shave, as small boils or pimples would be cut thus causing shaving to be a great annoyance. After taking three bottles of my face is all clear and smooth as it should be—appetite splendid, sleep well and feel like running a foot race, all from the use of S. S. S."

From away up in British North America comes the following greeting to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Chief Consulting Physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y. Mrs. Allen Sharrard, of Hartney, Selkirk Co., Manitoba, whose portrait, with that of her little boy, heads this article, writes as follows: "I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for 'falling of the womb.' I was troubled with bearing-down pains and pains in my back whenever I would be on my feet any length of time. I was recommended to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which I did with happy results. I feel like a new person after taking three bottles of it."

As we have just heard from the frigid North, we will now introduce a letter received from the Sunny South. The following is from Mrs. J. T. Smith, of Oakfuskee, Cleburne Co., Ala. She writes: "I was afflicted and suffered untold pains and misery, such as no pen can describe, for six years. I was confined to bed most of the time. I expected the cold hand of death every day. I was afflicted with leucorrhœa—with excessive flowing—falling of the womb—bearing down sensation—pain in the small of my back—my bowels costive—smarting, itching and burning in the vagina, also palpitation of the heart. When I began taking your medicine I could not sit up, only a few minutes at a time, I was so weak. I took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription three times per day, I also took his 'Golden Medical Discovery' three times per day and one of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets every night. I have taken seven bottles of the 'Discovery,' seven bottles of the 'Prescription' and five bottles of the 'Pellets.' I took these medicines seven months, regularly, never missed a day. These medicines cured me. I feel as well as I ever did in my life. Four of the best doctors in the land treated my case four years. They all gave me up as hopeless—they said I could not be cured, and could not live. Through the will of God, and your medicines, I have been restored to the best of health." Yours truly,

Mrs J. T. Smith

Mrs. W. O. Gunekol, of No. 1461 South Seventh Street, Terre Haute, Indiana, writes: "I had been suffering from womb trouble for eight years having doctored with the most skillful physicians, but finding only temporary relief from medicines prescribed by them. I was advised by a friend to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which I did, and found, in taking six bottles of the 'Prescription' and two of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' that it has effected a positive cure, for which words cannot express my gratitude for the relief from the great suffering that I so long endured."

Yours truly,

W. O. Gunekol

As a powerful, invigorating, restorative tonic "Favorite Prescription" improves digestion and nutrition thereby building up solid, wholesome flesh, and increasing the strength of the whole system. As a soothing and strengthening nervine "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, nervous exhaustion, nervous prostration, neuralgia, hysteria, spasms, Chorea, or St. Vitus's Dance, and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency. Even insanity, when dependant upon womb disease, is cured by it.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a scientific medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, due to pregnancy, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use will prove very beneficial.

Dr. Pierce's Book (168 pages, illustrated) on "Woman and Her Diseases," giving successful means of Home Treatment, will be mailed in plain envelope, securely sealed from observation on receipt of ten cents to pay postage. See the Doctor's address near the head of this article.

Knows a Good Thing.

There is nothing I have ever used for muscular rheumatism that gives me as much relief as Chamberlain's Pain Balm does. I have been using it for about two years—four bottles in all—as occasion required, and always keep a bottle of it in my home. I believe I know a good thing when I get hold of it, and Pain Balm is the best liniment I have ever met with. W. B. Denny dairyman New Lexington, Ohio. 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

Highly Recommended.

While Mr. T. J. Richey, of Altona, Mo., was traveling in Kansas he was taken violently ill with cholera morbus. He called at a drug store to get some medicine and the druggist recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy so highly he concluded to try it. The result was immediate relief, and a few doses cured him completely. It is made for bowel complaint and nothing else. It never fails. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Well Supply Store.

The veteran well driver, W. S. Purdy, has, in partnership with Ed. Metcalf opened a store of well supplies and fixtures, in the room next south of H. J. Mossey's bakery, on Main St. They will keep a good stock of well supplies, fixtures and repairs and ask all who need anything in this line to give them a call. Both are experienced men in this work and are sure to suit all.

For Lame Back.

The most painful cases of rheumatism may be relieved by a few applications of Chamberlain's Pain Balm; its continued use will cure any case, no matter of how long standing. It is equally beneficial for lame back, pain in the side, pain in the chest, lameness, and in all painful affections requiring an external remedy. A piece of flannel saturated with Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain is superior to any plaster. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

It acts gently on inactive bowels or liver, relieves the kidneys, cures constipation, colds, fevers, nervous headaches, etc., and restores the beauty of health. Ladies and children prefer it. Doctors and druggists recommend it. The Fig Honey Co. of San Francisco. Try a bottle. Only one cent a dose. Matheny & Gerke wholesale and retail agents for DeKalb county.

A Reward of $500.

Will be paid for any case of Rheumatism which cannot be cured by Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedy. This offer is made in good faith by the proprietors, and there is no reasonable excuse for anyone to suffer longer. Any ordinary case will be cured by one treatment, and it is poor economy to suffer when relief can be secured so certainly. The price of a month's treatment—two bottles—is $5, and that is the cost of a cure. Full particulars and testimonials of wonderful cures sent to any address. Drummond Medicine Co., 48 Maiden Lane, New York. 18-19

Great Sales.

The promptness and certainty of its cures have made Chamberlain's Cough Remedy famous. It is intended especially for coughs, colds, croup and whooping coughs, and is the most effectual remedy known for these diseases. Mr. C. B. Main, of Union City, Pa., says: "I have a great sale on Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I warrant every bottle and have never heard of one failing to give entire satisfaction." 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

A Severe Case.

Amos Clark, a prominent man of Clarinda, Iowa, says: Through the recommendation of J. P. Burrows of our city, I gave your Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup a trial in a case of a severe cough. After using it a short time my cough was cured, which fact gives me such great confidence in its merits that upon every occasion I recommend it to my neighbors. Yours, Amos Clark. Sold by all druggists.

Dr. Fruth's Visit

Has been like a ray of sunshine to scores of afflicted. His happy presence always cheers up his callers and many are drawn to him on this account. His wonderful success in this section in treating difficult cases, has won him a rapidly increasing patronage—and why shouldn't it? Don't people find it better and cheaper to employ an expert than a novice? Should not a doctor who treats thousands of different cases monthly and who is in continuous touch with modern scientific developments, be better fitted to give quick relief to the afflicted than one whose surroundings compel him to devote most of his time to common everyday cases? At first thought the rapid growth and present extent of Dr. Fruth's patronage here seems phenominal, but when viewed in the light of understand- it appears only fitting that his remarkable skill should be so liberably recognized. There are hundreds of people in this city and vicinity in whom the germs of some chronic disease are becoming imbedded. Would it not be well for these people to submit their cases to this trained specialist, so that the disease can be nipped in its early stages and the patient be saved years of suffering? Dr. Fruth will be pleased to see you at the Swineford House, Thursday, May 17th Consultation free to all his patients.

A Republican Convention.

The party of great moral ideas has just held a convention to nominate a judge in a judge in the circuit composed of Lagrange and Elkhart counties and there is the account of it, as stated in a republican paper, the Lagrange Register:

The judicial convention for this district which was held at Shipshewana on Thursday of last week was, in numbers, an immense affair. Elkhart county sent two excursion trains, one from Goshen and one from Elkhart, each of ten coaches. Elkhart county had at least 3,000 people there and Lagrange about 1,200. This convention, which from the character of the nominee to be chosen, should have had its proceedings marked with fairness, honor and political integrity. Elkhart county men, however, treated each of these essentials with contempt and ruthlessly trampled them in the mud under their feet. The convention had only one bright spot, which will redound to the honor of two of the candidates, Hon. J. D Ferrall and judge J. M. Vanfleet. The proceedings of their supporters in the convention were conducted with perfect honor and fairness, not a suspicion of wrong doing rests against them. They retired from the convention with honor while the nominee's wished-for ermine is foully soiled with fraud and corruption. The Wilson men, boys, bums, thugs and bruisers from Goshen and the surrounding townships came to the convention to nominate Wilson regardless of principles or common decency. At the organization of the convention Goshen's Klu-Klux, C. W. Miller, gave the signal for tyranny, usurpation and fraud which was taken up by his followers and thoroughly practiced throughout the convention. In Elkhart township ballots were received from single individuals by the tellers by the half dozens and dozens, counted for Wilson; hundreds of boys not over fifteen years old voted for Wilson: men and boys after voting in Elkhart (Goshen) township, made the rounds of the other Wilson townships and voted in each where they knew they could. Quite a number of these Tammany repeaters were followed by Lagrange men and seen to vote in six different townships. This is the history, which can be proven beyond question, of the methods of Wilson's supporters. So shameless and brazen did these proceedings become on the last ballot that Lagrange county withdrew from the convention; the withdrawal being made from the rostrum by Thomas H. Sefton, who was empowered to do so. H. D. Wilson stated to us, when in Lagrange, with much earnestness, that under no circumstances would he accept a nomination for judge which was tainted with fraud. We, therefore, expect to see very soon, if he is an honest man, his declination of the nomination Mr. Wilson is not the nominee of this county, but of Elkhart county only.

It cures blood and skin disorders. It does this quickly and permanently. Is there any good reasons why you should not use DeWitt's Sarsaparilla? It recommends itself.

A Nest-Building Fish.

One of the queerest denizens of the deep, and one which could very properly be called an ichthyological wonder, is the gouramis, the famous nest-building fish of the oriental seas. These fish are very plentiful in the waters of Cochin China, Java, Sumatra and Borneo. At the breeding they pair off like birds, and selecting a favorable spot in shallow water among aquatic plants and grasses build large spherical nests of floating weeds and plaster them over with mud. The broad, flat fins used in this last operation are attached to the abdomen, and are wholly different from anything in the fin line, known to naturalists. The full grown female gouramis is six feet long and weighs one hundred and ten pounds The eggs of this queer fish which are deposited in the mud plastered nest, number from eight hundred to one thousand.

Pure blood means good health. Reinforce it with DeWitt's Sarsaparilla. It purifies the blood, cures eruptions-eczema, scrofula and all diseases arising from impure blood. It recommends itself.

M'NAGNY NOT IN IT.

THE ALBION AND YORK TOWNSHIP DEMOCRATS TURN DOWN THE WHITLEY COUNTY "STATESMAN."

Their Verdict as to His Usefulness.

Albion New Era, May 3.

Saturday afternoon the democrats of the townships of York and Albion met in convention at Howard's Opera House for the purpose of selecting delegates to the conventions of that party to be held in the near future, and it was early manifest that the interest would center in the selection of a delegate to the congressional convention. The McNagny followers had drummed up all their available forces for the contest, while those who are disgusted with the course of the Whitley county "statesman" were also on the alert. Among the latter were nearly all the leading democrats of the two townships—and by leading democrats we mean those who have been life-long defenders and supporters of democratic principles and who have never faltered in their devotion to the party, nor in efforts to secure party success.

These men, and their wishes and opinions, have been entirely ignored by the present congressman, many of whom, in sterling worth and influence as party leaders, stand a head and and shoulders above McNagny. R. L. Stone, a pronounced anti-McNagny man, was the candidate of this faction as a delegate to the congressional convention, and he was chosen by an overwhelming majority, thus giving expression in unmistakable terms to their condemnation of the congressman's acts. As it is in Albion, so is it in all parts of the county and district, and because of the utter disregard of the interests of his party, by ignoring the best elements of that party, McNagny will be confronted in the congressional convention with the opposition of these men, and may be turned down. As soon as the work of selecting delegates was complete some one moved an adjournment, which was carried, thus shutting out the cut-and-dried resolutions laudatory of McNagny that had been prepared, and which would have been presented to the convention. They are now bottled up for future use.

But it didn't look very "military," and they were not very bright recruits. There were also, generally, a number of the "wealers" around the big tub shown in our map, engaged in washing their clothes. It was not fine laundry work, but it helped. These big tanks are those in which hoops were soaked before using. On the second floor the great mass of the "Army of Christ" were stowed away, there being more room, no space being taken up for headquarters or commissary. On this floor, and especially in the wing running towards the east and along the north, as shown in the plat, they were gathering in force. There was to be a concert given by one of the city clubs, and all except a few in charge of the cooking, and a dozen or two tough old bums, gathered around to hear. The singing as well as the playing on the mandolin and guitar, would be called good anywhere, and the wealers cheered heartily. They were especially earnest over those portions of the songs that demanded their "rights," and spoke of sitting down on "our oppressors." In between songs, "Gen" Randall would make a little speech like this: "Now you see boys, the people have not forgotten us. They don't look down on us. Here are some of the most respectable people in the city, who have come out here to sing for us and cheer us on." And he was always soundly applauded. The "General" is a small man of about middle age, well dressed and with a well bred air, and would pass anywhere in society as a respectable gentleman. His gold bowed spectacles gave him somewhat the air of a preacher. But he is evidently an emotional fellow, and like many of his deluded followers, has more enthusiasm than sober judgment. He evidently has some purpose in view, in passing as the Moses who shall lead this motley host—they know not where or how or why. They seemed to have implicit confidence in him, a fact that seemed greatly to tickle his vanity. As we said, most of the men were scrubbed pretty clean. Some were fairly well dressed; all had decent clothing, though many garments were frayed and soiled in the well known tramp fashion. In many instances the spots worn showed the owner had done more work sitting down than any other way. Of course in such an "army" there was no attempt at a uniform. There were about as many different suits as men, and the "officer of the day" told the writer they had 1,230 enrolled. In our own judgment there were about 700 in the barracks. It is safe to say there were 600 different uniforms. True, a few gushing officers had tried to fix up something to indicate their important positions. One man, a rather good looking young man, with blue eyes and a thin blonde mustach and hair to match, was evidently a "lieutenant," for he had somehow procured two little strips of cheap and frayed gold braid or gimp, and in his awkward way had sewed these onto his rather dirty coat for shoulder straps, and took great pains to be around at all points where his rank would dazzle the eyes and make the most profound impression. Several "sergeants" had made themselves chevrons out of half-washed white muslin, which they had evidently cut with a dull knife from a more frequently used, though less conspicuously shown garment. Awkwardly sewed on, with the raveled edges showing to the best advantage, these "chevrons" looked anything but warlike. And again we were reminded of the company of soldiers raised by Fallstaff, when he conscripted only those who could not pay him a shilling or so to get off. As to the character of these men, there is a difficult question. Many were no doubt honest, though deluded men. Many were neither honest nor deluded. They knew no good could come of the movement, but they got a few weeks of good food, shelter and rest, and besides, had become, in a sense, somewhat famous. The world had no terrors for them outside the barracks or inside, but just for the present they were comfortable, and therefore contented. The older bums could hardly conceal their sneers of the whole matter, and no doubt these never left the city with the army, when it started out on its tramp. But there were many younger ones who seemed to feel, that some how, they could not tell how, the movement would benefit them, and to this end they trusted their leaders, and no doubt marched out of the city and across the country, and suffered hunger and storms and weariness, for what? They could not tell you. The most of this class, were no doubt "unemployed." None of them had the appearance of "skilled workmen." They were the rougher laborers, the hewers of wood and drawers of water, many of whom could not have held even such a job for any length of time. They were the least desirable of laborers, for they were not up to the average in point of intelligence. Many had an appearance of mental inferiority, and probably were out of work because they could not do the kinds most generally needed and most in demand. Nor would it appear that they had the energy or ability to hustle for a job if they got out of work, though of course we could not say this of all. But it was plain that such as would willingly work, were also of the kind that would wait till someone got a job for them, rather than to try for a job themselves. Others would not work if they had a chance, and others again would refuse to work unless they got a certain price. And so little pride had they, that they would tramp or beg, or live as now, on the charity of the people, and in idleness, rather than to take a job that did not suit them either as to the kind of work or the price. We are not judging these men harshly. We mingled with them freely, and they readily talked on any subject we asked about. Two rather bright young men admitted they had ramped a good deal, and were cursing the bad conditions that enabled one man to have a plenty, while another had nothing. They were incipient anarchists. "It is a d——d shame, that people who have plenty to eat, should not be made to divide with us who have not," said one, and the other agreed, and added, "I was three weeks last winter with less than a square meal a day. Of course I got 'hand outs' every little while, but not square meals. Then we got to Chicago, where they told us the people had provided free meals at soup house. But I wouldn't go to the soup houses. You couldn't get me to eat their d——d rotten soup. I'd sooner take in the free lunch, and I did for two or three weeks. Then they offered me $1 a day to work on the streets. But that was too d——d thin. I don't work for any g—d d——d dollar a day." This is almost word for word as it fell from his lips, and there was much more from these two of the same kind. Others simply said they were out of a job, and thought by joining the army, in some way work would come to them, though they could not explain how. Some of course did not care, but were contented with present food and shelter, and let the future take care of itself. In general the men were below the average in point of intelligence, and many were of the kind who could not hold a fair job if they had one. The best of them would not be able to conduct a business of their own. We talked freely with them, and our conclusions are not colored in the least by any unfriendly feeling. After several hours studying this strange congregation, we passed out into the streets, and there mingled freely and talked freely with many real workingmen who were gathered on the outside.

Here again we found many different opinions Some declared that the men with the white Coxey badges which the members of the army wore, were nothing but frauds, and would not work if they had a chance. Some thought that a part of them really wanted work, and hoped it could be secured for them. Others were simply glad to see the "army" organized and move out of the city, as it would take out that much competition. For our own part, while we had learned much of this strange and ridiculous movement, and of the motley horde that made up its numbers, we confess we left with a poor opinion of the whole business, and felt a sense of relief in once more standing among men we knew were "workingmen," and not mere ciphers to fill a space in the mass of humanity, that swarmed in every corner of the "Randall Barracks of Coxey's Army of the Commonweal of Christ."

"At 14 years of age I learned a bad habit which almost ruined me. I became nervous and weak. My back troubled me. I could stand no exertion. Head and eyes became dull. Dreams and drains at night weakened me. I tried seven Medical Firms, Electric Belts, Patent Medicines and Family Doctors. They gave me no help. A friend advised me to try Drs. Kennedy & Kergan. They sent me one month's treatment and it cured me. I could feel myself gaining every day. Their New Method Treatment cures when all else fails." They have cured many of my friends."

Dr. Moulton. Cured 5 years ago.

CURES GUARANTEED OR MONEY REFUNDED.

"Some 8 years ago I contracted a serious constitutional blood disease. I went to Hot Springs to treat for syphilis. Mercury almost killed me. After a while the symptoms again appeared. Throat became sore, pains in limbs, pimples on face, blotches, eyes red, loss of hair, glands enlarged, etc. A medical friend advised Drs. Kennedy & Kergan's New Method Treatment. It cured me, and I have had no symptoms for five years. I am married and happy. As a doctor, I heartily recommend it to all who have this terrible disease—syphilis." It will eradicate the poison from the blood."

FORT WAYNE'S CENTENNIAL.

Ft. Wayne will celebrate the 100th year of its age Sept. 18, as that was the day the fort there was begun 100 years ago. We quote the following from the Sentinel:

General Wayne, then a revolutionary officer of celebrity, took up St. Clair's expedition, and on the 28th of July, 1794, began his triumphal march on the Indian villages of the Maumee valley, fighting his way along the banks of our picturesque river until he reached Ke-ki-ong-a, and pitched his tents at the strategic point, now marked by a flag staff on East Main street, where he could command with his cannon the Indian navigation on the St. Joseph of the Lakes and the St. Mary's rivers as they met to form the Maumee.

General Wayne with his forces arrived here September 17, 1794, and on the following day (September 18) selected the site for his fortification, afterwards known as Fort Wayne.

He began work on his garrison September 24, and on the 17th of October it was completed.

It was a rude structure and not very strong, as General Wayne wrote the war department at Washington, but from that log fort has sprung up a proud and beautiful city, the metropolis of Northern Indiana.

It is fitting, indeed, that the city of Fort Wayne celebrate this event, and it is more appropriate, it seems to us, to observe September 18 as the centennial anniversary of the birth of Fort Wayne, for on that day one hundred years ago, General Wayne selected the site for and conceived the idea of his military post.

Broke an Arm.

Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Sol. Shearer came up from their home in Jackson township and left the children at the home of Mrs. Shearer's mother, Mrs. High, while they went to attend the funeral of his grandmother a Mr. Pilgrim's west of town. The children amused themselves at Mrs. High's and got along nicely, till Harry, a six year old, tried swinging on a wire line. He was told he might get hurt, but he did not stop. Directly he fell and struck the ground in such a way that he broke both bones of his right arm in a bad manner. Dr. Swarts was called and he and Mrs. Swarts and Dr. Sebring set the fractured bones and fixed the lad up as comfortably as could be done, but it is liable to make him a stiff arm, broken in the way it is. But the doctors will fix it as near right as possible.

DeKalb's First Printer.

C. B. Alvord struck this place last Friday, and on Saturday put in half a day at work in this office. We speak of this to call the attention of our older people to the fact that he set the first type on the first paper in DeKalb county. When, forty-one years ago, Berry & Pierce bought a small newspaper plant at Albion and concluded to move it to Auburn, Mr. Alvord was working in that office. He and Mr. Berry loaded up the press and material on a wagon, and with two horses, started for Auburn. When a few miles west of here the team got stalled, and after vainly trying to get the wagon out, the two men unhitched the horses and rode them into town. They staid all night at the "Auburn House" and next morning went back and brought the load into town. So the first paper was started. It was the "Democratic Messenger," the forerunner of the present leading democratic paper, the COURIER. While slinging type in the COURIER office that day, Mr. Alvord noted the difference between the early outfits and the present ones, in the newspaper business.

An Enterprising Newspaper.

April 19 the COURIER published an article headed "Can Compete with the World." The first half of the article was our own comments and opinions, and the last half was an extract going to prove the same thing, and which we had taken from a correspondence in the Laporte Argus, to which we gave the proper credit. Four weeks later, the same article, with the same head, appears in the Garrett Clipper of May 10 as original. It quotes the opinions given as its own opinion, though it was never known to have an opinion on any question of general or political interest and could not write an opinion if it had one. In the same issue we find a number of news items that had appeared in the COURIER the week before, or two weeks before, and being rewritten were dished up as news. Even its articles on "rape and seduction," the point where it comes the nearest to having original ideas, are gotten up in the same way—always secured by taking some other paper and cutting down and writing up its "original" articles. We have often called attention to this sort of newspaper enterprise (?), but it seems to be the only way they can get any decent articles. It is well known that those who take their sheet, take it only for its rape and seduction articles, and so of course do not care how it is gotten up in general, only so that their favorite dish is fully provided. For our part, we do not so much object to their using our articles as "original," as we do to the terrible spelling they manage to inject into them. But we suppose this horrible spelling is intended to give them an air of genuine originality which the decency and good English of the borrowed articles might otherwise expose.

Kind Hearted Politicians.

We have often said that much is false in politics. We have frequently shown this up in the matter of the republican "love for the workingman." We have for some time been watching the rise and fall of new parties also, and find them just the same. The populists are now in the state of party childhood and are taking great pains to call attention to their great love for the "common people," (especially those who have votes.) They have such a great love for "workingmen," and when they hire anyone, alway pay the lowest possible price, even down to starvation wages. They will crowd a poor person to the wall as quickly as would a "gold bug of Wall street," or cheat in the politics as gracefully as one of the "corrupt old parties." We recall just now a fine sample of populist love of the poor. We not long since received a letter which read in part:

"Recently near Corunna, there happened to be a deal between two upright populists, by which an old lady was beaten out of her trusty horse that had been her only one to drive,—a good, hard working old lady. Just think of it! She was beaten by two who professed that everyone should have their rights. Gentlemen, it is all right, but you surely surprise us by your righteousness."

We might add that two years ago the populists sang songs about rising up "against their oppressors." We presume the old lady mentioned would now like to know how to "rise up against" the populists. When a man or a party tries to make believe he or the party is the only pure and honest one, it is time to watch him or his party.

Nothing in This World

Is so cheap as a newspaper, whether it be measured by the cost of its production or by its value to the consumer. We are talking about an American, metropolitan, daily paper of the first class like THE CHICAGO RECORD. It's so cheap and so good you can't afford in this day of progress to be without it. There are other papers possibly as good, but none better, and none just like it. It prints all the real news of the world—the news you care for—every day, and prints it in the shortest possible space. You can read THE CHICAGO RECORD and do a day's work too. It is an independent paper and gives all political news free from the taint of party bias. In a word—it's a complete, condensed, clean, honest family newspaper, and it has the largest morning circulation in Chicago or the west—125,000 to 140,000 a day.

Prof. J. T. Hatfield of the Northwestern University says: "THE CHICAGO RECORD comes as near being the ideal daily journal as we are for some time likely to find on these mortal shores."

Good Indians.

Ft. Wayne Journal

While excavating for the asphalt pavement on West Washington street Wednesday, workmen exhumed the remains of an Indian warrior. The skeleton was in a tolerable state of preservation, indicating that the red knight of the forest was not buried at a very remote period. Implements of war and other trinkets and trappings which are usually buried with defunct braves were found in the graves. Other fragmentary remains were found in close proximity, which seems to indicate that the graves had been disturbed before.

During the past few years many Indian graves have been discovered in and about Fort Wayne, most of them in Lakeside and along the Nickel Plate track in the eastern part of the city. No Indian burying ground was known to exist west of the city.

The Longest Days.

At Spitzbergen the longest day is three and one-half months.

At Wardoe, Norway, the longest day lasts from May 21 to July 22 without interruption.

At Tornea, Finland, June 21 brings a day nearly twenty-two hours long, and Christmas less than three hours in length.

At St. Petersburg and Tobolsk the longest day is nineteen hours, and the shortest five hours.

At Stockholm the longest day is eighteen and one-half hours.

A World's Fair Prize.

Beginning with May 1, we will give away 100 art Portfolios, to the first 100 persons who pay one year's subscription to the COURIER, No matter whether the person paying is a new subscriber or an old one, we shall treat all alike till the 100 copies are used. The pictures are as fine as any sold, and have a description of each view. The name of this series is "Beautiful scenes of the White City." It has much valuable information, besides the pictures. This 100 embraces "Part 1" only, but it contains 16 lovely views.

Great Sales,

The promptness and certainty of its cures have made Chamberlain's Cough Remedy famous. It is intended especially for coughs, colds, croup and whooping cough, and is the most effectual remedy known for these diseases. Mr. G. B. THE FLEETING NEWS.

IS CAUGHT ON THE WING FOR OUR READERS.

Many Lives in Jeopardy in a Burning Mine—Killed and Mangled in a Runaway—Forest Fires in Pennsylvania—A Dam Bursts—Electrocuted.

Dam Burst.

Lima (Mont.) special: The Lima dam broke, and its body of water is surging down Red Rock River at a terrific rate, sweeping everything before it. As soon as this was discovered men on horse-back hastened down the river toward the ranches, but almost every rancher along the bottoms lose everything. Houses, barns, fences, hay stacks, and all kinds of stock are being carried away. The railroad company sent a special train to warn the people between Lima and Dillon, and have sent out a large force of men to the scene of the flood. The track washed out between here and Dillon in several places, and the damage will figure high. The water after leaving the dam swept through a well settled country for over sixty miles, and many families will be without shelter or food.

Breckinridge Expelled.

The Board of Managers of the Union League Club voted to expel Col. Breckinridge from the roll of honorary membership of the Club. There were eight members present at the meeting, and no member voted against dropping the Kentucky politician from the honorary roll of the club. Col. Breckinridge will be at once notified of the action of the club and if he wishes to enter a defense he will be allowed to do so. The directors say he will have a fair and candid hearing if he feels disposed to make a defense. Some members of the conservative element took the ground that final action should not be taken until the political fate of Col. Breckinridge was settled.

Frightful Casualty.

A fatal runaway accident occurred on South Main street, Brattleboro, Vt. A party of five women from Moody school at Northfield, including three teachers—Misses Blood, Burt, and Wardwell, the matron of the school, and Miss McNealy, a nurse, were coming down South Main street, a steep hill entering the village from the north, when the neck yoke broke and the horse ran, all being thrown from the carriage. Miss Blood struck an iron grating, killing her instantly, while the others were taken up mangled and bleeding. They were conveyed to the nearest house, where they are being cared for by local physicians. Miss Burt is probably fatally injured.

A Mine Ablaze.

A special from Ironwood, Mich., says: The great Aurora mine is on fire. Just how much damage has been done cannot be told as yet. The lives of 500 men are in danger, and the whole community is in great excitement. The Aurora mine is one of the best known mines on the Gogebic Range. It is controlled by a syndicate in which the Colbys are interested, but is one of the group known as the Gogebic consolidated mines for which a receiver was recently appointed. It has been in operation right along and is one of the very few mines that did not shut down on account of hard times.

Ugly Tramps.

The train crew on an east bound Wabash express, had a desperate encounter with three tramps who insisted upon riding. They boarded the train at Peru, Ind., and were discovered at the Lake Erie & Western crossing, but declined to get off. The engineer was called, and armed with a rivet hammer he approached and made an onslaught which the tramps resisted for a time, but were put to flight, being badly hurt. None of the trainmen were seriously hurt.

Compulsory Vaccination.

Chicago special: It has been decided by Mayor Hopkins and Health Commissioner Reynolds that vaccination should be compulsory. The police will send a copy of the warning to every householder in the city. The ordinances of the city give the Commissioner of Health the authority to adopt such measures to prevent the spread of small-pox. Seventy-five additional vaccinators were put to work by the Commissioner of Health.

Forest Fires.

Russel City (Pa.) special: Forest fires have been raging in the big woods of Elk County for several days. The fire has reached the oil lease of McDermott & Barnsdale and destroyed several oil rigs. All the men in the neighborhood have been fighting the the flames, and are almost prostrated with fatigue. Help has been asked for from Kane.

Electrocuted.

Lucius P. Wilson died in the electric chair in the penitentiary in Auburn, N. Y. At his own request he was photographed in his cell. He refused to see a clergyman. To his attorney, Mr. McNaughton, he gave a statement, the contents of which the attorney will not make public just now.

Coxey for Congress.

The Populists of the Eighteenth Ohio district will nominate Jacob S. Coxey, the commonweal leader, for congress. This is Gov. McKinley's old district.

Tragedy at Keokuk.

J. S. Dygraff, an insurance agent, killed his divorced wife at Keokuk, Iowa, shooting her five times. He then turned the revolver on himself, inflicting injuries from which he soon died. They had but recently been divorced.

A New Senator.

The Legislature at Baton Rouge has elected Don Caffrey Senator from the State of Louisiana, for the long term beginning March 4, 1895.

Harrison and the Presidency.

A Washington special say: The gentlemen who had the honor to be members of Mr. Harrison's cabinet have nearly all been in Washington during the last week or so—Mr. Foster, Mr. Elkins, Mr. Tracy, Mr. Wanamaker, and Mr. Proctor—and they agree that it is an understood thing that their old chief will make no effort to secure the presidency; that he does not expect his former adherents to support him, and that he does not desire the nomination. As one of them expressed it, "General Harrison feels that he has had enough. He does not expect or desire another term, and has released all his old supporters from their allegiance; but if the Republican party can find no better man and offers him another nomination, of course he would accept it. No man in his position could decline it."

DESTRUCTION

Follows the Path of a Big Storm Which Visited Indianapolis.

A severe wind and rain storm visited Indianapolis and vicinity recently. Many buildings were unroofed and the loss will reach into thousands. Shade trees and out-buildings in every part of the city were blown down. The electric car system for a time was demoralized, and telephone and telegraph poles were in a sad condition. An infant child of S. J. Huntsman was instantly killed while sleeping in its cradle, and a number of persons were more or less injured by falling walls and flying debris. The roof of a City block on West Washington street was blown off, and two persons were injured. The adjoining block on the south was the establishment of Archdeacon & Co. A number of girls were employed on the top floor of the building and when the roof of the City block was torn from its fastenings, it crashed into the building where the girls were employed. Dibbie James of 107 Division Street, was cut about the head and face, and Amanda Miller was caught by falling walls and injured internally. The Maus brewery was damaged to the extent of $3,000, and a number of other large establishments were damaged, among them being the Nordyke and Marmans Iron Works, Big Four Round House, J. B. Nues' Chair Factory, and the West Washing Street car barns.

THE PULSE OF TRADE.

Many Industries Closed by the Coal Strike.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: "The strikes begin to have a serious though it is assumed only a temporary effect. The number of works depending upon supplies of bituminous coal or coke for fuel is large, and quite a considerable proportion of them has already been compelled to stop operations. No doubt the proportion is larger in the iron and steel manufacture than any other business, but nearly a third in capacity of the iron furnaces at work a month ago appear to have closed. Some railroads at the West are embarrassed and textile works of some importance must close soon unless the strike ceases. The movement of so-called armies of unemployed on Washington has caused little excitement, and is less important or significant than the outward movement of specie, which shows shrinking foreign demand for products and further withdrawal of foreign capital. But neither strikes nor foreign distrust long retard the progress of this country.

"The textile manufacturers are not improving in position or prospects, for while orders do not increase, uncertainties in regard to labor grow more serious. The working force shows much unwillingness to accept for another season the wages which were temporarily adopted in order to have works reopened after last summer's suspension."

PARBOILED.

One Man Killed and Several Hurt in an Akron Fire.

The varnish works of Kubler & Beck, West State street, Akron, Ohio, were burned to the ground. One man was burned to death. Loss on the building is placed at $60,000. The fire was caused by the explosion of a tank of benzine around which Daniel Oberlin, Ingold Miller, and Michael Huegler were working. All three were a sheet of flames in an instant. Oberlin and Miller succeeded in escaping from the fiery furnace and jumped into the canal. They will recover. Huegler was less fortunate. He rushed for one exit and found himself hemmed in by a high board fence. With the agony of despair he screamed for help, but it did not come. Finally, unconscious with pain, he fell to the ground. There the firemen found him and carried him out, where he died several minutes later. His flesh had been literally parboiled.

Shortly after the fire started a series of terrific explosions shook the neighborhood. Fearing that the crowd of people who forced their way to the front of the building might be seriously injured by one of these explosions, Mayor Watters ordered out a detachment of Battery F, Capt. J. D. Chandler, and Company B, Eight Regiment, Lieut. A. T. Durant, to keep the throng back.

CAME TOGETHER.

Officers and Commonwealers Have a Combat.

North Yakima (Wash.) special: Another collision occurred between deputy marshals and the Commonwealers, and two of the latter are now confined at the hospital suffering from gunshot wounds. Word was received that twenty-five men captured two freight cars at Ellensburg, and were coming down to liberate the Coxeyites imprisoned in the county jail. The marshals met the Industrials, and stopped their cars by throwing a rail across the track at a point two miles from this city. The Industrials scrambled off the cars and started to run, but were brought to a halt by the bullets from the rifles of the marshals. Two of the wounded are seriously hurt. One hundred and twenty were marched to the county jail and locked up. Fifty Coxeyites and a number of Yakima citizens accused of inciting the army to resistance, were started on an early train under heavy guard for Seattle.

UP IN ARMS.

The Wives of Miners Willing to Work Give Their Ultimatum to the Strikers.

Cumberland (Md.) special: Eight hundred strikers from Frostburg and lower mining towns marched to the Eckhart mine and attempted to prevent the miners from going to work. Sheriff King was present with a large force of deputies, and after much persuasion the men were allowed to go to work. The strikers then proceeded to the Hoffman mine and made the same attempt, with a like result. The operators here state that their companies will go to work in all mines as soon as they get ready and will do so under the protection of officers of the law. The wives of the miners willing to work are determined they shall work, and assembled in a large body at the mouth of the mines, and told the strikers that if they did not allow their husbands to go to work, they would enter the mines themselves, and mine their coal for them.

Daring Bank Robbery.

Kansas City (Mo.) special: The bank at Southwest, in this State, was robbed in a most daring Jesse James style. Seven men, armed with Winchesters and revolvers mounted on fast horses, and looking as if they had come from the territory, rode into the town. They went at their work in a systematic way as if they were experts at the game. Two of the robbers stationed themselves on the outside of the bank, two stood guard over the horses, while the remaining three entered the bank carrying a sack to put the money in when they got it. Between $3,000 and $4,000—all the bank contained—was taken by the robbers.

The gang, like the Daltons of Coffeyville, Kan., during the raid on the bank there which ended so disastrously for the outlaws, brought on a battle with Winchesters, but in this case the citizens got the worst of it. The robbers fired nearly 100 shots and four prominent citizens were seriously wounded.

A Bloody Battle.

A special from San Salvador says: A closely contested engagement took place between the Government army and the rebel forces. The rebels were intrenched behind the parapet in Chalchuaja, twelve miles from the rebel city of Santa Ana. The battle which lasted two hours, was carried on by both the infantry and artillery. It was a terrible and bloody struggle. The Rebel forces were finally dislodged from their position, and the Government army, under Gen. Joaquin Lopez, took the parapets. It is believed that this triumph will have great influence on the final result. The Rebels continue to disband, and now they are confined to Santa Ana, the Rebel city.

Horrible Butchery.

A frightful butchery of human beings occurred two miles east of Milan, Mo., recently. The victims were Augustus Meeks, his wife, and their four small children. Their bodies were found near a straw stack. The bodies were horribly mutilated with a butcher knife. The alarm was quickly given and the entire neighborhood joined in a search for the murderer. It was not long until they captured a man, and it is believed he is the person who committed the crime. If it is proven that he is guilty he will be lynched. Meeks and his family left the little town for a visit to friends at Browning, and it is supposed were murdered while resting by the roadside.

Destructive Flames.

Firebugs set fire to the barn of John Dunslan at Red Jack, Mich., and before the fire was gotten under control ten business houses were destroyed. The principal loosers were: John Dunslan, dealer in organs and sewing machines, loss $8,000, insurance, $4,000, also all his household effects; W. A. Isaacson, brick block, loss $8,000, insurance $3,500; Mudge & Argalls, furniture, loss $3,000, no insurance; Jacob Aquitch, loss on building $4,000; Mrs. Annie Olson, two frame buildings, loss $5,000. Seven families lost all their household goods.

Beginning Early.

Surgeon Fairfax Irwin, of the Marine Hospital Service, has sent the following cablegram to Surgeon General Wyman: "Cholera in Kovno, Russia; 21 cases; 12 deaths in the last two weeks. Russian frontier dangerous." Within the last six weeks upward of 80 cases of cholera and more than 50 deaths have been reported to the bureau from the Russian frontier, a considerable number for so early in the season. The office has two surgeons in Europe closely watching the progress of the disease.

Queen Lil.

San Francisco special: The United Press correspondent at Honolulu, writing under date of the 3rd inst., per steamer Alameda, which has arrived here, says that the royalists are understood to be endeavoring to revive certain volunteer military native organizations disbanded at the revolution of '87. They claim so be confident that President Cleveland will restore the queen in June. They believe that Admiral Walker has been sent here for that purpose.

Pardoned.

Gov. Matthews has pardoned Bartholomew J. Murphy of Lafayette, Ind., who was convicted in May last and was fined $1,000 and costs and sent to prison, as one of the principals who attempted to kill George P. Rudolph, who at the time of the riot, January 25, 1893, was delivering an anti-Catholic lecture in the Grand Opera House at Lafayette. The Governor thinks Murphy is innocent.

Head End Collision.

A special from Eu Claire, Wis., says: A head-end collision occurred between a passenger train from Minneapolis and a freight train near Menominee Junction. The trains were running slowly, approaching a bridge. Several people are reported injured, while the express messenger and mail clerk were killed outright. The fireman had both legs cut off and died soon after.

Poisoned Chewing Gum.

Katie Chamberlain, the 4-year-old daughter of George Chamberlain, living near Bristol, Ind., died from the effects of poison contained in chewing gum.

Freight Depot Burned.

At Columbus, Ohio, fire completely destroyed the freight depot of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, thirteen cars, and all the freight in the depot.

NEW TORPEDO BOAT.

ERICSSON IS LAUNCHED AT DUBUQUE, IOWA.

First War Vessel Ever Constructed on Inland Waters—The Ceremony Witnessed by an Immense Crowd of People—Shaped Like a Cigar.

Glides Off the Ways.

The greatest crowd ever seen at Dubuque, Iowa, assembled Saturday afternoon along the sloping embankments of the ice harbor to witness the launching of the first regular torpedo boat ever built by the United States Government. It is designated torpedo boat No. 2, but is really No. 1, as the Cushing is simply a yacht altered over and fitted with a torpedo tube.

At 3 o'clock in the afternoon a parade formed in front of the government building, in which the employes of the works, the men who built the beautiful craft, took a leading part. Capt. Usher, who will command the vessel, and Mrs. Usher, with leading citizens, including the venerable ex-Senator George W. Jones, rode in carriages. The exercises began with a speech by M. M. Walker of the Board of Trade. The

TORPEDO BOAT ERICSSON.

First Regiment Band then played "The Star Spangled Banner," and an address was made by J. C. Longueville. "Marching Through Georgia" was then tendered by the band. Judge O'Donnell spoke, and then everything was in readiness for the little boat. Miss Kiene broke the bottle over the stem of the boat and said:

"In the name of the city of Dubuque and in honor of the United States and of our glorious emblem, the Stars and Stripes, and as a remembrance of one who won imperishable renown in our war for the preservation of this great and grand Union, I christen thee Ericsson."

As the moment approached when the last stroke was to be given that would set the vessel free there was stillness among the vast crowd; then as it gracefully glided into the water a mighty roar went up and the guns thundered a salute. There was not the least hitch in the work of launching and the boat settled in the water, scarcely disturbing it. The boat is a beauty and will delight the eye of a seaman. It is pronounced by the officers present a model of its kind.

The bids for the construction of this vessel were opened the 26th of August, 1891. Bids for a boat differing from this one had been called for before the plans were changed; second bids were asked for and the contract was awarded to the Iowa Iron Works of Dubuque, the work to be done for $113,500.

ONE OF THE ERICSSON'S BOILERS.

When the announcement was made that a firm in the interior of the country, a thousand miles from the seaboard, had the boldness to bid on a work of this magnitude, grave doubts were expressed by the seashore bidders. They said the work could not be done there. Officials were, therefore, sent to Dubuque to obtain a thorough understanding of the matter. They reported that every facility for building vessels of this description existed in Dubuque and the contractors were authorized to proceed with the work.

Shaped Like a Cigar.

The Ericsson is built of steel plates three-sixteenths of an inch in thickness. Its length is 150 feet; beam, 15½ feet; depth, 10 feet 6 inches; and a displacement of 120 tons. In shape it is like a cigar. Its engines are of enormous power, limited at 2,000 horsepower. The boilers are constructed to give the greatest possible amount of heating surface. There are two sets of four-cylinder quadruple-expansion engines of the vertical inverted direct-acting type, operating twin screws with a capacity of 420 revolutions a minute. The cylinder diameters are 11½, 16, 21½ and 30 inches. The stroke of all pistons is 16 inches. These engines make 420 revolutions a minute, while those of an ordinary raft-boat make only 26. The equipment will be of the latest and most effective fashion. It will be provided with a dynamo of power sufficient to burn twenty-eight incandescent lights, including a searchlight, signals, etc. The pilot-house is a small cone-shaped affair, a short distance from the stern. It will be armored, and is arranged to deflect any missile which may strike it. A dingy and a gig will be utilized for the small boats, and will hang from iron davits. There will be amidships four one-pounder rapid-firing guns to repel boarding, its two smokestacks, and a single short spar, more for ornament than use. The chief armament, of course, will be its torpedo guns, one on each side, and the other at the bow. They will be operated with compressed air.

The Ericsson will not be ready to leave Dubuque before next month. The launching of this boat marks a new era in the building of warships, as it demonstrates they can be constructed on inland waters safe from all assaults by a foreign power, just as the arsenal at Rock Island can put 20,000 men to work making arms with every port in the country blockaded.

TABERNACLE IN RUINS.

Dr. Talmage's Brooklyn Church Burned to the Ground.

Just after services at noon Sunday and while Dr. Talmage was shaking hands with members of his congregation, fire burst out between the pipes of the organ and within ten minutes the big Brooklyn tabernacle was doomed to total destruction. Adjoining the church was the Hotel Regent, eight stories in height, with a frontage of ninety feet on Clinton avenue, and extending back 200 feet to Waverly avenue. The fire spread from the tabernacle to this hotel and then to the dwelling houses on Greene and Waverly avenues, opposite the tabernacle. The wind carried the blazing cinders in such quantities in a southeasterly direction that dwelling houses in Washington avenue, two squares away, and also the Summerfield Methodist Church were set on fire by them, but the greatest loss on any one of these structures did not exceed $15,000. The total loss, however, reaches over $2,000,000.

When asked for his opinion as to the cause of the fire Dr. Talmage said emphatically: "Electric lights. Electricity caused this fire, as it did in the last tabernacle on Schermerhorn street."

The loss on the church is not far short of $500,000. Russell Sage, who has a mortgage of $125,000 on the church property and is also the owner of the site upon which it stood, is fully insured. Mr. Sage said: "It is probable that the people of Brooklyn will come forward with a big subscription. The insurance will cover the rest. If they want to rebuild I will put no obstacle in their way. In other words, I will let the debt and interest stand over for an indefinite period, let them rebuild on the insurance money and what they can raise in subscriptions and in other ways."

Was a Beautiful Building.

The edifice was, in general, in the Norman style of church architecture, although not of the conventional ecclesiastical type. It was very ornate and imposing in appearance.

The church was built of a stone called bastard granite, which is found in Connecticut and possesses the peculiarity of having thread-like veins of dark red running through it. The trimmings and ornamentations were of Lake Superior brownstone, with which the granite harmonized very happily. The striking characteristics of the exterior were a high tower at the corner and two large gables on each facade, with small towers at the extreme ends of each facade. The corner tower was 160 feet high from the ground to the finials. Its general form was square, but over the two principal entrance ways, one of which is on the Clinton avenue side and the other on the Greene avenue side of the tower, there was a rounded projection carried up for two stories.

THE BROOKLYN TABERNACLE.

The interior of the building was very beautiful. A warm rouge tint was the prevailing color, matching the yellow pine timbers of the roof trusses, all of which were left in the natural color of the wood. The general shape of the interior of the church proper was that of a large ampitheater, semicircular shape. There were two galleries, and the whole seating capacity was about 5,000 people, about one-half on the main floor and the remainder was in the galleries.

INDIANA STATE NEWS.

OCCURRENCES DURING THE PAST WEEK.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crimes, Casualties and General News Notes of the State.

Hoosier Happenings

A POSTOFFICE has been established at Cottonville, Pike County, with Perry Willis as Postmaster.

THE new police force at Fort Wayne has been given instructions to rigidly enforce the 11 o'clock and Sunday liquor laws.

PIERRE ANTOINE, employed at the Elwood plate glass factory, had his arm cut by a piece of glass and nearly bled to death.

THE smoke stacks at the old Vincennes starch works ruins were blown down with dynamite. They each contained 300,000 bricks.

THE Wise farm, near Elwood, is being searched for a supposed hidden fortune that was buried by the owner of the farm before the war.

DAVE PINK, living in an old shanty near Madison, was found nearly starved to death. Food was taken to him, but he ate too much and will die.

MRS. STEWARD, near Oakland City, was notified that she had been granted a widow's pension, and while getting ready to go after the check, died of heart disease.

D. DUSCHMAN, a jewish fruit vender of Marion, whose wife and three children reside at Indianapolis, was struck by the west-bound Panhandle passenger train, near Marion, and instantly killed.

WHILE near Bloomington, on a Louisville, New Albany and Chicago freight train, Carl Henchman, brakeman, was struck on the head by a bridge and died a few hours later. His home was at Lafayette.

A HORSE was found in a pond near Sullivan and a spring wagon on the bank. The outfit is supposed to have belonged to George Vonderhide and son of Terre Haute, and it is feared they have met with foul play.

WORK of rebuilding the Whitely reaper works at Muncie, will begin at once. Several factories in that city have offered Mr. Whitely space in their building to make machines to fill this season's orders and a large force of men has been put to work.

HON. E. H. STALEY, late of Frankfort, and formerly editor and proprietor of the Elwood Free Press, while walking on the roof of the hotel he is opening at Elwood, broke through, falling a distance of twenty-five feet and sustained severe injuries, none of which, however, will prove fatal.

GEORGE G. MURPHY, aged 86, and grandfather of Deputy Postmaster Horace Murphy of Wabash, was instantly killed, being run down by a Panhandle freight train at Converse, where he resided. Mr. Murphy was endeavoring to cross the track in advance of the locomotive, and was struck and hurled some distance. Deceased was a pioneer of Northern Indiana.

THE last Legislature made an appropriation of $2,000 to pay for a new foundation and pedestal for the Morton monument. The contract has been let for $1,200, and it is now proposed by the Morton Monument Association to use the $800 remaining of the appropriation and the proceeds from the sale of the old pedestal to ornament the new pedestal with scenes from the life of the Governor.

AT his home in West Columbus George Gunnells, aged 29, died in great agony. Four weeks ago he stepped on a rusty wire nail that entered his foot through a shoe. The wound soon healed, but a few days ago the unfortunate man was seized with cramps, first in his stomach, but which soon extended to his entire system, and when death came his spine was curved backward like a rainbow.

LIGHTNING the other evening struck a tree in front of the residence of Mrs. John Hale of Wabash, ran to the earth and entered the house, tearing a hole six inches in diameter in the plastering of one room and making a loud report. Strange to say, the weatherboarding was not injured, nor is there any trace left by the bolt at the point where it left the room. During the storm a horse belonging to a man named Berry, in the western part of the city was killed by lightning.

THE bursting of a large grindstone at the Austed Spring Works, Connersville, probably fatally injured Frederick Waigner, an operator. The stone, which is eight feet high and weighs 5,000 pounds, was going at the rate of 200 revolutions per minute when it bursted. Mr. Waigner, with a piece weighing 500 pounds, was hurled fifteen feet through an open door. Other pieces of stone damaged much machinery. Waigner is an unmarried German, 45 years old, who came here from Cincinnati a few months ago. He received internal injuries from which recovery is doubtful.

THERE are about 500 old soldiers in the county infirmaries of this State, and George W. Steele, manager of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, at Marion, has written to Governor Matthews asking him to notify the county officials that where there are soldiers in the infirmaries application can be made to the National Home, and if the applicants are entitled to admission they will be received within reasonable time. Mr. Steele says there have been more soldiers in the home recently than there was appropriation to take care of. An appeal for additional funds has been made to Congress through Senator Voorhees, and it is thought that the financial aid will soon be extended. The Home at Marion is one of seven in the United States.

A TERRIBLE boiler explosion occurred at Sprag's tile factory, four miles south of Frankfort. The proprietor, Willis Sprag, was instantly killed, and James Durbein fatally scalded, other employes badly injured, and the factory completely wrecked.

AT Lebanon, Miss Ethel Campbell, daughter of G. W. Campbell, ex-President of the Gas Company, placed a pair of gloves on her hands to wash them in gasoline. They caught fire from a gas jet, and her hands and arms were frightfully burned. In her efforts to tear the gloves off her hands were laid bare to the tendons.

THE steamer Eugene was capsized by a storm in the middle of the Ohio River, at Mt. Vernon, and fifteen people on board were all thrown into the water. They saved themselves by taking refuge on a barge near by.

THE miners' strike is causing a wholesale closing down of the industries of Brazil, and if it continues a few weeks every manufacturing plant there will be forced to close. The Indiana Paving Brick Company closed a few days ago throwing forty employes out of work. The Brazil Brick and Pipe Works closed throwing fifty men out, and unless the miners return to work soon the Monard Fire Clay Company will be forced to close.

THE NATION'S SOLONS.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed, and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

The Chinese treaty was debated for six hours in the Senate, Monday, yet no definite action was taken. The House began business by making some committee provision for the newly elected members of the House. The New York and New Jersey bridge bill was passed under a suspension of the rules, on motion of Mr. Dunphy. It meets the objections of the President to a pier in the river by referring the question to a commission of engineers, one to be an engineer officer and four to be bridge-builders, all to be appointed by the President, whose duty it shall be to determine the question of the practicability of building a bridge of a single span. A special order was adopted making the bills for the erection of a new Government printing office and a new hall of records in the city of Washington the business of the House until they are disposed of. The printing office bill was discussed until 5:07 o'clock, but long before that hour the debate degenerated into a tariff discussion. At 5:12 o'clock the House adjourned.

The Senate continued Wednesday to entangle itself in the amendments to the tariff bill. The House passed the bill to authorize the East St. Louis and St. Louis Bridge and Construction Company to build a bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis. Mr. Springer, of the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported favorably his bill to suspend the 10 per cent. tax on State bank issues during money stringencies, and gave notice that he would call it up a week later. Mr. Cox gave notice of an amendment to repeal for all time the 10 per cent. tax. The House then went into committee of the whole on the naval appropriation bill, it having been agreed to limit debate to seven hours, each side to have half. Mr. Meikiejohn stated that at the proper time he would offer an amendment providing that if the damage sustained by the Government from the substitution by the Carnegie Company of fraudulent plates exceeded the sum of $140,000, the amount of the damage should be recovered from the company. Mr. Pendleton replied to the charge that the President was influenced by the publication of Andrew Carnegie's letter favoring tariff reform. No one would believe that Mr. Cleveland would think a letter from Mr. Carnegie on the tariff question was worth $140,000 or would be worth any sum at all. After some discussion the committee rose and the House at 5:30 adjourned.

John Patton, Jr., the new Senator from Michigan, was sworn in Thursday to succeed the late Senator Stockbridge. The Senate devoted its time to discussion of the amended tariff bill. The emblems of mourning covered the desk of the late Representative Robert F. Brattan, of Maryland, on which lay a bunch of roses when the House met. The message of the President transmitting Hawaiian correspondence was laid before the House. Some routine business was transacted, and Mr. Kem called up the House bill for resurvey of Grant and Hooker Counties, Nebraska, and asked unanimous consent for its consideration. The bill was passed. The House bill granting the railroad companies in Indian Territory additional powers to obtain right of way for depot grounds was passed. Mr. Talbot briefly announced the death of his colleague, Mr. Brattan, and offered the customary resolutions. The resolutions were adopted, and the Speaker appointed the following committee to attend the funeral: Messrs. Talbot, of Maryland, Jones, of Virginia; Causey, of Delaware; Berry, of Kentucky; Meyer, of Louisiana; Hepburn, of Iowa, and Hudson, of Kansas. The House then, at 12:30 p. m., adjourned.

Friday, after a prosy debate and agreeing that hereafter for an indefinite time the tariff should be taken up at noon each day, the Senate adjourned. After action on some minor bills the House went into committee of the whole to consider general appropriation bills (Mr. Richardson, of Tennessee, in the chair), and the naval appropriation bill was taken up. The debate continued some time, taking on a very acrimonious character, and charges and countercharges of "colonization" in the navy yards were freely passed. At 5 o'clock, it being Friday, the House, according to custom, took a recess until 8 o'clock, the evening session to be devoted to private bills on the calendar.

A Lesson in English.

"Pardon me," as the criminal said to the Governor.

"Step this way, please," as the dancing master said to his class.

"By, by," as the clerk said to the customer.

"Ho, there," as the farmer said to his field hand.

"Take a chair," as the dentist said to his patient.

"You make me tired," as the hired girl said to the Monday washing.

"Drop in some time," as the slot machine said to the nickel.

"Call again," as the poker player said to the other poker player.

"Get on to it," as the bicycle teacher said to his nervous scholar.

"Come around next week," as Thursday said to the day before.

"It's all up with you," as the sidewalk sweeper said to the roof cleaner.

"You're a corker," as the brewer said to the bottler.

"That's the end of it," as the boarder said to the landlady when she gave him the tail of the chicken.

Milk Sold by the Pound.

At Quebec the winter markets are very curious. Everything is frozen. Large pigs, killed perhaps months before, may be seen standing frozen in the butcher's shop. Frozen necks of beef, mutton, deer, fowl, cod, haddock, and eels, long and stiff, like walking-sticks, abound on the stalls. Milk also is kept frozen, and is sold by the pound in masses which look like lumps of white marble.

An Immense Celery Farm.

About ten years ago J. B. LaRue, of New York, bought several thousand acres of swamp land on the east bank of the Delaware about fifty miles from New York. He drained and prepared the land and now has the largest celery farm in the United States, on which he raised 1,500,000 bushels of celery last year, having planted 2,000 acres.

UNITED AT LAST

BY

MISS M E BRADDON

CHAPTER VII—Continued.

It was within a few days of this conversation that Wyatt gratified himself with the performance of a little experiment which he had devised in the comfortable retirement of his bachelor room at Davenant. He had come into Mrs. Sinclair's morning-room after breakfast to consult her upon the details of an amateur dramatic performance that was to take place shortly, and had, for a wonder, found the husband and wife alone together.

"Perhaps we'd better discuss the business at some other time," he said. "I know Sinclair doesn't care much about this sort of thing."

"Is that your theatrical rubbish?" asked Gilbert. "You'd better say what you've got to say about it. You needn't mind me. I can absorb myself in the study of 'Bell's Life' for a quarter of an hour or so."

He withdrew to one of the windows, and occupied himself with his newspaper, while James Wyatt showed Constance the books of some farces that had just come to him by post, and discussed the fitness of each for drawing-room representation

"Every amateur in polite society believes himself able to play Charles Matthews' business," he said laughing. "It is a fixed delusion of the human mind. Of course we shall set them all by the ears, do what we may. Perhaps it would do better to let them draw lots for characters, or we might put the light comedy parts up to auction, and send the proceeds to the poor-box."

He ran on in this strain gayly enough, writing lists of the characters and pieces, and putting down the names of the guests with a rapid pen as he talked, until Gilbert Sinclair threw down his newspaper and came over to the fire-place, politely requesting his friend to stop that row."

It was a hopelessly wet morning, and the master of Davenant was sorely at a loss for amusement and occupation. He had come to his wife's room in rather a defiant spirit, determined that she should favor him with a little more of her society than it was her habit to give him, and he had found her writing letters, which she declared were imperative, and had sat by the fire waiting for her correspondence to be finished, in a very sulky mood.

"What's the last news, Wyatt?" he asked, poking the fire savagely; "anything stirring in London?"

"Nothing—in London. There is some news of an old friend of mine who's far away from London—news I don't altogether like."

"Some client who has bolted in order to swindle you out of a long bill of costs, I suppose," answered Gilbert, indifferently.

"No: the friend I am talking of is a gentleman we all know—the late owner of this place."

"Sir Cyprian Davenant?" cried Gilbert.

Constance looked up from her writing.

"Sir Cyprian Davenant," repeated James Wyatt.

"Has anything happened to him?"

"About the last and worst thing that can happen to any man, I fear," answered the lawyer. "For some time since there have been no reports of Captain Harcourt's expedition; and that in a negative way, was about as bad as could be. But in a letter I received this morning, from a member of the Geographical Society, there is worse news. My friend tells me there is a very general belief that Harcourt and his party have been made away with by the natives. Of course, this is all club gossip as yet, and I trust that it may turn out a false alarm."

Constance had dropped her pen, making a great blot upon the page. She was very pale, and her hands were clasped nervously upon the table before her. Gilbert watched her with eager, angry eyes. It was just such an opportunity as he had wished for. He wanted above all things to satisfy his doubts about that man.

"I don't see that it much matters whether the report is true or false," he said, "as far as Davenant is concerned. The fellow is a scamp, and only left England because he had spent his last sixpence in dissipation."

"I beg your pardon, Sinclair," remonstrated Mr. Wyatt, "the Davenant property was impoverished by Cyprian's father and grandfather. I do not say that he was not extravagant himself at one period of his life, but he had reformed long before he left England."

"Reformed—yes, when he had no more money to spend. That's a common kind of reform. However, I suppose you've profited so much by his ruin that you can afford to praise him."

"Hadn't you better ring the bell?" asked James Wyatt, very quietly; "I think Mrs. Sinclair has fainted."

He was right; Constance Sinclair's head had fallen back upon the cushion of her chair and her eyes were closed. Gilbert ran across to her and seized her hand. It was deadly cold.

"Yes," he said, "she has fainted. Sir Cyprian was an old friend of hers. You know that better than I do, though you have never chosen to tell me the truth. And now I suppose you have trumped up this story in order to let me see what a fool I have been."

"It is not a trumped-up story," returned the other. "It is the common talk among men who knew the traveler and their line of country."

"Then for your friend's sake it is to be hoped it's true."

"Why so?"

"Because if he has escaped those black fellows to come my way it will be so much worse for both of us; for as sure as there is a sky above us, if he and I meet I shall kill him."

"Bah," muttered Mr. Wyatt, contemptuously, "we don't live in an age for that sort of thing. Here comes your wife's maid; I'll get out of the way. Pray apologize to Mrs. Sinclair for my indiscretion in forgetting that Sir Cyprian was a friend of her family. It was only natural that she should be affected by the news."

The lawyer went away as the maid came into the room. His face was brightened by a satisfied smile as he walked slowly along the corridor leading to the billiard-room.

"Othello was a fool to him in the matter of jealousy," he said to himself. "I think I've fired the train. If the news I heard is true, and Davenant is on his way home, there'll be nice work by and by."

CHAPTER VIII.

"HAD YOU LOVED ME ONCE AS YOU HAVE NOT LOVED."

Gilbert Sinclair said very little to his wife about the fainting fit. She was herself perfectly candid upon the subject. Sir Cyprian was an old friend—a friend whom she had known and liked ever since childhood—and Mr. Wyatt's news had quite overcome her. She did not seem to consider it necessary to apologize for her emotion.

"I have been overexerting myself a little lately, or I should scarcely have fainted, however sorry I felt," she said, quietly and Gilbert wondered at her self-possession, but was not the less convinced that she had loved—that she still did love—Cyprian Davenant. He watched her closely after this to see if he could detect signs of hidden grief, but her manner in society had lost none of its brightness, and when the Harcourt expedition was next spoken of she bore her part in the conversation with perfect ease.

Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair left Davenant early in May for a charming house in Park Lane, furnished throughout in delicate tints of white and green, like a daisy-sprinkled meadow, in early spring, a style in which the upholsterer had allowed full scope to the sentimentality of his own nature, bearing in mind that the house was to be occupied by a newly married couple. Mrs. Sinclair declared herself perfectly satisfied with the house, and Mrs. Sinclair's friends were in raptures with it. She instituted a Thursday evening supper after the opera, which was an immense success, and enjoyed a popularity that excited some envy on the part of unmarried beauties. Mrs. Walsingham heard of the Thursday evening parties, and saw her beautiful rival very often at the opera; but she heard from James Wyatt that Gilbert Sinclair spent a great deal of his time at his club, and made a point of attending all the race meetings, habits that did not augur well for his domestic happiness.

"He will grow tired of her, as he did of me," thought Clara Walsingham.

But Gilbert was in no way weary of his wife. He loved her as passionately as he had loved her at the first; with an exacting selfish passion, it is true, but with all the intensity of which his nature was capable. If he had lived in the good old feudal days he would have shut her up in some lonely turret chamber, where no one but himself could approach her. He knew that she did not love him; and with his own affection for her there was always mingled an angry sense of her coldness and ingratitude.

The London season came to an end once more, and Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair went back to Davenant. Nothing had been heard of Sir Cyprian or his companions throughout the summer, and Gilbert had ceased to trouble himself about his absent rival. The man was dead, in all probability, and it was something more than folly to waste a thought upon him. So things went on pleasantly enough, until the early spring gave a baby daughter to the master of Davenant, much to his disappointment, as he ardently desired a son and heir.

The birth of this infant brought a new sense of joy to the mind of Constance Sinclair. She had not thought it possible that the child could give her so much happiness. She devoted herself to her baby with a tenderness which was at first very pleasing to her husband, but which became by and by distasteful to him. He grew jealous of the child's power to absorb so much affection from one who had never given him the love he longed for. The existence of his daughter seemed to bring him no nearer to his wife. The time and attention which she had given to society she now gave to her child; but her husband was no more to her than he had ever been, a little less, perhaps, as he told himself angrily in the course of his gloomy meditations.

Mrs. Walsingham read the announcement of the infant's birth in extreme bitterness of spirit, and when James Wyatt next called upon her she asked him what had become of his promise that those two should be parted by his agency.

The lawyer shrugged his shoulders deprecatingly. "I did not tell you that the parting should take place within any given time," he said; "but it shall go hard with me if I do not keep my promise sooner or later."

He had indeed not been idle. The wicked work which he had set himself to do had progressed considerably. It was he who always contrived, in a subtle manner, to remind Gilbert Sinclair of his wife's coldness toward himself and to hint at her affection for another, while seeming to praise and defend her. Throughout their acquaintance his wealthy client had treated him with a selfish indifference and a cool, unconscious insolence, that had galled him to the quick, and he took a malicious pleasure in the discomfiture which Sinclair had brought upon himself by his marriage. When the Sinclairs returned to London, some months after the birth of the child, James Wyatt contrived to make himself more than ever necessary to Gilbert, who had taken to play higher than of old, and who now spent four evenings out of the six lawful days at a notorious whist club, sitting at the card table till the morning sun shone through the chinks in the shutters. Mr. Wyatt was a member of the same club, but too cautious a player for the set which Gilbert now affected.

"That fellow is going to the bad in every way," the lawyer said to himself. "If Clara Walsingham wants to see him ruined she is likely to have her wish without any direct interference of mine."

The state of affairs in Park Lane was indeed far from satisfactory. Gilbert had grown tired of playing the indulgent husband, and the inherent brutality of his nature had on more than one occasion displayed itself in angry disputes with his wife, whose will he now seemed to take a pleasure in thwarting, even in trifles. He complained of her present extravagance, with insolent reference to the poverty of her girlhood, and asked savagely if she thought his fortune could stand forever against her expensive follies.

"I don't think my follies are so likely to exhaust your income as your increasing taste for horse-racing, Gilbert," she answered coolly. "What is to be the cost of these racing stables you are building near Newmarket? I heard you, and that dreadful man, your trainer, talking of the tan galop the other day, and it seemed to me altogether rather an expensive affair, especially as your horses have such a knack of getting beaten. It is most gentleman-like of you to remind me of my poverty. Yes, I was very poor in my girl-hood—and very happy."

"And since you've married me you've been miserable. Pleasant, upon my soul! You'd have married that fellow Cyprian Davenant and lived in a ten-roomed house in the suburbs, with a maid of all work, and called that happiness, I suppose!"

"If I had married Sir Cyprian Davenant I should at least have been the wife of a gentleman," replied Constance.

This was not the first time that Gilbert had mentioned Cyprian Devenant of late. A report of the missing travelers had appeared in one of the newspapers, and their friends began to hope for their safe return. Gilbert Sinclair brooded over this probable return in a savage frame of mind, but did not communicate his thoughts upon the subject to his usual confidant, Mr. Wyatt, who thereupon opined that those thoughts were more than ordinarily bitter.

Before the London season was over Mr. Sinclair had occasion to attend a rather insignificant meeting in Yorkshire where a 2-year-old filly, from which he expected great things in the future, was to try her strength in a handicap race. He came home by way of Newmarket, where he spent a few days pleasantly enough in the supervision of his new buildings, and he had been absent altogether a week when he returned to Park Lane.

It was about 4 o'clock in the afternoon when he drove up to his own house in a hansom. He found his wife in the drawing-room occupied with several visitors, among whom appeared a tall figure which he remembered only too well, Sir Cyprian Davenant, bronzed with travel, and looking handsomer than when he left London.

Gilbert stood at gaze for a moment, confounded by surprise, and then went through the ceremony of hand-shaking with his wife's guests in an awkward, embarrassed manner.

Constance received him with her usual coldness, and he felt himself altogether at a disadvantage in the presence of the man he feared and hated. He seated himself, however, determined to see the end of this obnoxious visit, and remained moodily silent until the callers had dropped off one by one, Sir Cyprian among the earliest departures.

Gilbert turned savagely upon his wife directly the room was clear.

"So your old favorite has lost no time in renewing his intimacy with you," he said. "I came home at rather an awkward moment, I fancy."

"I did not perceive any particular awkwardness in your return," his wife answered coolly, "unless it was your manner to my friends, which was calculated to give them the idea that you scarcely felt at home in your own house."

"There was some one here who seemed a little too much at home, Mrs. Sinclair—some one who will find my presence a good deal more awkward if I should happen to find him here again. In plain words, I forbid you to receive Sir Cyprian Davenant in my house."

"I can no more close my doors upon Sir Cyprian Davenant than on any other visitor," replied Constance, "and I do not choose to insult an old friend of my family for the gratification of your senseless jealousy."

"Then you mean to defy me?"

"There is no question of defiance. I shall do what I consider right, without reference to this absurd fancy of yours. Sir Cyprian is not very likely to call upon me again unless you cultivate his acquaintance."

"I am not very likely to do that," Gilbert answered, savagely. His wife's quiet defiance baffled him, and he could find nothing more to say for himself. But this jealousy of Sir Cyprian was in no manner abated by Constance's self-possession. He remembered the fainting fit in the morning-room at Davenant, and he was determined to find some means of punishing her for her secret preference for this man. An ugly notion flashed across his mind, by and by, as he saw her with her child lying in her lap, bending over the infant with a look of supreme affection.

"She can find love for everything in the world except me," he said to himself, bitterly. He had ceased to care for the child after the first month or so of its existence, being inclined to resent its sex as a personal injury, and disliking his wife's devotion to the infant, which seemed to make her indifference to himself all the more obvious.

COMMON TO ALL.

No Religion Which Lacks the Idea of Sacrifice.

It is a curious thing that mankind has never known any form of religion in which an idea of sacrifice did not play a prominent part. The objects of sacrifice have been various and valuable in every part of the world. The Kamschatkans, however, offer nothing valuable to their gods but what is valuable to themselves.

The Copts kill a sheep, lamb, or kid at a marriage for the use of the guests at the bridegroom's house.

Palmer's Koran refers to the ancient custom of human sacrifice as either extinct or abolished by Mohammed.

The most valuable sacrifice that can possibly be made is the human being, common among the savages of the South Sea Islands. In Mexico, the brutality of the practice was excused by the fact of the victim being an enemy. Cattle are next esteemed in value, and the largest ox in herds is selected.

The Soo Soos, of West Africa, are so careful to propitiate their deity that they never undertake any affair of importance until they have sacrificed to him a bullock. Other edible domestic animals are held worthy of the honor of sacrifice.

The American Indian sacrificed dogs on the borders of difficult roads or by the side of rapids.

In China the animals slain are bullocks, heifers, sheep, and pigs.

Bullocks, goats, and sheep were the chief sacrificial animals of the Jews, selected with great care, to be without blemish.

An actual sacrifice of something the owner valued is the general practice.

We cover the coffin of the dead with flowers; the grave is often lined with them. Reverence and respect go with these tributes. The custom is a form of sacrifice and will not soon pass away.

His Interpretation.

Demonstrative bad temper has its ludicrous side. An Italian organ grinder had been playing before the house of an irascible old gentleman, who furiously and amid wild gesticulations ordered him to move on. The Italian stolidly stood his ground and played on, and at last was arrested for causing a disturbance. At the court the magistrate asked him why he did not leave when he was requested. "Ma no understan' mooch Inglese," was the reply. "Well, but you must have understood by his motions that he wanted you to go," said the magistrate. "I tink he come to dance," was the rejoinder.

THE druggists resent the general statement that the red light is a sign of danger.

CHANGES IN TARIFFS.

MANY ALTERATIONS HAVE BEEN MADE IN THE BILL.

Result of the Compromise Between the Democrats in the Senate—Duties Are Increased—Schedules in the Measure Which Suit the Majority.

Mutilate Wilson's Measure.

During the executive session Monday Senator Jones presented the amendments to the tariff bill, which have been considered and agreed to by the Democratic Senators, known as the compromise committee. There are over 400 of them, and it makes a new bill, or a measure greatly differing from the Wilson bill and from the Senate bill in any form in which it has been presented. The amendments heretofore presented by Senator Vest and reported from the Finance Committee are indorsed by the compromise committee. There is a general increase in the bill, and in some schedules the increases are very marked. The new sugar schedule provides:

On and after Jan. 1, 1895, there shall be levied, collected and paid on all sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color and on all tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses a duty of 40 per centum ad valorem, and upon all sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color there shall be levied, collected and paid a duty of one-eighth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the said duty of 40 per centum ad valorem; and all sugars, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete or concentrated molasses which are imported from or are the product of any country which at the time the same are exported therefrom pays, directly or indirectly, a bounty on the export thereof, shall pay a duty of one-tenth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the foregoing rates. Provided that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to abrogate or in any manner impair or affect the provisions of the treaty of commercial reciprocity concluded between the United States and the king of the Hawaiian Islands on Jan. 30, 1875, or the provisions of any act of Congress heretofore passed for the execution of the same; that on and after Jan. 1, 1895, there shall be levied, collected and paid on molasses testing 40 degrees or less by the polariscope and containing 20 per centum of moisture, and on molasses testing above 40 degrees and not above 56 degrees polariscope, a duty of 2 cents per gallon; if testing above 56 degrees polariscope a duty of 4 cents per gallon.

Changes in Other Schedules.

Other changes in the bill are:

Cartaric acid, 20 per cent. ad valorem; 18 in Senate, 20 in House bill.

Alcoholic perfumery, including Cologne water and other toilet waters and alcoholic compounds not specially provided for in this act, $2 a gallon and 50 per centum ad valorem; Senate and House bills, $2 a gallon and 25 ad valorem.

All coal-tar colors or dyes by whatever name known and not specially provided for in this act, 25 per cent.; Senate and House bills, 20.

New paragraphs inserted as follows:

Drugs, such as barks, beans, berries, balsams, buds, bulbs, bulbous roots, excrescences, fruits, flowers, dried fibers, dried insects, grains, gums and gum resin, herbs, leaves, lichens, mosses, nuts, roots and stems, spices, vegetables, seeds (aromatic), seeds of morbid growth, weeds and woods used expressly for dyeing, which are not edible, advanced in value or condition by refining or grinding or by other process of manufacture, and not specially provided for in this act, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

In the paragraph relating to fish the word "prepared" is stricken out and the rate of $6 per cent. ad valorem is made to apply to all fish oils.

Epsom salts are made dutiable at 1-5 of a cent per pound. Other changes are: Morphia or morphine salts thereof, 50 cents per ounce. Flaxseed and poppy oil, 20 cents per gallon instead of 15 cents in former bills.

On olive oil for salad purposes the House rate of 35 cents per gallon is restored, instead of the Senate committee rate of 25 per cent.

Glass Schedule Changed.

A portion of the glass schedule is changed so as to read as follows:

Green and colored, molded or pressed, and flint and lime glass bottles holding more than one pint and demijohns and carboys, covered or uncovered, and other molded or pressed green and colored and flint or lime glass bottleware not specially provided for in this act, five-eighths of 1 cent per pound. Green and colored, molded or pressed and flint and lime glass bottles and vials holding not more than one pint and not less than one-quarter of a pint, three-fourths of one cent per pound; if holding less than one-fourth of a pint 35 cents per gross, whether filled or unfilled, whether their contents be dutiable or free.

The Senate rate on the above is 40 per cent; House rate, 30 per cent. Another change in glass is as follows:

Unpolished cylinder, crown, and cotton window glass, not exceeding 10 by 15 inches square, 1 cent per pound; above that, and not exceeding 16 by 24 inches square, 1¼ cents per pound; above that, and not exceeding 24 by 30 inches square, 1½ cents per pound; above that, and not exceeding 28 by 36 inches square, 1¾ cents per pound; all above that, 1¾ cents per pound.

Provided, that unpolished cylinder, crown, and window glass, imported in boxes, shall contain fifty square feet, as nearly as sizes will permit, and that duty shall be commuted thereon according to the actual weight of the glass.

There is a change of sizes as well as of rates, and comparisons cannot be made.

Plate-glass, 24 by 36 inches, is taxed 23 cents per square foot; Senate and House bills, 20 cents; all plate-glass above these dimensions, 38 cents per square foot; Senate and House bills, 36 cents. Looking-glass plates are added to glasses, dutiable at 10 per cent. ad valorem, in addition to other rates chargeable thereon.

Changes in Iron Duties.

The pig-iron paragraph is amended to read as follows:

Iron in pigs, iron Kentledge, Spiegeleisen, ferromanganese, ferro-silicon, wrought and cast scrap-iron and scrap steel, $4 per ton; but nothing shall be deemed scrap-iron or scrap steel except waste or refuse iron or steel, fit only to be manufactured.

Beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, car-truck channels, "T" columns or posts, or parts or sections of columns or posts, deck and bulb beams and building forms, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, whether plain or punctured or fitted for use, 6-10 of a cent a pound. Senate bill 35, House bill 30 per cent.

Railway bars, made of iron or steel, or railway bars made in part of steel, "T" rails, and punched iron or steel flat rails, 7-20 of a cent a pound. Senate bill 22½ per cent. ad valorem, House bill 20 per cent.

Tin plate 1 1-5 cents a pound, restoring the House rate; Senate bill 1 per cent.

Cutlery Schedule.

The cutlery schedule is changed to read as follows:

Pen-knives, pocket-knives or erasers of all kinds, valued at not more than 30 cents per dozen, 25 per cent ad valorem; valued at more than 30 cents per dozen and not exceeding 50 cents per dozen, 12 cents per dozen; valued at more than 50 cents per dozen and not exceeding $1 per dozen, 25 cents per dozen; valued at more than $1 per dozen and not exceeding $1.50 per dozen, 40 cents per dozen; valued at more than $1.50 per dozen and not exceeding $3 per dozen, 75 cents per dozen; valued at more than $3 a dozen, 50 per cent. ad valorem, and in addition thereto, on all the above valued at more than 30 cents a dozen, 25 per cent. ad valorem; provided that blades, handles or any other parts or any of either of the articles named in this paragraph, imported in any other manner than assembled in pen-knives, pocket-knives or erasers, shall be subject to no less duty than herein provided for pen-knives, pocket-knives or erasers valued at more than 30 cents a dozen. The Senate and House bills 15 cents.

Tobacco Schedule.

Wrapper tobacco, unstemmed, imported in any bale, box or package, or in bulk, $1.50 per pound; if stemmed, $2.25 per pound. House and Senate bills $1 and $1.35 respectively on above articles.

Snuff and snuff flour manufactured of tobacco, ground, dry, or damp and pickled, scented or otherwise, of all descriptions, 50 cents a pound; Senate and House bills, 40 cents.

The cigar paragraph is amended to read as follows:

Cigars, cigarettes, cheroots of all kinds, $4 a pound and 25 per cent. ad valorem; and paper cigars and cigarettes, including wrappers, shall be subject to the same duties as are herein imposed on cigars.

The duty on cigars in the House and Senate bills is $3 per pound and 25 per cent.

Dairy and Farm Products.

Butter and substitutes therefor, 4 cents per pound, which is the House rate; Senate bill, 20 per cent.

Cheese, 4 cents per pound; Senate and House bills, 25 per cent.

Milk, fresh, 3 cents per gallon; Senate and House bills, free.

Broom corn, $6 per ton; Senate and House bills, free.

Cabbages, 2 cents each; Senate and House bills, free.

Eggs, 3 cents per dozen; Senate and House bills, free.

Hay, $2 per ton, the House rate; Senate, 20 per cent.

Honey, 10 cents per gallon, the House rate; Senate bill, 20 per cent.

Hops, 8 cents per pound, the House rate; Senate bill, 20 per cent.

Onions, 20 cents per bushel, the House rate; Senate bill, 20 per cent.

The House rates in the paragraph devoted to peas are restored so that the paragraph reads as follows: Peas, dried, 20 cents per bushel; split peas, 50 cents per bushel of sixty pounds, and peas in cartons, papers or other small packages, 1 cent per pound; Senate, 20 per cent.

Potatoes, 15 cents per bushel; Senate bill, 20 per cent; House bill, 10 cents per bushel.

Meats of all kinds, prepared or preserved, not specially provided for in this act, 20 per cent.

Lard, 1 cent per pound; taken from free list.

Poultry, House rates (not dressed, 2 cents per pound; dressed, 3 cents per pound) are restored; Senate bill, 20 per cent.

Changes in Cotton Schedule.

Paragraph 253, relating to cotton cloth, is stricken out and the following inserted:

Cotton not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted or printed exceeding fifty and 100 threads to the square inch, counting the warped filling, and not exceeding six square yards to the pound, 1¼ cents a square yard; exceeding six and not exceeding nine square yards to the pound, 1½ cents a square yard; exceeding nine square yards to the pound, 1¾ cents a square yard; if bleached and not exceeding six square yards to the pound 1¾ cents a yard; exceeding six and not exceeding nine square yards to the pound 1¾ cents a square yard; exceeding nine square yards to the pound 2¼ cents a square yards; if dyed, colored, stained, painted or printed and not exceeding six-square yards to the pound, 2¾ cents to the square yard; exceeding six and not exceeding nine square yards to the pound, 3¼ cents to the square yard; exceeding nine square yards to the pound, 3½ cents per square yard; provided, that on all cotton cloth not exceeding 100 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 7 cents per square yard, 25 per centum ad valorem; bleached, valued at over 9 cents per square yard, 25 per centum ad valorem; and dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 12 cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Duties on Woolen Goods.

On blankets, wool and flannels for underwear and felts for paper-makers' use and printing machines, composed wholly or in part of wool, the hair of the camel, goat or alpaca, or other animals, valued at not more than 30 cents per pound, the duty will be 25 per centum ad valorem; valued at more than 30 and not more than 40 cents per pound, 30 per centum ad valorem; valued at more than 40 cents per pound, 35 per centum ad valorem;" the change consisting in restoring the quoted words in the House bill.

On women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloth, bunting or goods of similar description or character "or all manufactures, including such as have any rubber as a component material," composed wholly or in part of wool worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca or other animal, and not specially provided for in this act, the House rate of 40 per cent. is restored. Senate bill, 35 per cent. and the following words added:

Valued at not over $1 a pound, 40 per cent. ad valorem; valued at more than 80 cents and not more than $1 a pound, 45 per cent. ad valorem; and all of the foregoing valued at more than $1 a pound, 50 per cent.

On ready-made clothing composed of any above-mentioned materials the House rate of 45 per cent. is restored. Senate bill, 40 per cent.

The following paragraph stricken out of the House bill by the Senate Committee is now restored:

On cloaks, dolmans, talmas, ulsters or other outside garments for ladies and children's apparel, and goods of similar description or used for like purposes, composed wholly or in part of worsted, hair of the camel, goat or alpaca, or other animals, made up or manufactured wholly or in part, the rate is changed from 45 to 50 per centum ad valorem.

Brussels carpets, figured or plain, all carpet of like character or description, 35 per cent. ad valorem. House and Senate bills, 30 per cent.

Velvet and tapestries, velvet carpets, figured or plain, printed on the warp or otherwise, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, 35 per cent. ad valorem; House and Senate bills, 30 per cent. Tapestry Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, printed on the warp or otherwise, 25 per cent. ad valorem; House and Senate bill, 30 per cent. Triple ingrains, three-ply, and all Venetian carpets, 35 per cent. ad valorem; House and Senate bills, 30 per cent. Wool Dutch and two-ply ingrain carpets, 30 per cent; House and Senate bills, 25 per cent.

Changes in the Free List.

SENATOR VOORHEES' LETTER.

WASHINGTON, April 14, 1894.

To Hon. John B. Stoll, South Bend, Ind.

MY DEAR SIR:—Let me thank you for your kind favor of several days ago, and assure you that it would have received an earlier acknowledgement but for the unceasing and unsparing demand there is here on every moment of my time. For several months past my labors have been harder and more constant day and night, than ever before in the course of my life, and my correspondence has, to my great regret, been much neglected. At times my mail has brought more than a thousand letters a day. This must be my excuse to you and other cherished friends for not being more prompt to answer.

I send you a full and correct copy of my speech of the second in the senate. It seems that in certain quarters I am to be assailed for all that is done or left undone by the senate of an unsatisfactory character on the subject of the tariff. To begin with the senate committee on finance is composed of eleven members, six of whom are democrats and five republicans. In order to be able to report a bill of any kind on the tariff you will see that there must be an absolute agreement between the six democrats constituting a majority of that committee—each member of that majority, including the chairman, having his own vote to cast, and no more. Any bill on the subject of revenue always so important for the support of the government by tariff taxation from the first one in 1789 to the present time has been necessarily and inevitably an adjustment of differences between men in regard to business and labor interests of the highest importance.

One of the greatest compromise measures which marked Henry Clay's long and brilliant career was that of 1832 on the subject, the terms and the details of the tariff. In fact, it must be admitted that everything of great value in the history of this government, including the constitution of the United States itself, and all the leading enactments of our legislative history, comes from the spirit of concession, and the work of compromise. Of course, the right of a majority to govern must be conceded or our form of government must be abandoned. No one man, in committee, in senate, or anywhere else, can have his own way, regardless of others while liberty remains regulated by law. There are several features in the bill now pending in the senate which I did not desire to have in it, but because I was overruled on those points I did not, therefore, feel at liberty to join the republican members of the committee, report no bill at all, defeat all proposed legislation, and thereby leave the McKinley law remaining on our statute books. You will see that the bill we reported reduces taxes nearly seventy-seven millions per annum—23,500,000 of that amount being taken off the wearing apparel of the people. I say to you with the utmost frankness and sincerity that I fought hard against anything at all being put on sugar, iron or coal, but when it was demonstrated in a full three days, hard-working caucus of all the democratic senators, as well as in the committee, that a bill with these articles absolutely on the free list could no more pass the senate than a ship of lead could navigate the ocean, I came to the conclusion after anxious and painful solicitude that it was my plain, clear and explicit duty to the laboring classes of the country, and especially to the democratic party of Indiana, to support the bill as it now stands; to make sure of the immense reductions in tariff taxation which it guarantees, and then continue to fight for further progress and reform thereafter. I cannot help remembering that the world was not made in a day, although there was no want of a reliable majority on that occasion. If I have made a mistake in the discharge of my duty as one of your senators, it is in believing that the bill as reported and which is now pending is greatly to be preferred to no legislation at all—to the odious McKinley law which we stand pledged to repeal.

But I think much is being said and written now in absolute ignorance of what the senate bill, as well as the Wilson bill actually contains. Are the people of Indiana aware of the fact that the lowest average rate of duty, or of tariff tax, ever known in this country since the Walker tariff of 1846, and its subsequent democratic amendment in 1857, is the rate now provided for, and contained in the bill I had the honor to present to the senate on the 20th day of March, and which is now pending? This statement is true notwithstanding the transfer of certain articles from the free list in the house bill to the dutiable list in the senate bill. I repeat that the average rate of duty, or of tariff tax, in the Wilson bill as it came from the house with those articles on the free list.

Let me give you, in this connection, a few treasury statistics which are officially reliable, and may be of interest at this time.

Average rate of ad valorem duty on dutiable imports:

1890—The McKinley bill	49 58
1888—The Mills bill, proposed	42 78
1894—The Wilson bill	35 62
1894—The Senate bill	34 15

Nothing could be further from my wish or purpose than to say a word in criticism of the Wilson bill or any of the work of the house with its reliable democratic majority of nearly a hundred. At the same time I am hardly willing to be clubbed to death, or read out of the democratic party in the name of the Wilson bill by those who are totally ignorant of its most important provisions. The imperious demand that the senate shall pass the Wilson bill without amendment is a burlesque on common sense. There is not an intelligent man in the United States, with information on the subject, who has for a moment thought the Wilson bill was to pass the senate without amendment. Its own authors and supporters have never expected anything of the kind. When it came over to the senate it was followed by many of its ablest and most judicious friends, pointing out to the senate committee on finance, where and in what respect it could be improved by amendments. But aside from all other features of the Wilson bill requiring the utmost care and attention of the senate there was one of immense overshadowing importance, which could not be heedlessly ignored. Strange as it may appear to you and our people, yet it is a fact that on the face of the Wilson bill, as it passed the house and came to the senate, a deficiency will occur in the year 1895 of $27,278,715,33. The title of the bill is:

"A bill to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the government and for other purposes."

It is but just to the ways and means committee of the house to explain that they thought this deficiency would be made up by an increase of importations in the future. An estimate of this kind, however, is wholly conjectural. It may come true, or it may entirely fail, most likely the latter. The depressed condition of business over the world at this time make our importations very uncertain. Surely a mere guess at the future on a question so vital as government revenue is not safe ground on which to legislate. The fulfillment of the pledge in the title of the bill, "to provide revenue for the government," cannot be left in any doubt. If a deficiency should occur the actual cash must be raised to meet it, either by issuing treasury bonds, the latter a thing most abhorrent to the American people. Rather than knowingly and consciously secure the passage of a bill which aimed to provide revenue for the government, but in reality provided for a deficiency and a consequent increase of our interest bearing bonded debt, I would gladly leave my seat here in the senate and hide myself forever as far as possible from public disgrace.

You know I want no hard words with anyone. I cherish not the slightest resentment on account of anything that has been said. I have not a particle of ambition to gratify in the future, but if anyone in Indiana or anywhere else, thinks it wise to impugn my motives and impeach my democracy in the name of a measure which fails to provide sufficient revenue with which to pay the ordinary expenses of the government, while at the same time it levies a higher rate of tax than the bill I reported to the senate, that person, whoever he may be, will find my side of that issue, not neglected at the proper time, before our people. I do not claim perfection as you know, for the senate bill, but under all the trying circumstances here, I am willing to stand or fall by a bill which makes far heavier reductions on the necessaries of life than the Mills bill, the Morrison bill, the Wilson bill or any other proposed Democratic bill since the amendments to the Walker tariff in 1857, and that while making such reductions and giving such relief also increases the revenue and places the credit of the government on secure foundations. This kind of a platform will do to stand on at the close of my career if the close is at hand.

Senator Voorhees' Letter.

After all, however, both the bills are alike merely tentative and experimental; they will have to go together to the joint conference committee of the two houses; neither of them in terms will become the law. The enactment, if one is reached, will simply be such a measure of compromise as will commend itself to the judgment of the conference committee appointed to adjust the differences between the two houses as manifested in the two bills.

With great respect and kind regards, I am, as ever, very truly your friend,

D. W. Voorhees.

That Wonderful Sheep.

Columbia City Commercial.

On the 16th of last month the Commercial contained an item about a sheep that increased in one year to a flock of nine. Several persons have inquired of us as to the truth of the assertion and with a very simple explanation easily explained the item was all right. In this week's Mail appears an item written by one of the Mail force but under the "blind" of "A Farmer." The item stated that they had read snake stories, ghost stories and fish stories but were not looking for a sheep story. We haven't time or space to devote to newspaper controversy, but for the benefit of "Farmer" and others who cannot see through this simple problem of nature, we will publish the following: On March 16, 1893, this certain professional man bought a ewe with lamb. On the following Sunday there were three lambs born, so four days after he purchased the sheep he had one sheep and three lambs. As one of the three lambs was a buck, he traded this lamb for a ewe. Last February the three lambs and the old sheep raised five lambs all together. So you see the item is correct. The professional man had owned the first sheep over a year but the increase, which is the disputed part of the article, were made inside of a year and is no uncommon occurrence. It is a possibility for one sheep to increase to 25 in one year, but such a thing is not a probability.

For the benefit of our neighbors who were knocked out on our sheep story, we wish to say that we know three parties in this county who will make affidavit to the fact that they know of a cow in this county that has given birth to 14 calves in four years. How does that go down for facts?

Nationality Shown in Tillage.

For fifty miles about New York the country is a region of small farms. Nearly all are carefully tilled, but the manner in which each is conducted comes close to indicating the nationality of the owner. The native American has a lawn in front of his house, and leaves an uncultivated strips near the fences of his fields. Also his preference in the way of crops is for grain. The Englishman and the German devote much space to berries and vegetables, and both delight in displays of flowers before their houses. The Frenchman is sure to be a grape grower. He, too, revels in flowers but he fosters those that, cut or as potted plants, will find a city market. The Irishman is a raiser of potatoes, cabbage and corn. His home displays little outside adornment, but almost always there is about it an air of solid comfort. Abroad, "land is land," and those who have been tenants of holdings that cost them an annual rental of $20 per acre, retain their habit of close cultivation when farming in the United States. Here, again, the difference between the American and the foreigner crops out. The former is prodigal of soil and lets the difficult spots alone, the latter utilizes every inch of it clear to the roadway and uses fertilizers with skill and advantage to himself.

Table TALK.

Irresistible and constantly increasing must be the usefulness of "Table Talk" (Philadelphia) to all housekeepers, for with the appearance of the May issue they find much of fresh interest between its covers. Not only on the latest styles and devices for dining room and kitchen, novelties and helps for mother and children, given, but it holds an unusual number of recipes, and a simple, practical and easily followed Menu for every meal in the month, which department is edited by Miss Helen Louise Johnson. Dr. Wiley, Chemist of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, also contributes. Miss Emma O. Conro, of Pratt Institute, writes very entertainingly on the "Elevation of Household Labor to the Dignity of a Profession," and Miss Armstrong delights us with an article on "Suppers and Teas of Long Ago." This magazine offers a sample copy free to any of our readers. Published by Table Talk Publishing Co, Philadelphia. Price, $1.00 per year.

A NARROW ESCAPE!

How it Happened.

The following remarkable event in a lady's life will interest the reader: "For a long time I had a terrible pain at my heart, which fluttered almost incessantly. I had no appetite and could not sleep. I would be compelled to sit up in bed and belch gas from my stomach until I thought every minute would be my last. There was a feeling of oppression about my heart, and I was afraid to draw a full breath. I couldn't sweep a room without sitting down and resting; but, thank God, by the help of New Heart Cure all that is past and I feel like another woman. Before using the New Heart Cure I had taken different so-called remedies and been treated by doctors without any benefit until I was both discouraged and disgusted. My husband bought me a bottle of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and am happy to say I never regretted it, as I now have a splendid appetite and sleep well. I weighed 125 pounds when I began taking the remedy, and now I weigh 130½. Its effect in my case has been truly marvelous. It far surpasses any other medicine I have ever taken or any benefit I ever received from physicians."—Mrs. Harry Starr, Pottsville, Pa., October 12, 1892.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles $5, express prepaid. This great discovery by an eminent specialist in heart disease, contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

CHAPTER VII—Continued.

It was within a few days of this conversation that Wyatt gratified himself with the performance of a little experiment which he had devised in the comfortable retirement of his bachelor room at Davenant. He had come into Mrs. Sinclair's morning-room after breakfast to consult her upon the details of an amateur dramatic performance that was to take place shortly, and had, for a wonder, found the husband and wife alone together.

"Perhaps we'd better discuss the business at some other time," he said. "I know Sinclair doesn't care much about this sort of thing."

"Is that your theatrical rubbish?" asked Gilbert. "You'd better say what you've got to say about it. You needn't mind me. I can absorb myself in the study of 'Bell's Life' for a quarter of an hour or so."

He withdrew to one of the windows, and occupied himself with his newspaper, while James Wyatt showed Constance the books of some farces that had just come to him by post, and discussed the fitness of each for drawing-room representation.

"Every amateur in polite society believes himself able to play Charles Matthews' business," he said laughing. "It is a fixed delusion of the human mind. Of course we shall set them all by the ears, do what we may. Perhaps it would do better to let them draw lots for characters, or we might put the light comedy parts up to auction, and send the proceeds to the poor-box."

He ran on in this strain gayly enough, writing lists of the characters and pieces, and putting down the names of the guests with a rapid pen as he talked, until Gilbert Sinclair threw down his newspaper and came over to the fire-place, politely requesting his friend to stop that row."

It was a hopelessly wet morning, and the master of Davenant was sorely at a loss for amusement and occupation. He had come to his wife's room in rather a defiant spirit, determined that she should favor him with a little more of her society than it was her habit to give him, and he had found her writing letters, which she declared were imperative, and had sat by the fire waiting for her correspondence to be finished, in a very sulky mood.

"What's the last news, Wyatt?" he asked, poking the fire savagely; "anything stirring in London?"

"Nothing—in London. There is some news of an old friend of mine who's far away from London—news I don't altogether like."

"Some client who has bolted in order to swindle you out of a long bill of costs, I suppose," answered Gilbert, indifferently.

"No: the friend I am talking of is a gentleman we all know—the late owner of this place."

"Sir Cyprian Davenant?" cried Gilbert.

Constance looked up from her writing.

"Sir Cyprian Davenant," repeated James Wyatt.

"Has anything happened to him?"

"About the last and worst thing that can happen to any man, I fear," answered the lawyer. "For some time since there have been no reports of Captain Harcourt's expedition; and that in a negative way, was about as bad as could be. But in a letter I received this morning, from a member of the Geographical Society, there is worse news. My friend tells me there is a very general belief that Harcourt and his party have been made away with by the natives. Of course, this is all club gossip as yet, and I trust that it may turn out a false alarm."

Constance had dropped her pen, making a great blot upon the page. She was very pale, and her hands were clasped nervously upon the table before her. Gilbert watched her with eager, angry eyes. It was just such an opportunity as he had wished for. He wanted above all things to satisfy his doubts about that man.

"I don't see that it much matters whether the report is true or false," he said, "as far as Davenant is concerned. The fellow is a scamp, and only left England because he had spent his last sixpence in dissipation."

"I beg your pardon, Sinclair," remonstrated Mr. Wyatt, "the Davenant property was impoverished by Cyprian's father and grandfather. I do not say that he was not extravagant himself at one period of his life, but he had reformed long before he left England."

"Reformed—yes, when he had no more money to spend. That's a common kind of reform. However, I suppose you've profited so much by his ruin that you can afford to praise him."

"Hadn't you better ring the bell?" asked James Wyatt, very quietly; "I think Mrs. Sinclair has fainted."

He was right; Constance Sinclair's head had fallen back upon the cushion of her chair and her eyes were closed. Gilbert ran across to her and seized her hand. It was deadly cold.

"Yes," he said, "she has fainted. Sir Cyprian was an old friend of hers. You know that better than I do, though you have never chosen to tell me the truth. And now I suppose you have trumped up this story in order to let me see what a fool I have been."

"It is not a trumped-up story," returned the other. "It is the common talk among men who know the travelers and their line of country."

"Then for your friend's sake it is to be hoped it's true."

"Why so?"

"Because if he has escaped those black fellows to come my way it will be so much worse for both of; for as sure as there is a sky above us, if he and I meet I shall kill him."

"Bah," muttered Mr. Wyatt, contemptuously, "we don't live in an age for that sort of thing. Here comes your wife's maid; I'll get out of the way. Pray apologize to Mrs. Sinclair for my indiscretion in forgetting that Sir Cyprian was a friend of her family. It was only natural that she should be affected by the news."

The lawyer went away as the maid came into the room. His face was brightened by a satisfied smile as he walked slowly along the corridor leading to the billiard-room.

"Othello was a fool to him in the matter of jealousy," he said to himself. "I think I've fired the train. If the news I heard is true, and Davenant is on his way home, there'll be nice work by and by."

CHAPTER VIII.

"HAD YOU LOVED ME ONCE AS YOU HAVE NOT LOVED."

Gilbert Sinclair said very little to his wife about the fainting fit. She was herself perfectly candid upon the subject. Sir Cyprian was an old friend—a friend whom she had known and liked ever since childhood—and Mr. Wyatt's news had quite overcome her. She did not seem to consider it necessary to apologize for her emotion.

"I have been overexerting myself a little lately, or I should scarcely have fainted, however sorry I felt," she said, quietly and Gilbert wondered at her self-possession, but was not the less convinced that she had loved—that she still did love—Cyprian Davenant. He watched her closely after this to see if he could detect signs of hidden grief, but her manner in society had lost none of its brightness, and when the Harcourt expedition was next spoken of she bore her part in the conversation with perfect ease.

Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair left Davenant early in May for a charming house in Park Lane, furnished throughout in delicate tints of white and green, like a daisy-sprinkled meadow, in early spring, a style in which the upholsterer had allowed full scope to the sentimentality of his own nature, bearing in mind that the house was to be occupied by a newly married couple. Mrs. Sinclair declared herself perfectly satisfied with the house, and Mrs. Sinclair's friends were in raptures with it. She instituted a Thursday evening supper after the opera, which was an immense success, and enjoyed a popularity that excited some envy on the part of unmarried beauties. Mrs. Walsingham heard of the Thursday evening parties, and saw her beautiful rival very often at the opera; but she heard from James Wyatt that Gilbert Sinclair spent a great deal of his time at his club, and made a point of attending all the race meetings, habits that did not augur well for his domestic happiness.

"He will grow tired of her, as he did of me," thought Clara Walsingham.

But Gilbert was in no way weary of his wife. He loved her as passionately as he had loved her at the first; with an exacting selfish passion, it is true, but with all the intensity of which his nature was capable. If he had lived in the good old feudal days he would have shut her up in some lonely turret chamber, where no one but himself could approach her. He knew that she did not love him; and with his own affection for her there was always mingled an angry sense of her coldness and ingratitude.

The London season came to an end once more, and Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair went back to Davenant. Nothing had been heard of Sir Cyprian or his companions throughout the summer, and Gilbert had ceased to trouble himself about his absent rival. The man was dead, in all probability, and it was something more than folly to waste a thought upon him. So things went on pleasantly enough, until the early spring gave a baby daughter to the master of Davenant, much to his disappointment, as he ardently desired a son and heir.

The birth of this infant brought a new sense of joy to the mind of Constance Sinclair. She had not thought it possible that the child could give her so much happiness. She devoted herself to her baby with a tenderness which was at first very pleasing to her husband, but which became by and by distasteful to him. He grew jealous of the child's power to absorb so much affection from one who had never given him the love he longed for. The existence of his daughter seemed to bring him no nearer to his wife. The time and attention which she had given to society she now gave to her child; but her husband was no more to her than he had ever been, a little less, perhaps, as he told himself angrily in the course of his gloomy meditations.

Mrs. Walsingham read the announcement of the infant's birth in extreme bitterness of spirit, and when James Wyatt next called upon her she asked him what had become of his promise that those two should be parted by his agency.

The lawyer shrugged his shoulders deprecatingly. "I did not tell you that the parting should take place within any given time," he said; "but it shall go hard with me if I do not keep my promise sooner or later."

He had indeed not been idle. The wicked work which he had set himself to do had progressed considerably. It was he who always contrived, in a subtle manner, to remind Gilbert Sinclair of his wife's coldness toward himself and to hint at her affection for another, while seeming to praise and defend her. Throughout their acquaintance his wealthy client had treated him with a selfish indifference and a cool, unconsciuus insolence, that had galled him to the quick, and he took a malicious pleasure in the discomfiture which Sinclair had brought upon himself by his marriage. When the Sinclairs returned to London, some months after the birth of the child, James Wyatt contrived to make himself more than ever necessary to Gilbert, who had taken to play higher than of old, and who now spent four evenings out of the six lawful days at a notorious whist club, sitting at the card table till the morning sun shone through the chinks in the shutters. Mr. Wyatt was a member of the same club, but too cautious a player for the set which Gilbert now affected.

"That fellow is going to the bad in every way," the lawyer said to himself. "If Clara Walsingham wants to see him ruined she is likely to have her wish without any direct interference of mine."

The state of affairs in Park Lane was indeed far from satisfactory. Gilbert had grown tired of playing the indulgent husband, and the inherent brutality of his nature had on more than one occasion displayed itself in angry disputes with his wife, whose will he now seemed to take a pleasure in thwarting, even in trifles. He complained of her present extravagance, with insolent reference to the poverty of her girlhood, and asked savagely if she thought his fortune could stand forever against her expensive follies.

"I don't think my follies are so likely to exhaust your income as your increasing taste for horse-racing, Gilbert," she answered coolly. "What is to be the cost of these racing stables you are building near Newmarket? I heard you, and that dreadful man, your trainer, talking of the tan galop the other day, and it seemed to me altogether rather an expensive affair, especially as your horses have such a knack of getting beaten. It is most gentleman-like of you to remind me of my poverty. Yes, I was very poor in my girl-hood—and very happy."

"And since you've married me you've been miserable. Pleasant, upon my soul! You'd have married that fellow Cyprian Davenant and lived in a ten-roomed house in the suburbs, with a maid of all work, and called that happiness, I suppose."

"If I had married Sir Cyprian Davenant I should at least have been the wife of a gentleman," replied Constance.

This was not the first time that Gilbert had mentioned Cyprian Devenant of late. A report of the missing travelers had appeared in one of the newspapers, and their friends began to hope for their safe return. Gilbert Sinclair brooded over this probable return in a savage frame of mind, but did not communicate his thoughts upon the subject to his usual confidant, Mr. Wyatt, who thereupon opined that those thoughts were more than ordinarily bitter.

Before the London season was over Mr. Sinclair had occasion to attend a rather insignificant meeting in Yorkshire where a 2-year-old filly, from which he expected great things in the future, was to try her strength in a handicap race. He came home by way of Newmarket, where he spent a few days pleasantly enough in the supervision of his new buildings, and he had been absent altogether a week when he returned to Park Lane.

It was about 4 o'clock in the afternoon when he drove up to his own house in a hansom. He found his wife in the drawing-room occupied with several visitors, among whom appeared a tall figure which he remembered only too well, Sir Cyprian Davenant, bronzed with travel, and looking handsomer than when he left London.

Gilbert stood at gaze for a moment, confounded by surprise, and then went through the ceremony of hand-shaking with his wife's guests in an awkward, embarrassed manner.

Constance received him with her usual coldness, and he felt himself altogether at a disadvantage in the presence of the man he feared and hated. He seated himself, however, determined to see the end of this obnoxious visit, and remained moodily silent until the callers had dropped off one by one, Sir Cyprian among the earliest departures.

Gilbert turned savagely upon his wife directly the room was clear.

"So your old favorite has lost no time in renewing his intimacy with you," he said. "I came home at rather an awkward moment, I fancy."

"I did not perceive any particular awkwardness in your return," his wife answered coolly, "unless it was your manner to my friends, which was calculated to give them the idea that you scarcely felt at home in your own house."

"There was some one here who seemed a little too much at home, Mrs. Sinclair—some one who will find my presence a good deal more awkward if I should happen to find him here again. In plain words, I forbid you to receive Sir Cyprian Davenant in my house."

"I can no more close my doors upon Sir Cyprian Davenant than on any other visitor," replied Constance, "and I do not choose to insult an old friend of my family for the gratification of your senseless jealousy."

"Then you mean to defy me?"

"There is no question of defiance. I shall do what I consider right, without reference to this absurd fancy of yours. Sir Cyprian is not very likely to call upon me again unless you cultivate his acquaintance."

"I am not very likely to do that," Gilbert answered, savagely. His wife's quiet defiance baffled him, and he could find nothing more to say for himself. But this jealousy of Sir Cyprian was in no manner abated by Constance's self-possession. He remembered the fainting fit in the morning-room at Davenant, and he was determined to find some means of punishing her for her secret preference for this man. An ugly notion flashed across his mind, by and by, as he saw her with her child lying in her lap, bending over the infant with a look of supreme affection.

"She can find love for everything in the world except me," he said to himself, bitterly. He had ceased to care for the child after the first month or so of its existence, being inclined to resent its sex as a personal injury, and disliking his wife's devotion to the infant, which seemed to make her indifference to himself all the more obvious.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

COMMON TO ALL.

No Religion Which Lacks the Idea of Sacrifice.

It is a curious thing that mankind has never known any form of religion in which an idea of sacrifice did not play a prominent part. The objects of sacrifice have been various and valuable in every part of the world. The Kamschatkans, however, offer nothing valuable to their gods but what is valuable to themselves.

The Copts kill a sheep, lamb, or kid at a marriage for the use of the guests at the bridegroom's house.

Palmer's Koran refers to the ancient custom of human sacrifice as either extinct or abolished by Mohammed.

The most valuable sacrifice that can possibly be made is the human being, common among the savages of the South Sea Islands. In Mexico, the brutality of the practice was excused by the fact of the victim being an enemy. Cattle are next esteemed in value, and the largest ox in herds is selected.

The Soo Soos, of West Africa, are so careful to propitiate their deity that they never undertake any affair of importance until they have sacrificed to him a bullock. Other edible domestic animals are held worthy of the honor of sacrifice.

The American Indian sacrificed dogs on the borders of difficult roads or by the side of rapids.

In China the animals slain are bullocks, heifers, sheep, and pigs.

Bullocks, goats, and sheep were the chief sacrificial animals of the Jews, selected with great care, to be without blemish.

An actual sacrifice of something the owner valued is the general practice.

We cover the coffin of the dead with flowers; the grave is often lined with them. Reverence and respect go with these tributes. The custom is a form of sacrifice and will not soon pass away.

His Interpretation.

Demonstrative bad temper has its ludicrous side. An Italian organ grinder had been playing before the house of an irascible old gentleman, who furiously and amid wild gesticulations ordered him to move on. The Italian stolidly stood his ground and played on, and at last was arrested for causing a disturbance. At the court the magistrate asked him why he did not leave when he was requested. "Me no understan' mooch Inglese," was the reply. "Well, but you must have understood by his motions that he wanted you to go," said the magistrate. "I tink he come to dance," was the rejoinder.

THE druggists resent the general statement that the red light is a sign of danger.

CHANGES IN TARIFFS.

MANY ALTERATIONS HAVE BEEN MADE IN THE BILL.

Result of the Compromise Between the Democrats in the Senate—Duties Are Increased—Schedules in the Measure Which Suit the Majority.

Mutilate Wilson's Measure.

During the executive session Monday Senator Jones presented the amendments to the tariff bill, which have been considered and agreed to by the Democratic Senators, known as the compromise committee. There are over 400 of them, and it makes a new bill, or a measure greatly differing from the Wilson bill and from the Senate bill in any form in which it has been presented. The amendments heretofore presented by Senator Vest and reported from the Finance Committee are indorsed by the compromise committee. There is a general increase in the bill, and in some schedules the increases are very marked. The new sugar schedule provides:

On and after Jan. 1, 1895, there shall be levied, collected and paid on all sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color and on all tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses a duty of 40 per centum ad valorem, and upon all sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color there shall be levied, collected and paid a duty of one-eighth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the said duty of 40 per centum ad valorem; and all sugars, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete or concentrated molasses which are imported from or are the product of any country which at the time the same are exported thereto pays, directly or indirectly, a bounty on the export thereof, shall pay a duty of one-tenth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the foregoing rates. Provided that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to abrogate or in any manner impair or affect the provisions of the treaty of commercial reciprocity concluded between the United States and the king of the Hawaiian Islands on Jan. 30, 1875, or the provisions of any act of Congress heretofore passed for the execution of the same; that on and after Jan. 1, 1895, there shall be levied, collected and paid on molasses testing 40 degrees or less by the polariscope and containing 20 per centum of moisture, and on molasses testing above 40 degrees and not above 56 degrees polariscope, a duty of 2 cents per gallon; if testing above 56 degrees polariscope a duty of 4 cents per gallon.

Changes in Other Schedules.

Other changes in the bill are:

Tartaric acid, 20 per cent. ad valorem; 18 in Senate. 20 in House bill.

Alcoholic perfumery, including Cologne water and other toilet waters and alcoholic compounds not specially provided for in this act, $2 a gallon and 50 per centum ad valorem; Senate and House bills, $2 a gallon and 25 ad valorem.

All coal-tar colors or dyes by whatever name known and not specially provided for in this act, 25 per cent.; Senate and House bills, 20.

New paragraphs inserted as follows:

Drugs, such as barks, beans, berries, balsams, buds, bulbs, bulbous roots, excrescences, fruits, flowers, dried fibers, dried insects, grains, gums and gum resin, herbs, leaves, lichens, mosses, nuts, roots and stems, spices, vegetables, seeds (aromatic), seeds of morbid growth, woods and woods used expressly for dyeing, which are not edible, advanced in value or condition by refining or grinding or by other process of manufacture, and not specially provided for in this act, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

In the paragraph relating to fish the word "prepared" is stricken out and the rate of 20 per cent. ad valorem is made to apply to all fish oils.

Epsom salts are made dutiable at 1-5 of a cent per pound. Other changes are: Morphia or morphine salts thereof, 50 cents per ounce. Flaxseed and poppy oil, 20 cents per gallon instead of 15 cents in former bills.

On olive oil for salad purposes the House rate of 35 cents per gallon is restored, instead of the Senate committee rate of 25 per cent.

Glass Schedule Changed.

A portion of the glass schedule is changed so as to read as follows:

Green and colored, molded or pressed, and flint and lime glass bottles holding more than one pint and demijohns and carboys, covered or uncovered, and other molded or pressed green and colored and flint or lime glass bottleware not specially provided for in this act, five-eighths of 1 cent per pound. Green and colored, molded or pressed and flint and lime glass bottles and vials holding not more than one pint and not less than one-quarter of a pint, three-fourths of one cent per pound; if holding less than one-fourth of a pint 35 cents per gross, whether filled or unfilled, whether their contents be dutiable or free.

The Senate rate on the above is 40 per cent; House rate, 30 per cent. Another change in glass is as follows:

Unpolished cylinder, crown, and cotton window glass, not exceeding 16 by 15 inches square, 1 cent per pound; above that, and not exceeding 16 by 24 inches square, 1¼ cents per pound; above that, and not exceeding 24 by 30 inches square, 1⅝ cents per pound; above that, and not exceeding 28 by 36 inches square, 1½ cents per pound; all above that, 1¾ cents per pound.

Provided, that unpolished cylinder, crown, and window glass, imported in boxes, shall contain fifty square feet, as nearly as sizes will permit, and that duty shall be computed thereon according to the actual weight of the glass.

There is a change of sizes as well as of rates, and comparisons cannot be made.

Plate-glass, 24 by 36 inches, is taxed 22 cents per square foot; Senate and House bills, 20 cents; all plate-glass above these dimensions, 38 cents per square foot; Senate and House bills, 36 cents. Looking-glass plates are added to glasses, dutiable at 10 per cent. ad valorem, in addition to other rates chargeable thereon.

Changes in Iron Duties.

The pig-iron paragraph is amended to read as follows:

Iron in pigs, iron Kentledge, Spiegeleisen, ferromanganese, ferro-silicon, wrought and cast scrap-iron and scrap steel, $4 per ton; but nothing shall be deemed scrap-iron or scrap steel except waste or refuse iron or steel, fit only to be manufactured.

Beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, car-truck channels, "T" columns or posts, or parts or sections of columns or posts, deck and bulb beams and building forms, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, whether plain or punctured or fitted for use, 8-10 of a cent a pound. Senate bill 35, House bill 30 per cent.

Railway bars, made of iron or steel, or railway bars made in part of steel, "T" rails, and punched iron or steel flat rails, 7-20 of a cent a pound. Senate bill 22½ per cent ad valorem, House bill 20 per cent.

Tin plate 1 1-5 cents a pound, restoring the House rate; Senate bill 1 per cent.

Cutlery Schedule.

The cutlery schedule is changed to read as follows:

Pen-knives, pocket-knives or erasers of all kinds, valued at not more than 30 cents per dozen, 25 per cent. ad valorem; valued at more than 30 cents per dozen and not exceeding 60 cents per dozen, 12 cents per dozen; valued at more than 60 cents per dozen and not exceeding $1 per dozen, 25 cents per dozen; valued at more than $1 per dozen and not exceeding $1.50 per dozen, 40 cents per dozen; valued at more than $1.50 per dozen and not exceeding $3 per dozen, 75 cents per dozen; valued at more than $3 a dozen, 50 per cent. ad valorem, and in addition thereto, on all the above valued at more than 30 cents a dozen, 25 per cent. ad valorem; provided that blades, handles or any other parts or any or either of the articles named in this paragraph, imported in any other manner than assembled in pen-knives, pocket-knives or erasers, shall be subject to no less duty than herein provided for pen-knives, pocket-knives or erasers valued at more than 30 cents a dozen. The Senate and House bills 15 cents.

Tobacco Schedule.

Wrapper tobacco, unstemmed, imported in any bale, box or package, or in bulk, $1.50 per pound; if stemmed, $2.25 per pound. House and Senate bills $1 and $1.25 respectively on above articles.

Snuff and snuff flour manufactured of tobacco, ground, dry, or damp and pickled, scented or otherwise, of all descriptions, 50 cents a pound; Senate and House bills, 40 cents.

The cigar paragraph is amended to read as follows:

Cigars, cigarettes, cheroots of all kinds, $4 a pound and 25 per cent. ad valorem; and paper cigars and cigarettes, including wrappers, shall be subject to the same duties as are herein imposed on cigars.

The duty on cigars in the House and Senate bills is $3 per pound and 25 per cent.

Dairy and Farm Products.

Butter and substitutes therefor, 4 cents per pound, which is the House rate; Senate bill, 20 per cent.

Cheese, 4 cents per pound; Senate and House bills, 25 per cent.

Milk, fresh, 3 cents per gallon; Senate and House bills, free.

Broom corn, $6 per ton; Senate and House bills, free.

Cabbages, 2 cents each; Senate and House bills, free.

Eggs, 3 cents per dozen; Senate and House bills, free.

Hay, $3 per ton, the House rate; Senate, 20 per cent.

Honey, 10 cents per gallon, the House rate; Senate bill, 20 per cent.

Hops, 8 cents per pound, the House rate; Senate bill, 20 per cent.

Onions, 20 cents per bushel, the House rate; Senate bill, 20 per cent.

The House rates in the paragraph devoted to peas are restored so that the paragraph reads as follows: Peas, dried, 30 cents per bushel; split peas, 50 cents per bushel of sixty pounds, and peas in cartons, papers or other small packages, 1 cent per pound; Senate, 20 per cent.

Potatoes, 15 cents per bushel; Senate bill, 30 per cent; House bill, 10 cents per bushel.

Meats of all kinds, prepared or preserved, not specially provided for in this act, 20 per cent.

Lard, 1 cent per pound; taken from free list.

Poultry, House rates (not dressed, 2 cents per pound; dressed, 3 cents per pound) are restored; Senate bill, 20 per cent.

Changes in Cotton Schedule.

Paragraph 253, relating to cotton cloth, is stricken out and the following inserted:

Cotton not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted or printed exceeding fifty and 100 threads to the square inch, counting the warped filling, and not exceeding six square yards to the pound, 1¼ cents a square yard; exceeding six and not exceeding nine square yards to the pound, 1¼ cents a square yard; exceeding nine square yards to the pound, 1⅝ cents a square yard; if bleached and not exceeding six square yards to the pound 1¾ cents a yard; exceeding six and not exceeding nine square yards to the pound 1⅞ cents a square yard; exceeding nine square yards to the pound 2¼ cents a square yards; if dyed, colored, stained, painted or printed and not exceeding six-square yards to the pound, 2⅝ cents to the square yard; exceeding six and not exceeding nine square yards to the pound, 3¼ cents to the square yard; exceeding nine square yards to the pound, 3½ cents per square yard; provided, that on all cotton cloth not exceeding 100 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 7 cents per square yard, 25 per centum ad valorem; bleached, valued at over 9 cents per square yard, 25 per centum ad valorem; and dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 12 cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Duties on Woolen Goods.

On blankets, wool and flannels for underwear and felts for paper-makers' use and printing machines, composed wholly or in part of wool, the hair of the camel, goat or alpaca, or other animals, valued at not more than 30 cents per pound, the duty will be 25 per centum ad valorem; valued at more than 30 "and not more than 40 cents" per pound, 30 per centum ad valorem; "valued at more than 40 cents per pound, 35 per centum ad valorem;" the change consisting in restoring the quoted words in the House bill.

On women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloth, bunting or goods of similar description or character "or all manufactures, including such as have any rubber as a component material," composed wholly or in part of wool worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca or other animal, and not specially provided for in this act, the House rate of 40 per cent. is restored. Senate bill, 35 per cent. and the following words added:

Valued at not over $1 a pound, 40 per cent. ad valorem; valued at more than 80 cents and not more than $1 a pound, 45 per cent. ad valorem; and all of the foregoing valued at more than $1 a pound, 50 per cent.

On ready-made clothing composed of any above-mentioned materials the House rate of 45 per cent. is restored. Senate bill, 40 per cent.

The following paragraph stricken out of the House bill by the Senate Committee is now restored:

On cloaks, dolmans, talmas, ulsters or other outside garments for ladies and children's apparel, and goods of similar description or used for like purposes, composed wholly or in part of worsted, hair of the camel, goat or alpaca, or other animals, made up or manufactured wholly or in part, the rate is changed from 45 to 50 per centum ad valorem.

Brussels carpets, figured or plain, all carpet of like character or description, 35 per cent. ad valorem. House and Senate bills, 30 per cent.

SPONGES are being propagated in a cheap way just now. About three years ago a cute German divided a few healthy specimens of live sponges into a goodly number of parts and placed them in deep water, with the result that he now has a crop of 4,000 at an initial expenditure of $20.

GOLD leaf, when beaten into a sheet of the thickness of but one two-hundred-and-fifty-thousandth of an inch, appears to be of a beautiful green when held up to the light. Such sheets are really semi-transparent.

VARICOCELE, EMISSIONS AND SYPHILIS CURED.

W. S. COLLINS. W. S. Collins, of Saginaw, Speaks. W. S. COLLINS.

"I am 29. At 15 I learned a bad habit which I continued till 18. I then became "one of the boys" and led a gay life. Exposure produced Syphilis. I became nervous and despondent; no ambition; memory poor; eyes red, sunken and blur; pimples on face; hair loose, bone pains; weak back; varicocele; dreams and losses at night; weak parts; deposit in urine, etc. I spent hundreds of dollars without help, and was contemplating suicide when a friend recommended Drs. Kennedy & Kergan's New Method Treatment. Thank God I tried it. In two months I was cured. This was six years ago, and never had a return. Was married two years ago and all happy. Boys, try Drs. Kennedy & Kergan before giving up hope."

T. P. Emerson Has a Narrow Escape.

"I live on the farm. At school I learned an early habit, which weakened me physically, sexually and mentally. Family Doctors said I was going into "decline" (Consumption). Finally "The Golden Monitor," edited by Drs. Kennedy & Kergan fell into my hands. I learned the Truth and Quiet. Self abuse had sapped my vitality. I took the New Method Treatment and was cured. My friends think I was cured of Consumption. I have sent them many patients, all of whom were cured. Their New Method Treatment supplies vigor, vitality and manhood."

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....MAY 17, 1894.

OVER 105,000 Chinese have registered in the United States up to date as required by the new law.

FT. WAYNE will vote June 9 to aid or not aid the new railroad—the Ft. Wayne & Eastern. $150,000 is wanted.

MAN near Muncie last week was using dynamite to kill fish. Got his arm blown off, and may die. No one will pity him much.

TOWNSHIPS will elect trustees and other officers at the November elections, and these will proceed at once to qualify and enter on their offies.

NEW YORK democrats don't agree with their senators Hill and Murphy in opposing the Wilson Bill. At a great meeting last week, they passed this resolution:

DEMOCRATS at Albion elected all their candidates but clerk. So it goes. A number of other towns changed in the same way. It seems to be a year when the "outs" can beat the "ins."

CANADIAN patrol boat captured two American lake vessels last week, claiming they were fishing illegally off Point Pelee near the Canada shore. They had fished there last year, but there was no complaint.

THE popular industry in which a jealous fool shoots and kills his wife or sweetheart and then shoots himself, goes merrily on. We would like to see the order changed, so that he would shoot himself first.

WOOL has been bringing 10 to 14 cents here lately, though it is "protected" by the highest tariff rate ever known. "Protection" has proved such a failure that we think farmers would be glad to try free wool for a few years. It could not make it worse.

KELLEY'S commonweal "army" when at DesMoines, was polled as to the politics of the men. It was found that 240 were populists, 218 republicans, 193 democrats, and 81 who had no party choice. There was not an avowed prohibitionist in the crowd, although they were in a prohibition state.

REPUBLICAN papers keep saying that "the House has adopted Reed's rules for counting a quorum." Not much. It is a better rule. Reed counted the persons present himself, and with no authority. He was often wrong in his count. Now, under the new democratic rule, the speaker does not do the counting. Two members, one a democrat and one a republican, stand up together near the speaker's desk and look over the House as the roll is called and take note of all who refuse to answer to their names.

THE A. P. A. is another secret society which, like the P. I. and the Alliance, "is not a political society," but has no other object and does nothing else but work politics. Secret societies in politics, no matter under what name they masquerade, are always dangerous and un-American. They are, in general, the offspring of ignorance or bigotry, or both. It is only a question of time when those foolish enough to engage in such schemes will be as heartily ashamed of it as are the living members of a similar organization—the old "No Nothing" party. We recall quite a number of would be statesmen who have been greatly bothered about their No Nothing record, and have spent a good deal of ingenious effort in denying all connection with it.

EX PRESIDENT HARRISON got into trouble at Palo Alto, California, where Leland Stanford University is, just before his lecture course closed there. Some students got into Harrison's room, for he staid in the college building, and stole a lot of choice liquor he had got together for "inspiration." Now the college is trying to make the students pay $35 for it. Seems as if there must have been some mistake about this. It must surely have been some democratic ex-president. Let us see. Who could it be? Well, there is no democratic ex-president living. So, we give it up. It must have been Harrison. It is hardly likely that a republican would drink the stuff. He was there to lecture on law, and possibly he used the fine old whisky for chemical experiments in constitutional law.

TALMAGE'S great Brooklyn church, the "Tabernacle," burned Sunday, just at the close of services. This is the third time it has been destroyed by fire, each time on Sunday.

THE men of "Gen." Aubrey's commonweal army were offered work at Muncie last week, but they refused. They evidently prefer to belong to the ranks of the "unemployed."

Political Notes.

We place among our announcements this week, the name of Lucius C. Loveland, of Stafford, who will be a candidate for recorder. Mr. Loveland is a man well qualified for the office. He has been a justice of the peace ten years, six years in Ohio and four years at his present location, and he has held other township officer to the entire satisfaction of the people. He is a farmer and stock-raiser, and is giving a good deal of attention to muly cattle. He is a straight democrat and a straight forward business man.

In our writeup of George Pierson, one of the candidates for commissioner in the north district we said he lived in Smithfield township. This should have "Franklin township" for there is his home.

Married

At the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Shook in Corunna, May 16, 1894, Mr. Charles Dalrymple to Miss May Shook. The wedding was a quiet one, only a few of the immediate relatives being present. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. A. Sumwalt, pastor of the M. E. church there. The bride is one of the best known of Corunna's society young ladies, and the wedding day was her twentieth birthday. She was until this year, a teacher in the common schools. In the past year she has been taking a course in short hand and type writing at the Commerical School in Ft. Wayne, and here she met her husband who was taking a similar course. Both have graduated at that school. Mr. Dalrymple's home is at Bluffton, and there the young couple will make their home. They came to Auburn yesterday, after the ceremony, the bride being a sister of E. T. Cochran, and after a brief visit here they go to Bluffton. The congratulations of many friends follow them.

The Reason Why

The Wisconsin Central has become known as the popular route for tourists and pleasure seekers, is because it pays particular attention to this class of travel, and caters to the comfort and convenience of its patrons. Its trains are equipped with the finest Pullman sleeping cars, parlor cars, and dining cars in which the meals are unexcelled. It is the "travelers choice" to all the principal summer resorts in the northwest, and Yellowstone National Park.

New Undertakinsg Establishment.

Wm. Ettinger, of Waterloo, has established a new undertaking business in the room on North Main street formerly occupied by J. S. Bowers. He has purchased a good hearse, full line of caskets, robes and other undertaking goods and will be ready for business about May 24. His long experience in this line of work, will insure his giving satisfaction. He has made a special study in the art of embalming and can promise good work. In that being a practical cabinet maker, he will do all kinds of repairing in that line. Give him a call. He'll deal fairly by you. 20-22

We Guarantee

That no horse will ever die of colic, bots, or congestion of the stomach if Morris' English Stable Powder is used regularly two or three times a week. If fed to cows it will increase the quantity of milk and cream one-third, and will keep both in good healthy condition. 25 cts. Sold by Matheny & Gerke.

Cures Dyspepsia.

Rebecca Wilkinson, of Brownsvalley, Ind., says: "I have been in a distressed condition for three years from nervousness, weakness of the stomach, dyspepsia and indigestion until my health was gone, I had been doctoring constantly with no relief. I bought one bottle of South American Nervine, which did me more good good any $50 worth of doctoring I ever did in my life. I would advise every weakly person to use this valuable and lovely remedy: a few bottles of it has cured me completely. I consider it the grandest medicine in the world." Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottle 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord.

Notice of Administration.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned has been appointed by the Clerk of the DeKalb circuit court, of the state of Indiana, administrator of the estate of William H. Kiplinger, deceased, late of said county.

Said estate is supposed to be solvent.

W. H. MCINTYRE, Administrator.

May 9th, 1894.

The committe on music of the M. E. church and the Auburn Musical Club have arranged for a fine concert to be given in the M. E. church on the evening of Decoration Day, Wednesday, May 30. The exercises will consist of choruses, quartets, trios, instrumental and vocal duets, instrumental and vocal solos, recitations, etc.

WATERLOO.

Friday afternoon occurred the funeral of the son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Wareham, aged nine years. The child had been ill for several weeks. Many of his school mates, both boys and girls, bestowed lovely flowers to lay in or on the casket, the last kind act they could ever show to their departed companion.

Saturday evening, Burton & Belford exhibited to a large audience as usual. They deserve patronage, if pluck and perseverance should be rewarded, since they have been unfortunate and suffered heavy loss through circumstances outside of their control. We trust this may be a prosperous season with them.

Emory Till died Thursday night of last week. He moved his family from Waterloo to Hudson last summer, where he had a severe sickness, from the effects of which he never recovered. The family a few weeks ago returned here, moving into the house of Mrs. Barnhart, the mother of Mrs. Till. The funeral took place Sunday.

Miss Ada Williamson, who has been critically ill for weeks, is now improving so as to be able to sit up, but her disease has either settled in her limbs or developed a lameness there, and she is compelled to resort to the use of crutches. We sincerely hope this may only be a temporary necessity.

A reception was given last Thursday afternoon in Miss Deventer's room of the high school building, to invited guests, and the exercises by the pupils were considered exceedingly interesting by those so fortunate as to be present.

At 2 o'clock Friday afternoon the various rooms other than that above mentioned, were thrown open to the public by a special invitation to witness rhetorical and other exercises in variety. Each pupil sought to bring a vase filled with cut flowers with which to decorate the school rooms, and so many tastily arranged and grouped, made a beautiful whole. The pupils deserve praise for their efforts, as well as the teachers, upon whom rests so heavy and such wearing responsibilities.

Mrs. Orpha Coughran, of Kansas, was here Tuesday on her way to visit her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Reub. Ettinger, in Angola. She will also visit her sister, Mrs Kennedy, and the family of her uncle, Wm. Ettinger, in this place, as well as other friends.

Wm. Ettinger has established an undertaking business here, and will occupy the J. S. Bowers' room. He is an experienced man at the business.

Mrs. McBride, of Goshen, who used to live here, and Mrs. Kiplinger, of Auburn, dined with Mrs. Mary Morell and family last week Thursday, spending some time in the afternoon calling upon old acquaintances of Mrs. McBride. The ladies are sisters.

Sunday evening, the 6th, Rev. Richard Locke preached in the Presbyterian church to a good, interested audience, and last Sunday evening in the M. E. church to a well filled house, who gave close attention to an excellent and practical sermon. There was not a sentence throughout used for mere effect or for "padding," but it was good, solid meat all through. He has been at his father's here since May 5, and goes this week to Decatur to visit with his brother Dell and family over Sunday. Then after a few days at Lima, will return to Boston.

Our hotels seem to be doing a good business, whatever others may complain of hard times. There seems to be a number of regular boarders, besides a continual stream of transients. If business causes the travel, there is business to be done; if some travel for pleasure, everyone does not feel the hard times.

At the meeting of the L. M. C. at Mrs. Winslow's, May 8, Mrs. Alda Bemenderfer was elected a member by a unanimous vote. The next regular meeting of the club will be May 22 at the residence of Mrs. Florence Waterman.

Combination.

Mr. Willis, in his paper last week, intimates that I entered into a combination to defeat Mr. Speer. I wish to say that I have never been guilty of such an act, nor have I intimidated votes. Now, brother Willis, how is it with you? You can't even get a nomination, for your party well knows that you could not be elected to any office. And how is it about your offering to handle the school books at a small profit if the town board would only appoint you school trustee? Don't that look as though you were intimidating votes? Come, be honest for once.

Respectfully,
H. K. LEAS.

The Dispatch is still crowing about those "able business men." Perhaps the court record was mistaken.

J. E. Rose has repainted and repaired his residence, and otherwise fixed up his comfortable residence on South Main street.

Dr. N. J. Shook, of Newville, was here Tuesday. He has sold out his drugstore and practice, but has not decided on a location.

If dull, spiritless and stupid; if your blood is thick and sluggish; if your appetite is capricious and uncertain. You need a sarsaparilla. For best results take DeWitt's. It recommends itself.

Strange things happen now and then. For example, Isaiah Likens who resides a few miles out of town, has just cut a new front tooth, not a dentist's make of teeth but "for sureley" one. He is a little over 54.

Robert McDougal is getting ready to remove to Denver, Colo. This will be a surprise to most of our people. They have resided here so long, and had a prominent place in society, that we shall greatly miss them.

J. H. Rose, went to Washington last week and on Monday he and Mrs. Rose returned. She was a delegate to the national association of ladies clubs, that met at Philadelphia. Both spent a few days there and at Baltimore and Washington.

Mrs. W. B. Brown goes next week to Denver, and will take with her the little child of John Dawson, which since its mother's death, has been cared for by Mrs. Florence Buchanan. We believe it is to be cared for by its grandmother, the mother of the late Mrs. Dawson.

J G Johnson, of Waterloo, was here last Friday. Though a candidate for the republican nomination for clerk he was not working that subject particularly but was here seeing about the printing of the Waterloo fair premium lists. He is the secretary, and is taking a good deal of interest in the success of this year's fair.

The J. L. Davis stock of hardware was bought on Monday by P. A. Randall of Ft. Wayne, the purchase being for Mrs. Davis, as we understand it. The price paid was $2600. The buildings are not sold, and will not be, we believe, till it is settled in court, as to the validity of some mortgages on it.

W. H. Keeran and family moved to Ft. Wayne Tuesday. Our people will greatly miss them, and especially the ladies of the L. L. C. will miss a valuable member in the person of Mrs. Keeran. Mr. Keeran has been there about a month, arranging work in the factory, of which he has now an interest. He has patented a new pew which he thinks will prove of value.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb circuit court, in a cause wherein Frank D Wetmore is plaintiff and Cyrus C. Boyer, Mary E. Boyer, Emma Boyer, Carey Boyer, Nellie Boyer, John W. Baxter Ex. of will of Sarah Boyer deceased, Samuel Kennedy, Walter Thompson and William D. Boyle are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of four thousand nine hundred and fourteen dollars and ten cents, with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at Public Sale, to the highest bidder, on

Saturday, May 19th, 1894,

between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m., and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day, at the door of the court house, of DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, to-wit:

Ninety-nine and thirty-four one-hundredths (99 34-100) acres off of the south side of the north east quarter (¼) and fifty and forty one-hundredths (50 40-100) acres off of the south end of the east half of the northwest quarter (¼) of section twenty (20) in township thirty five (35) north of range fourteen (14) east, situated in DeKalb county, state of Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and cost, I will at the same time and place, expose at public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation and appraisement laws.

G. C. RALSTON, Sheriff of DeKalb County.
By R. Blum Deputy.
Auburn, Indiana, April 23d, A. D. 1894.
John F. Shuman, Attorney for Plaintiff.

Notice of Final Settlement of Estate.

Notice is hereby given to all persons interested in the estate of William Miller deceased, to appear in the DeKalb Circuit Court, held at Auburn, Indiana, on the 8th day of June, 1894 and show cause, if any, why my FINAL SETTLEMENT ACCOUNTS with the estate of said decedent should not be approved; and said heirs and all others interested are notified to then and there make proof of heirship or claim and receive their distributive shares.

Witness my name this 16th day of May, 1894.

GEORGE W. MAXWELL, Administrator with will annexed.

"There goes a man of sense and good judgment." "Why so?" "He smokes the best 5c cigar in town—Kessler Bros.' Bill Head."

It is stated that farmers in Marshall county will plant large tracts in cucumbers this year, They get about fifty cents a bushel for them when of the proper size for pickles, and as the yield per acre is great, it pays much better than wheat.

T. S. Merica has moved here from Garrett, and is located in the Ed. Mitchell residence on South Cedar street. His business, the sale of musical instruments, was mainly conducted from Auburn, and he found it to his advantage to move here.

Kutzner & Myers have a first-class livery establishment at their barn on West Sixth street. They are always prepared to fit out their patrons with a good rig of any sort, and at fair rates. Don't forget them when you need a rig to go anywhere.

What a blessing to sleep well and wake refreshed and strong. Use Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer to obtain refreshing sleep. It gives sweet sleep to worst cases of sleeplessness. When require it calls for free samples or $1 bottles of F. E. Davenport.

The Auburn Cyclery has booked orders for 14 Ladies' "Chainless," Safeties, but has been unable to fill an order owing to the factory being so behind with orders, "even when running 22 hours per day." No lady rider will be without this mount, if she can raise $135.

We made a mistake last week in saying that R. Shull sold those fine shoes for $2. It should have read as it now does, $2.50. The reason we did not discover the error is that they sell nice shoes there so low that we would not be surprised at any price, no matter how low.

There has been no definite arrangement made in regard to nominating candidates for township officers though we presume most of the townships will think it too early to make the nominations. In this, Union, township we have been authorized to say that H. H. Cupp will probably be a candidate for trustee.

We have received from Chales L. Thomas, at Omaha, a copy of the last report of their public schools. It makes a good showing, and they have some excellent ideas as to school work. Mr. Thomas had just returned from the excursion the city council made to the Pacific coast and says the trip was a delightful one.

Sol. Mier, one of Ligonier's solid men was here last Thursday. He had been down to Muncie to see some property he has there. Sol. is always popular, and showed it especially at the city election May 1, when he was re-elected to the council by an increased majority. It is a bad year for democrats, but our friend Mier always got there.

Dr. Swarts and Dr. Casebeer of this place, Dr. Shoemaker of Butler, and Dr. Showalter of Waterloo, are at Indianapolis this week attending the annual meeting of the Indiana State Medical Society, which holds its session there every May. Dr. Casebeer will read a paper before the society. The others are the three regular delegates to which the county is entitled.

Here is a problem for younger scholars. "Two men went hunting and shot a deer and wanted to weigh it. One man weighed 190 pounds, the other 130 pounds. They placed a board across a fence so that when a man sat on each end of it, it exactly balanced. They then changed places and the lighter man took the deer on his lap just balancing the board again. What was the weight of the deer?"

P. J. Lockwood, of Washington, D. C., while here recently, examined the large stock of high grade wheels at the Auburn Cyclery and was much impressed with the League Chainless. Mr. Cobb this week received and filled his order for one of these matchless wheels. This is a good mark for the League Chainless, as Mr. Lockwood was one the pioneer wheelmen of this section and knows what constitutes a good wheel.

W. L. Meese has had printed a large number of new testimonials, from those who have recently bought the new Swing Washer. They are of the most satisfactory kind, not only from the high character of the people making them, but for the very emphatic approval they give the working of the machine. Mr. Meese feels greatly encouraged, as his sales have been good, and the Washers are giving such universal satisfaction.

The town board organized Thursday evening of last week, by electing Mr. Rakestraw president. The new members, Mr. Bishop, Mr. Hague and Mr. Ober began their term of office, while Mr Picker, Mr. Brandon and Mr. Potter retired. The retiring members have served the people faithfully and made themselves a good record. They new board will have to keep their eyes peeled if they do better than the old one. Still, with the Dispatch to watch and counsel each step taken, much may be expected of them.

FOR SALE OR TRADE: A house with ten acres of land in Benzonia, Benzie Co. Mich. For further particulars enquire of E. M. Bilderback, jr. Hicksville, Ohio. 20-21

As the riding season is opening, the Auburn Cyclery is getting a large share of trade in bicycles. Orders are being received daily from adjoining towns and counties.

Mrs. J. J. Zent went last week to Mankato., and will remain there during the summer as her husband is at that place being engaged in the sale of agricultural implements.

Buy your buggies of Kutzner & Myers at their feed barn on West Sixth street, Auburn. Come and see us and we will convince you that we sell at prices to suit the times.

J. R. Shilling, one of our old time Concord friends, was here last Friday. Joe is an industrious man and so, don't take any stock in the Coxey gang, or anyone who upholds such a set.

R. McDougall will have a sale of household and office furniture, books, etc., in the Sheffer-Gandy block on Saturday, May 26, preparatory to his contemplated removal to Colorado in June. 20 21

A letter from Charles Wagner, at Fairbury, Neb., brings his annual subscription to the "Old Reliable" COURIER, which he says is always welcome. All are well there, and crops looking well. Glad to here it.

FARMERS. Before you buy, you should see the light, low Elevator Binder and the Osborne all steel Hay Rake and Tedder, for sale by S. F. Morr. Call at the W. H. Mader buggy room, west of the Davis hardware. 20tf

John Lochner, of the Times was married last Wednesday evening to Miss K. Darley Clark, daughter of the late Wm. Clark, at the residence of the brides mother, Rev. W. L. Meese being the officiating minister. The COURIER extends congratulations.

W. H. Mader will be in the buggy business this year, selling Kiblinger buggies, road wagons and carriages. He will be found at the Kiblinger factory, his room being on 8th St. west of the Davis hardware store. Come and see me before you buy. tf

A satisfied customer is the best advertisment. This is the way they talk when asked how they liked the League Chainless after a 40 mile ride over hills and muddy roads. Tom Patterson says if he was buying 50 bicycles 49 would be Chainless and being asked what the fiftieth would be, said it would be a chain wheel, for a relic. This simply voices the sentiment of thousands of others who have ridden the League Chainless.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.—The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Robbins & McCord. tf

Now you ought to just see the work J. G. Clapp is doing. Well, it is surprising how much work he has on hand, and still they go. If times are dull people want to see how they look just the same. So they go pushing in and sit for the best photo on earth. Did you ever get left? Yes, but with J. G. Clapp's work we never did; he's all right.

The prettiest tree in town is the fine flowering thorn in front of Frank Borst's on South Jackson. It had a few flowers last year, but this week shows like a vision of beauty, being full of pink blooms along every limb and up to the very top. Many have stopped to admire it, and a few thoughtless ones, we are sorry to hear, have cut off now and then a lovely cluster, much to the damage of the tree and the disgust of the owner.

The Auburn Swing washer, made and sold by Mr. Meese, is the only washing machine made in the county. It is no longer an experiment, as it has been in use here nearly four years. Clothes washed with it last longer, because they are not injured by rubbing, and being closed in, have the benefit of cleansing by steam. There is an advantage in buying this washer, as any repairs needed can be had right here, at all times of Mr. Meese.

DAY by day more infamies in the chapter of naval contracts are coming to the surface. Upon the heels of the discovery that much of the armor plate furnished by Carnegie, Phipps & Co. for the new battle ships was full of blow holes and not fit for use comes the information that the steel trial projectiles for the new heavy naval ordnance furnished by Sterling Bros., also of Pennsylvania, are made brittle or soft—not according to Government requirements, but according to the desires of the armor-plate manufacturers against whose sample plates they are to be fired! Under this contract system our new navy would seem to be in a bad way, defenseless because of bad armor and impotent because of bad projectiles.

SCOTCH home rule makes progress. The adoption by the British Commons of Sir George Trevelyan's resolution providing for the reference of all purely Scottish measures to a committee consisting of the seventy-two Scotch and fifteen English members is a long step forward. It was followed up by the introduction of the local government bill for Scotland, which, as soon as it has passed the second reading, will be referred to this committee of eighty-seven for report. The report will doubtless be adopted. The full House will thus be saved the wearisome committee debates, and the Scotch members will trim and shape the measures to suit themselves. The Tories bitterly opposed Trevelyan's resolution, because they fully understand that if Scottish measures are to be referred to a committee of Scotch members, Irish measures must from the very logic of things be referred to the Irish members, who are more radical even than the Scotch members, and who now stand eighty-four Liberals to nineteen Tories. What chance would the Irish Tory landlords stand if an Irish committee should have the shaping of an Irish land bill, for instance? No wonder the Tories stand aghast.

FEW of the people who read or talk about artificial irrigation in the United States have any idea of the great value which the introduction of the process has given to lands in Australia. In 1889 one company contracted with the Victorian Government to expend $600,000 in five years on irrigation works for the development of a rich but arid tract of land. In four years the company has expended more than double that sum. At a place called Mildura there are 5,000 people, 17,000 acres of land have been sold, and 10,000 are under cultivation. Most of the settlers take the land on time payments at from $100 to $150 per acre and pay for the water in addition. These valuations are far in excess of any figures named for artificially irrigated lands in this country, but if they can be realized in Australia the improvement of land to be sold at figues high by comparison with those paid for ordinary farm lands ought to be possible here. Undoubtedly the time is coming when the systematic distribution of water to the thirsty soil in sufficient but not excessive quantity, and just at the times when it will do most good, will be resorted to extensively, even outside of the arid regions, because of the vastly superior results over those obtained by ordinary haphazard methods of cultivation.

CHICAGO HERALD: Chicago is fast attaining the unenviable distinction of being set up as a "horrible example" of misgovernment for all the other cities in the Union. Chicago Aldermen especially are pointed out as the most conscienceless and larcenous of their tribe anywhere. This is saying a good deal, but every Chicagoan knows that the reproach is just. Kansas City, for example, which is not by any means a model municipality, feels justified in pointing the finger of scorn at us and using our Aldermen as object lessons for her own. The newspapers of that city object to franchise grabbing and warn the councilmen that Chicago methods will not be tolerated in Kansas City. Bitterest and truest of all is the statement in one of these newspapers that "a fair and reasonable remuneration to the municipality for franchises which have been given away by the city of Chicago would pay the cost of administering the government without taxing the people." Every one knows it is true. Every one knows that this city has been robbed and betrayed year in and year out. Every one knows that the thievery is still going on, and that in all human probability it will continue until there is nothing left for the Aldermen to give away—or rather to sell. It is humiliating, but it is true. Chicago is the municipal "horrible example."

SEVERAL years ago certain counties in Southwestern Missouri were bonded for the construction of a railroad. The road was never built, but the bonds had been floated and sold. When they became due most of them were in the hands of innocent parties. Payment was refused by the counties on the ground that they could not be made to settle for something they had never received. The courts, however, decided the bonds had been purchased in good faith by those holding them, and that therefore were a valid obligation, even if the projectors of the road had defrauded the counties. Further litigation followed, but finally the judges of the counties were commanded by the United States District Court to levy assessments for payment of the bonds. The judges of St. Clair County refused to make the levy, and were thereupon sent to jail for contempt. Their successors also refused to obey the court and were imprisoned. The other day Judge Lyons became insane. Judge Copenhaven, his predecessor, is dying, and the wife and daughter of the latter have become insane from the shock of his imprisonment. Although the innocent holders of the bonds in question should not lose their money, still the case of the offending judges is assuming such tragic features that some way should be devised for their relief. If they could be released and the projectors of the railroad imprisoned in their stead, there would be more of equity in sight than there is at present. It would seem that some sort of a compromise should be arranged between the counties and bondholders; otherwise imprisonment may follow imprisonment, as it is certain no judge elected in St. Clair County will ever levy any assessments of the proportions they are now.

Taking Him Down.

The irascible guest had been sitting at the hotel table about six minutes, and no waiter had come to him. He squirmed around awhile, and when he caught sight of the head waiter, he called him up.

"Here," he said ill-naturedly; "I've been waiting here for half an hour for somebody to take my order, and nobody has come near. What I want to know is if I'm to be waited on or not."

"Certainly, sir," responded the head waiter, most politely.

"I want to know why I've been kept waiting so long," he went on, determined to make it as unpleasant as possible.

"Really, sir," apologized the head waiter, "I can't tell. I only came on watch ten minutes ago, and the man who was on duty when you came in half an hour ago has left and won't be back until this time to-morrow."

The guest knew the head waiter was lying to him, but somehow it occurred to him that he was not altogether spotless himself, and he shut up.

WRECKER HILL FAILS TO STOP THE TRAIN.

—Chicago Times.

SURRENDER TO THE TRUST.

Senators Shamefully Capitulate to a Grasping Octopus.

In the proposed amendment to the tariff bill the sugar trust seems to have obtained all that it wants, or at least all that it can expect to get without creating such a scandal as would put a violent end to its relations with certain Senators. These Senators, having now gained for the trust the last possible concession, are willing to vote for the reduction of taxes on necessaries of life other than sugar.

This shameful surrender to the sugar trust has been brought about by three classes in the Senate. First—The Senators who have a direct pecuniary interest in sugar speculation. It is only necessary to point to the quotations of the price of sugar trust stock on two occasions to indicate how the purchase of votes has been made. Just before the report of the bill to the Senate, and again within the last few days, the price of these securities rose enormously. The rise must have been on information from the Senate chamber.

Second—Senators have been weakly influenced to consent to these concessions by reminders of contributions to compaign funds. In this class Republicans as well as Democrats are included, for the trust impartially made its campaign contributions to both parties.

Third—There have been enough disgusted Democrats to make up the number necessary to carry out the trade. These men have been made hopeless by the corrupting presence of the trust, and by the evident inability of honest tariff reformers to overcome its wiles and its "arguments." They have yielded in order to pass a bill putting an end to some of the most odious features of McKinleyism. They have taken an eighth of a loaf rather than go without bread.

In the whole history of protectionism nothing has happened so humiliating to Congress as this triumph of the sugar trust, in its bold-faced and cynical effort to tax the people millions of dollars for its own enrichment, through the aid of Senators who are sworn to legislate for the general welfare, but who are the willing and sometimes the corrupt tools of this monopoly.—New York World.

A Voice from Ohio.

In the special Congressional election in the Third Ohio District, Sorg, Democrat, won by 2,000 or 3,000 majority, where McKinley last year had about 500 majority. This a more significant figure, in a special election, than was Houk's plurality of 4,316 in 1892, when a Presidential election was on.

It is a peculiarly suggestive victory in many ways. The election was held in McKinley's own State, where, if anywhere, McKinleyism should have gained adherents. By deliberate choice of the Republicans themselves the contest was waged upon the tariff as the sole issue. There was made a special and direct appeal to the voters of the district to say what they now think of that tariff-reform policy for which they voted in 1892. There was a peculiarly good opportunity for them to make manifest any change of mind that may have come to them.

Their reply to this appeal is that they have not changed their minds, that they are even more strongly than before determined that the iniquitous McKinley system of taxation shall give place to a more equitable distribution of the public burdens. As this is the only election that has been contested this year upon that direct issue its result is unusually encouraging. In that result the dallying Senate has a hint of what its course should be if the majority there care to retain control of the Government in their party's hands. This victory was won at the precise time when there was greatest confidence felt in the early passage of the Wilson bill. It suggests the good results that are promised for November if that bill is actually made law without further delay.

Wages of Silk Weavers.

One proper reform in the relation between the silk manufacturers and weavers is indicated by the interviews which we publish. Certain manufacturers put forward in their statements for publication the fact that they are ready to pay the weavers from $3 to $4 a day. Now this sounds very liberal, and tends to destroy all sympathy with the operatives among those who are not familiar with the methods of the mill, but when it is understood that the weaver, who is now so unaccountably refusing "$3 or $4 a day," is obliged to prepare his own loom for work for nothing, and that this operation may consume many weeks in a year, it will be seen that the workman is not so unreasonable as would appear from the manufacturer's statement, and a very different light is thrown upon his present course in regard to wages. It will be observed that one of the weavers, whose interview we print, states that the average wages in Paterson for 1893 amounted to $5 a week, when the loom fixing and the long waits between work are considered, which is a very different thing from the spectacular compensation which these manufacturers propose as though it were for steady employment. The weaver whom we quote states that the wages under the schedule urged by the men would not yield more than from $11 to $13 a week—surely not an exorbitant rate for highly skilled labor in a land where high protective duties are imposed entirely on the workingman's account!—Dry Goods Economist.

Rich Men and Coxeyism.

Those are good, strong, brave words that Secretary Herbert has spoken on the subject of Coxeyism, and they are very timely ones. It is most unfortunate, at this time especially, that the rich men of the country are manifesting an indisposition to bear their fair share of the public burdens. Not only are they struggling to perpetuate a system of taxation which makes of them a favored class, enriching them at the expense of the people's prosperity, but they are determinedly opposing the imposition of a very small tax upon their superfluous incomes at a time when there are multitudes of taxpayers unable to get any incomes at all.

The rich men of the country are losing a great opportunity and taking a wholly needless risk. They are refusing the chance to disarm the forces of discontent. They are deliberately affronting poverty by objecting to pay their part of taxes that bear heavily upon the people, though the part they are asked to bear is one so easy that the burden would hardly be felt at all. They are creating in men's minds a rankling sense of injustice. They are playing into the hands of the vicious theorists who preach Socialism and worse. They are committing a stupendous blunder.—New York World.

Freedom a Misnomer.

Mr. Bryan, of Nebraska, has been making a point against the New England sectionalists who make political capital out of the activity of Southern and Western Congressmen in tariff reform. "They have no Lowells in the South and West," say the New England Republicans, chorusing after Reed.

Mr. Bryan proceeds to show that the people of the West and South are the more likely to exert their intelligence boldly and fearlessly by not living in Lowells and Lynns. In Lowell there are 14,836 families occupying homes. Only 14 per cent. own unincumbered homes. The percentage in Lynn is 16. In Fall River only 9 per cent. own free homes. In Holyoke the percentage is between 6 and 7 per cent.

So, when it comes to freeholders, the Massachusetts supply is light, and in the typical manufacturing towns the population is evidently dependent upon weekly wages for means to keep roofs over the heads of families. Is this a condition which develops courage to speak and act the truth? Is it not rather one in which the few rich will dominate the many dependent? Between 1,000 Western farmers and 1,000 Lowell operatives, where would anybody look for outspoken American thought?—St. Louis Republic.

Retire the Criminal Senators.

The Kansas City Times (Dem.) hails with approval the announcement that the Senate majority have come to an understanding as to the tariff bill, but it says: "The fact that a compromise has been effected does not excuse certain Senators for the treachery to the party that made the compromise necessary. These men, for selfish reasons, betrayed an inclination to dishonor the party and perpetuate admitted evils. That is not only crime against party discipline, but against the people, whose burdens are already too onerous to bear. The Senators guilty of such offenses ought to be condemned to early and permanent retirement."

Who Will Explain?

If a man tells you that protection increases wages, ask him to explain why it is that free trade England pays higher wages to-day than during the days of her protective policy. Ask him why it is that she pays higher wages than any of the other old countries, which have protection. Ask him why it is that right here in this country, where the tariff is the same in every part, wages are higher in the West than in the East, and higher in the North than in the South.—Chicago Free-Trader.

The Proper Course.

Although Senator Faulkner, of West Virginia, was instrumental in having a duty put on coal and iron, he will vote for any tariff bill that is ultimately agreed upon. "If the majority of the Senate," he says, "should vote to take off the duty, I shall acquiesce in the judgment of the majority. I am a Democrat always, and shall not desert my part in this great fight for tariff reform."—New York Evening Post.

Hill Is a Republican.

"Senator Hill's talk about 'cheerfully voting for the Mills bill' is the veriest jugglery," says the Buffalo Courier (Dem.). "It is probably intended to divert attention from his cunningly contrived devices for complicating the situation and defeating all tariff legislation. No supporter of McKinleyism could possibly serve his cause more effectively than Senator Hill is now serving it by his tortuous course."

The Greatest Paper Hight.

"I want to say right here," said Senator Voorhees in the Senate, "that in spite of what other changes may be made—no matter what may be floating in the air—the income tax will stay in this bill." So the World has said for three months past. So it will prove to be when the bill is signed. The parrots will find that they have parroted in vain.—New York World.

A Sectional Bill.

"The only true sense in which the Wilson bill is sectional," says the Baltimore Sun (Dem.), "is that it still leaves the manufacturing sections in possession of three-fourths of all the unjust advantages which they have been enjoying for a whole generation past over the unprotected and overtaxed farming States of this Union."

A Strange Belief.

Many of the South Sea Islanders believe that paradise can be inherited only by persons of perfect physical forms. Where this belief prevails, a man will die rather than submit to amputation.

PULLMAN MEN GO OUT

BIG CAR SHOPS CLOSED UP TIGHT.

The Walk-out Wholly Unexpected by the Managers—The Discharge of Grievance Committeemen Undoubtedly Precipitated the Strike—Serious Trouble May Ensue.

Thousands Quit the Works.

Three thousand men stopped making palace cars for George M. Pullman Friday forenoon and spent the day in discussing their wrongs in the streets of the "model city" of Pullman, Ill. The strike, which had been threatened for a week or more, was precipitated mainly by the discharge of three prominent members of the grievance committee. A rumor current the night before that the company intended to close down the works within a day or two also played an important part in bringing the trouble to a crisis.

About 600 men who did not belong to the union remained sprinkled through the all but deserted shops until 6 o'clock Friday evening. When they came trooping out with their dinner-pails they were confronted with the following notice posted conspicuously in each building:

THE SHOPS ARE CLOSED UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE.
William A. Middleton, Foreman.

The result is that Saturday morning, for the first time since the great strikes of 1886, the wheels and forges at Pullman were silent. The struggle is likely to be both prolonged and bitter

Say Wages Have Been Cut Down.

The men claim that their wages have been cut down 33⅓ per cent., but that they are compelled to pay just as much rent and water and gas taxes as they did in flush times. Instances are cited in which workmen have received, after all the extras have been deducted from their wages, only a few dollars with which to buy bread and butter for their families. They claim, also, that they are not allowed to purchase property in Pullman, and this fact, combined with the company's system of requiring rent in advance, and holding back their wages until it is paid, keeps them so bound down that they cannot leave without losing from one to four weeks' pay.

The position which the American Railway Union, as expressed by Vice President Howard, has taken with regard to the matter has given the strikers much confidence in their ultimate success. "Unless the company comes to terms," said one of the leaders, "we can prevent the Pullman cars from being hauled on many of the principal railroads of the United States."

The Company Stands Firm.

On the other hand, the company is equally firm in its position. President George M. Pullman claims that he has been losing money rapidly this spring, and cannot afford to pay any higher wages than the present scale. In a speech to the committee, he said that he had been running the works for several months just to keep the men busy. He further made the threat that every man who participated in the strike will never be allowed to resume his position in the Pullman shops.

TO GET RID OF THE PEST.

Clothing Men Confer with State Health Secretaries at Chicago.

By the concerted action of the health officers of Illinois, Ohio, Wisconsin, Michigan and Indiana, small-pox is to be stamped out of Chicago and the West. At a meeting of the secretaries of the various State boards of health held at the Grand Pacific Hotel in Chicago, a committee of clothing manufacturers was present to confer about measures to prevent the spread of small-pox through clothing made in the infected sweatshop districts.

The clothing manufacturers' committee was chosen at a meeting of fifty-five manufacturers held earlier in the day. Resolutions were introduced to the effect that an embargo be laid against clothing made in Chicago unless the State board of health maintain an efficient daily inspection of all places in the city where garments are made.

Commissioner Reynolds said the prevalence of smallpox was, relatively to the population, far less to-day than at former periods. The highest mortality was in 1882, with 3,611 cases and and 1,292 deaths. During 1894 up to Thursday night, the cases numbered 1,459. The population in 1882 was 560,639 as against 1,600,000, now, while Chicago was not then the world's focal point as it is to-day. World's Fair visitors undoubtedly introduced the smallpox. Last July three cases were found miles apart, since which time the city has not been free from the disease, and it is still being imported. The first cases were discovered last fall and prevented from spreading by health department measures. Smallpox never reappeared in premises once disinfected by the department. A canvass of the worst districts is now in progress and from 5,000 to 15,000 people are vaccinated daily.

"BOSS" CROKER OUT.

Tammany's Famous Chieftain Formally Retires from Leadership.

Richard Croker has resigned as leader of Tammany Hall. When, says a New York dispatch, he had given the last hand-shake and walked down Fourteenth street for the first time in ten years without a political weight on his shoulder he said: "Never again in my life will I direct the policies of Tammany Hall or of any other hall.

RICHARD CROKER.

Richard Croker was born in Ireland in 1843. When but a few years old he came to America, where he grew up a ward politician. For more than thirty years Richard Croker has taken a more or less active part in Tammany Hall, and since the death of John Kelly in 1886 he has administered its affairs as its chief with unvarying success. Since he took charge of Tammany the New York City Democrats have never suffered a reverse. He has had the naming of all nominees for city offices and his word has been law in the organization.

History of Tammany Hall.

On Saturday last, Tammany Hall celebrated its 105th birthday. But the organization in its present form and with its present objects would hardly be recognized by its founders. Its beginning was as a charitable and patriotic association, without partisan affiliations. As a patron saint, the founders of Tammany chose one of the most noted of Delaware chieftains, whose name they gave to their organization. Chief Tammany, said tradition, ruled over thirteen tribes. These thirteen tribes, as well as the original thirteen States, were commemorated by the division of the society into thirteen tribes, each of which had its emblem chosen from the animal kingdom—the buffalo, the eagle, the wolf, the tiger, and so on. The tiger alone has survived to modern times as the symbol of the organization—at least, so far as political cartoons are concerned.

The association kept up the Indian analogy throughout. Its meeting place was a "wigwam," its officers were thirteen "sachems" and a "grand sachem," a "sagamore" or guardian of its property, a "wiskinskie" or doorkeeper, a "scribe" and a "father of the council," to whom were added the modern functionaries, a secretary and treasurer. Partisan politics first entered Tammany at the time of the whisky insurrection in 1794.

Thus early enlisted in the strife of parties Tammany began to gain power as a political organization. It has had its periods of triumph and defeat until to-day it has the city under more absolute control than ever before. It elects or appoints its every officer from Mayor to street-sweeper; it in a great degree controls the government of the chief American State by sending to Albany nearly a quarter of the members of its Legislature; it has a powerful voice in national affairs with its ten Congressmen, its influence in the Senate, and its representatives high in the departments. With the grip that Tammany now has on the metropolis it is not likely to lose its power very soon.

TO WASHINGTON'S MOTHER.

A Handsome Monument Dedicated at Fredericksburg, Va.

Tardy justice was recently done Mary, the mother of Washington, when a handsome monument to her fame was dedicated on the long-neglected spot where her body lies buried. The ceremonies were conducted under the auspices of the National Mary Washington Memorial Association, by whom the marble shaft has been reared, the first instance in history where a monument to a woman was erected by women. A most notable gathering was present on the occasion, including President Cleveland and his Cabinet, Vice President Stevenson, Chief Justice Fuller, Gov. O'Ferrall, of Virginia, and a host of other prominent personages from all parts of the country. Senator Daniel and Lawrence Washington, a lineal descendant of Washington's mother, were the orators of the day.

MARY WASHINGTON.

HOME OF WASHINGTON'S MOTHER.

As early as 1830 the idea of erecting a monument to Washington's mother was made public and in 1833 the corner stone of a shaft was laid. But the work progressed no farther, the man who promised to furnish the means having failed. The structure, as it was left, crumbled with slow decay and gradually went to pieces. Other movements of a similar nature were started, but none of them took definite shape until three years ago, when the National Mary Washington Memorial Association was formed. These patriotic women immediately set out to collect funds for a monument, and the success which followed their undertaking is creditable alike to the distinguished woman whom they honored and to themselves. It is a subject of gratification to all Americans that the mother of our first President should at length, 104 years after her death, have a suitable token of respect raised above her unheeded grave. The monument is a beautiful obelisk of plain white marble, fifty feet high and eleven feet square at the base. It was executed in Buffalo and cost $11,000.

MARY WASHINGTON'S MONUMENT.

AMERICAN PARTY WINS.

It Elects Delegates to Hawaii's Constitutional Convention.

Honolulu advices say the election for delegates to the constitutional convention passed off in a very quiet manner. No royalist candiates were in the field, and consequently no special interest was taken in the election. The American Union party had five candidates, and six others ran independently. Of the regular ticket three were elected, one of whom, A. Kunuiakea, is a descendant of the old reigning family, the Kamehamehas. The cumulative ballot system was used, and 7,747 votes were cast. The Portuguese voted solidly for their two candidates, and elected both. Returns from other islands are not yet in, but as there was very little opposition to the American Union party there no contest is expected.

COXEY IS CONVICTED.

LEADERS OF THE COMMONWEAL FOUND GUILTY.

Judge Miller's Charge Was Strongly Against the Defendants—Released on Bail Pending a Motion for a New Trial —"Gen." Randall Arrested.

They Walked on the Grass.

The three leaders of the commonweal, Coxey, Browne and Christopher Columbus Jones, have been found guilty of violating the laws of the District of Columbia in their recent demonstration on the Capitol grounds. The jury retired after hearing a long charge from Judge Miller, which left them little alternative but to convict if they followed his instructions. The verdict was guilty as to the first charge—carrying banners upon the Capitol grounds—against all the defendants, and on the second charge—walking on the grass of the Capitol grounds—guilty as to Coxey and Browne, and not guilty as to Jones.

SENATOR ALLEN AROUSES

Attorney Lipscomb immediately entered a motion for a new trial and another in arrest of judgment. Judge Miller gave four days to file the formal paper. Then the judge made inquiries about bail, and Frank Hume, a well-known wholesale grocer, who several times has run for the Democratic nomination for Congress from the Virginia district across the Potomac River, signed a bond in $500 for each of the three convicted commonwealers.

Gen. Coxey left the room on the arm of his wife, pushing through a curious crowd, which made no demonstration. The conviction of himself and Jones was a surprise to the Commonweal sympathizers. Two weeks, a Washington dispatch says, may elapse, during which the trio will be free on bail, before the motion for a new trial is argued and decided. The penalty provided by law is the same for each offense, viz: A fine not to exceed $100 and imprisonment in jail for not more than sixty days, or both, within the discretion of the court. Accordingly the maximum punishment which may be meted out to Coxey and Browne is $200 and 120 days, while Christopher Columbus Jones is subject to $100 and sixty days.

By a curious Congressional error in a recent bill which reorganized the District courts there is no Appellate Court to which a Police Court case can be carried. The only method of appealing from Judge Miller's sentence will be by an application to a higher court for writs of habeas corpus and certiorari. Attorney Lipscomb has announced that he will take this step if Judge Miller overrules the motion for a new trial. However, such a petition will not operate as a stay of judgment to keep the defendants from serving their sentences while it is pending.

UNCLE SAM'S UNDIGNIFIED SEAL.

ARREST OF "GEN." RANDALL.

He and Three of His Staff Taken Into Custody at La Porte, Ind.

"Gen." Randall, of the Chicago Commonweal Army, and three of his staff were arrested and placed in jail at La Porte, Ind. The arrest, a dispatch says, was made a mile outside the city limits and without a warrant, before any demonstration had been made by the army, which was en route to the city. Opinion is very much divided over the legality of the action, and is the cause of much discussion.

The General was indignant when he was told that he was under arrest, and rising in his buggy he shouted: "I protest against this arrest. I am an American citizen and I have a right on this highway." Col. Hoeffler, who was on horseback, turned to the group of officials and asked them if they had a warrant. His answer was that if they did not have a warrant they would get out one in good time. While Randall was descending from his buggy another pair of deputies were assisting Hoeffler off his horse and the pair were half dragged, half pulled toward the row of deputies that guarded the highway. Randall again remonstrated with his captors over his arrest as illegal. They roughly hauled him away, alternately protesting and pleading. For an instant it looked as if the column would make a rush to rescue their leader, although they were as weaponless as a band of high school cadets.

A telegram was sent to Chicago for Dr. Grier and the best of counsel, and one of the best criminal lawyers in the State. Many citizens say that it would have been cheaper for all concerned to have fed the army. They argue that it would have cost but $100 to feed the men, whereas it has now cost the city and county $500, and it is quite possible that they are not through with the affair.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Made Her Strong and Healthy

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has been of great benefit to our little girl, and also to myself and husband. When she was three years old Mabel was seized with stomach trouble, like cramps or inflammation. I was taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for my blood, and as the doctor's prescription did not help her, I occasionally gave her a little of my own medicine. I soon realized that Hood's Sarsaparilla was

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston. Send postal card for book.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it. Read the label.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Sold by all Druggists.

A COLUMN OF PARTICULAR INTEREST TO THEM.

Something that Will Interest the Juvenile Members of Every Household—Quaint Actions and Bright Sayings of Many Cute and Cunning Children.

The Clever Parson.

My children, come tell me now if you have ever
Been told of the parson who was so clever;
So clever, so clever, so clever was he
That never a cleverer parson could be.

The parson loved children; he also loved walking,
And off to the woods he was constantly stalking,
To smell the sweet air, and to see the green trees,
And to do just exactly whate'er he might please.

Some children they went with him once to the wood;
(They loved the good parson because he was good).
They followed him gayly for many a mile,
To list to his voice and to look on his smile.

At length the children cried, "Oh—dear—ME!!
We're tired—as tired as tired can be!
'Tis supper-time, too, while afar we thus roam—
Oh, pray you, dear Parson, do carry us home!"

The children were six, and the parson was one;
Now, goodness gracious! what was to be done?
He sat himself down in the shade of a tree,
And pondered the matter most thoughtfully.

At length he exclaimed, "My dear little chicks,
I might carry one, but I can't carry six.
Yet, courage! your parson's good care will provide
That each of you home on a fine horse shall ride."

He drew out his jackknife so broad and so bright,
And fell to work slashing with main and with might,
Till ready there—one, two, three, four, five, and six—
Lay, stout and smooth-polished, some excellent sticks.

"Now mount your good horses, my children!" he cried;
"Now mount your good horses and merrily ride!
A canter, a trot, and a gallop away,
And we shall get home ere the close of the day."

The children forgot they were dreadfully tired:
They seized on the hobbies, with ardor inspired.
"Gee, Dobbin! whoa, Dobbin! come up, Dobbin, do!
Oh, Parson! dear Parson! won't you gallop, too?"

Away went the children in frolicsome glee,
Away went the parson, as pleased as could be;
And when they got back to the village they cried:
"Oh, dear! and oh, dear! what a very short ride!"

Art for Children.

The children's room in every house ought to be fitted out with a blackboard. Any painter will coat a section of the wall with blackboard staining for a few cents, or if there is no painter convenient, sheets of slated paper may be tacked up against the wall, and the result is quite satisfactory. A box of colored chalks and a book of outline prints will furnish the materials for drawing and sketching, and many an hour that would otherwise be passed in mischief will be passed by the youngsters in learning to draw. There is no better way of keeping the children pleasantly and profitably employed, and the cost will not be equal to that of a single box of candy.

Children's Smiles.

There is an unwritten legend known only of those to whom it has been miraculously revealed. The highest archangel came to earth so long ago that time hath no record of it. He sought shelter, but in vain. There was no pillow anywhere for his head. But some little children, pitying him, gave him smiles. And since that time the faces of children have been the most beautiful of all earthly things, save flowers, to which they are likened. And he who loves not children is abhorred of the archangel to this day.—Kate Field's Washington.

How Grant Became a Smoker.

"My father," said Col. Grant, "tried to smoke while at West Point, but only because it was against the regulations, and then he didn't succeed very well at it. He really got the habit from smoking light cigars and cigarettes during the Mexican war, but it wasn't a fixed habit. When he left the army and lived in the country he smoked a pipe—not incessantly. I don't think that he was very fond of tobacco then, and really there was always a popular misconception of the amount of his smoking. But he went on as a light smoker, a casual smoker, until the day of the fall of Fort Donelson. Then the gun-boats had been worsted somewhat, and Admiral Foote having been wounded, he sent ashore for my father to come and see him. Father went aboard, and the Admiral, as is customary, had his cigars passed. My father took one, and was smoking it when he went ashore. There he was met by a staff officer, who told him that there was a sortie and the right wing had been struck and smashed in. Then my father started for the scene of operations. He let his cigar go out, naturally, but held it between his fingers. He rode hither and yon, giving orders and directions, still with the cigar stump in his hand. The result of his exertions was that Fort Donelson fell after he sent his message of 'Unconditional surrender,' and 'I propose to move immediately upon your works.' With the message was sent all over the country the news that Grant was smoking throughout the battle, when he only had carried this stump from Foote's flagship. But the cigars began to come in from all over the Union. He had 11,000 cigars on hand in a very short time. He gave away all he could, but he was so surrounded with cigars that he got to smoking them regularly. But he never smoked as much as he seemed to smoke. He would light a cigar after breakfast, and let it go out, and then light it again, and then again let it go out and light it; so that one cigar would last until lunch time."—McClure's Magazine.

SHE LIKES CATCHING THIEVES.

A Woman Detective Who Watches for Shoplifters in a Broadway Store.

While the recent success of Miss Alexander capturing shoplifters has been widely advertised, it is not remarkable, and doubtless would not have become known to the public if the methods employed in the larger retail stores had obtained in the store where she does her clever work, says the New York Sun. A dozen detections a day is the average record in one of the big retail establishments on Sixth avenue. Few arrests are made, because the offenders in the majority of instances are not professional shoplifters, but amateurs, who steal articles of small value to keep them for personal use.

The fact that Miss Alexander follows an occupation new to women, and is employed in a store where the majority of shoplifters are sent to court, combine to make her work interesting and known to the public. She is a French woman, about 25 years old, of slight build, and has piercing black eyes that are constantly moving. Four years ago she gained her first experience as an amateur thief catcher in a French school in this city. When the other girls missed such articles as books, handkerchiefs and bon-bons Miss Alexander tracked the thieves. She did this for fun, and was invariably successful.

After leaving school a friend suggested that Miss Alexander could turn her talent to good account. She adopted the suggestion, obtaining employment in a well-known private detective agency in this city, where she worked for three years. She did all sorts of work where a woman's tact could be utilized. She secured evidence against blackmailers and shadowed co-respondents in divorce cases. Miss Alexander declines to discuss her adventures, because she says that she was sworn to secrecy. The chief of the bureau, an old and successful detective, taught her many trade secrets. As the study of physlognomy is of first importance, she learned to detect thieves by physical characteristics.

A year ago Miss Alexander became a shop detective, and, she says, takes keen delight in catching thieves, though she does not like to appear again them in court. She has averaged one arrest a month and claims to have made no mistakes. She stands near the store door, dressed in a smart shopping costume, and watches the people coming in. When she sees a man or woman who acts suspiciously—and she says that the majority are men—she follows that person about the store. She talks to the salesgirls as an intending purchaser would, while she keeps one eye on the suspected person. She waits patiently until she sees an article snatched from the counter and dropped into a pocket.

When the thief reaches the door she follows and brings him or her back, with the remark that the proprietor requests an interview. The thief is taken to a quiet corner in the store, where a few questions are asked. There is usually a denial of guilt. Then Miss Alexander tells in which pocket the stolen goods are and a search is made. If she and the proprietor are satisfied that it is the first offense and the offender is entitled to clemency a release follows. Otherwise the case goes to court. Miss Alexander says she has heard of kleptomaniacs, but does not believe in them, neither does she believe in hypnotism, though she has been charged with unconsciously hypnotizing people into stealing.

THE MAGIC WHEELS.

How to Make Shadows Turn in Directions Opposite to Each Other.

Cut out of a piece of pasteboard a circular wheel with large teeth around it, and pierce the center of this wheel with a pin, which next stick into a wooden rule held vertically. Then lift two candles placed upon a table about three feet apart, and both at equal distance from the wall. If you hold the wheel parallel with the wall, so that it projects upon it two circular shadows, and make the wheel turn on its pin axis, you will see the shadows turn also in the direction indicated by the little arrows in the cut.

All this is very easy. But now to make the two-shadow wheels turn in opposite directions—how would you go at work to accomplish that? Place your wheel perpendicularly with the wall. Then back off until you bring the shadows into circular form. At that moment turn your pasteboard wheel, and you will see the shadows turning in opposite directions.

A PICTURESQUE CHURCH.

Stands on the Rock of St. Michael and Was Founded in 955.

Where the valleys of the Loire, Borne, and Dolaison join stands the town of Le Puy, one of the most picturesque places in France. The town stands on the southern acclivity of Mount Anis, which is crowned by a huge mass of volcanic rock, called the Rock of St. Michael. On this towering peak stands a chapel, claimed to have been founded in 955, and long a famous place of pilgrimage. This strange chapel is reached by a series of flights of steps and inclined planes, winding round the rock. Near by is another church—that of Our Lady of Puy—wherein is a statue of the Madonna, brought from the crusades by St. Louis. Higher up on Mount Anis is a colossal statue of the Virgin, erected in 1860, and made from 213 iron cannon captured at Sebastopol.

Solving a Labor Problem.

An urchin 9 years old, with a very dirty face and a pair of bright eyes, accosted a woman as she was hurrying across the common the other day.

"Please to give me some money to get me something to eat," he whined.

"No; I won't give you any money to get you something to eat," was the reply. The lady mimicked the little fellow's whine.

Finally she hired him to carry her umbrella to her office, and on their way thither she gave him a dissertation on labor and its fruits in phrases she thought he would understand. She advised him to go into the newspaper business, and loaned him 20 cents to invest in papers, after he had signed his name to a contract she drew up, promising to pay her immediately he had cleared that amount.

In an hour and a half he came back to the office proudly and deposited the money loaned on her desk. She took 10 cents of it and he kept the other to make further investment. The next day he cleared $1.50. He was radiant.

"This is better than begging, isn't it?" she asked.

"You bet," he said.

"Now, if I give you this 10 cents, will you promise to buy with it what I shall ask you?"

"Yes'm."

"Then buy a cake of soap and use it."

He said he would and went out.

Don't Blame the Cook

If a baking powder is not uniform in strength, so that the same quantity will always do the same work, no one can know how to use it, and uniformly good, light food cannot be produced with it.

All baking powders except Royal, because improperly compounded and made from inferior materials, lose their strength quickly when the can is opened for use. At subsequent bakings there will be noticed a falling off in strength. The food is heavy, and the flour, eggs and butter wasted.

It is always the case that the consumer suffers in pocket, if not in health, by accepting any substitute for the Royal Baking Powder. The Royal is the embodiment of all the excellence that it is possible to attain in an absolutely pure powder. It is always strictly reliable. It is not only more economical because of its greater strength, but will retain its full leavening power, which no other powder will, until used, and make more wholesome food.

Calling Bismarck Names.

The following little story shows the celebrated statesman Prince Bismarck in a pleasant light, and proves that the "Iron Chancellor," as he has been called, possesses a heart that can feel for an enemy in distress.

One day, after a battle between the Prussians and Austrians, during the war of 1866, he was strolling about the camp, when he came upon a number of his soldiers who had captured an Austrian peasant. They had placed the unfortunate countryman in their midst, and were beating him unmercifully.

Bismarck, then Count, hastened up to the group, and at the sight of him the soldiers stopped.

"Hullo! What's all this din about? what's the matter now?" he asked.

"Matter enough. The dolt called us names!" a score of voices answered; "and we are showing him how Prussians can punish," added one bolder than the rest.

"It's false!" cried out the prisoner, turning to the Count, and not knowing who it was he addressed. The newcomer's uniform inspired him with the hope that he might be rescued from this persecution. "I tell you 'tis false! I only called Bismarck names! I assure you, good sir, I only called Bismarck names."

This daring assertion brought a loud roar of laughter from his captors, who now looked inquiringly at their chief for permission to renew their flogging. Bismarck, pleased perhaps at the man's candor, and aware that he was not recognized, only smiled, and said—

"Nay, let him go. He is not the first. Many, and greater ones than he, have called me names before."

A Wonderful Cane.

Out in a Western penitentiary is confined a most ingenious criminal. It seems a pity that a man possessing such ability had not devoted it to some good channel which would make him an honest fortune and keep him out of the clutches of the law. During his residence in the prison, he has carved a wonderful cane. Upon it he has cut the heads of all the presidents of the United States from Washington to Harrison. The likenesses are said to be accurate and the work is as delicate as the finest pen and ink work. The whole is surmounted by a gold head, directly beneath which is carved the American eagle.

Tossing on the "Briny"

Is very far from amusing, untraveled reader, if so be you are one. A rebellion fomented by each mountainous wave that smites the vessel's hull threatens absolutely to dislodge your very vitals from their natural resting place, and a nausea so frightful that it would reconcile you to a termination of your sufferings by shipwreck harasses you. Well for you then, or rather before this crisis, if you are provided with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a swift remedy for and preventive of the nausea of travelers by sea or land, nervousness caused by the vibration of the screw of a steamer or the jarring of a railway train, and an antidote to bowel, liver and stomachic troubles caused by impure water and unaccustomed food. The Bitters also counteracts the effects of fatigue and exposure, and is a safeguard against malaria, rheumatism and kidney trouble.

What He Was Afraid Of.

The dentist's chair may fairly be said to be like conscience. It makes cowards of us all. So it was with a youthful hypocrite mentioned by Good News.

"What!" said the little boy's mother, "back already? Well, I'm glad it's over. Did it hurt much?"

"I—I didn't have it out."

"What? Didn't you go to the dentists?"

"Yes'm, but there was two people ahead of me."

"Why didn't you wait?"

"I—I was afraid they'd feel ashamed if I stayed and heard them holler."

Handel and Bach.

Handel and Bach, the two greatest musicians of their age, who were contemporaries, lived nearly all their lives almost within sight of each other, and were brothers in the same profession, never met, it is strange to say. One would imagine that curiosity, if not interest, would have led each to desire to see the other eminent composer.

The subject of the above portrait is the Rev. Charles Prosser, a much beloved and most devout minister of the gospel of Carmel, Northumberland Co., Pa. Mr. Prosser's usefulness, was, for a long time, greatly impaired by a distressing, obstinate disease. How his malady was finally conquered we will let him tell in his own language. He says: "I was a great sufferer from dyspepsia, and I had suffered so long that I was a wreck; life was rendered undesirable and it seemed death was near; but I came in contact with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and his 'Pleasant Pellets.' I took twelve bottles of 'Discovery,' and several bottles of the 'Pellets,' and followed the hygenic advice of Dr. Pierce, and I am happy to say it was indeed a cure, for life is worth living now."

For dyspepsia, or indigestion, "liver complaint," or torpid liver, biliousness, constipation, chronic diarrhea and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels, Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery effects perfect cures when all other medicines fail. It has a specific tonic effect upon the lining membranes of the stomach and bowels. As an invigorating, restorative tonic it gives strength to the whole system and builds up solid flesh to the healthy standard, when reduced by "wasting diseases."

Mr. J. F. Hudson, a prominent lawyer of Whitcharville, Sebastian Co., Ark., writes: "Having suffered severely, for a long time, from a torpid liver, indigestion, constipation, nervousness and general debility, and finding no relief in my efforts to regain my health, I was induced to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pleasant Pellets.' Under this treatment, I improved very much and in a few months was able to attend to my professional duties."

Yours truly,

J. F. Hudson

To purify, enrich and vitalize the blood, and thereby invigorate the liver and digestive organs, brace up the nerves, and put the system in order generally; also to build up both solid flesh and strength after grip, pneumonia, fevers and other prostrating diseases, "Golden Medical Discovery" has no equal. It does not make fat people more corpulent, but builds up solid, wholesome flesh.

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, have fullness or bloating after eating, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, frequent headaches, "floating specks" before eyes, nervous prostration and drowsiness after meals?

If you have any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from torpid liver, associated with dyspepsia, or indigestion. The more complicated your disease the greater the number of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it.

Nervousness, sleeplessness, nervous prostration, nervous debility, and kindred disturbances are generally due to impoverished blood. The nervous system suffers for want of pure, rich blood to nourish and sustain it. Purify, enrich and vitalize the blood by taking "Golden Medical Discovery" and all these nervous troubles vanish.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" is far better for this purpose than the much advertised nervines and other compounds, so loudly recommended for nervous prostration, as they "put the nerves to sleep," but do not invigorate, brace up and so strengthen the nervous system as does the "Discovery," thus giving permanent benefit and a radical cure.

Buy of reliable dealers. With any others, something else that pays them better will probably be urged as "just as good." Perhaps it is, for them; but it can't be, for you.

A Book (136 pages) treating of the foregoing diseases and pointing out successful means of home cure, also containing vast numbers of testimonials, (with phototype portraits of writers), references and other valuable information, will be sent on receipt of six cents, to pay postage. Notice of Hearing of Ditch Petition.

In the matter of the petition of William Knight and others of Concord township notice is hereby given that a petition has been filed with the Auditor of DeKalb County, State of Indiana, and viewers have been appointed who have viewed and reported said view which is on file in my office. The hearing of said petition upon its merits will be on Tuesday the 5th day of June, 1894, the same being the 2d day of the June term, 1894, of the Commissioners court of said county.

The prayer of said petition is that a ditch be constructed on the following route to-wit:

Beginning 1,200 feet north and 100 feet west of the southeast corner of the west half of the southeast quarter of section 8, Concord Township, DeKalb County, State of Indiana, and from thence in a general easterly and southeasterly course along and in the natural channel of Bear Creek, deepening, widening, straightening and otherwise improving said natural channel through said section 8 and sections 9, 16 and 15 to the southwest corner of the east-half of the northeast quarter of said section 15, thence in a southerly and southwesterly course along and in the said natural channel of Bear Creek through said sections 15 and 22 to the St. Joe River and there to end; said ending being 900 feet west and 200 feet south of the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of said section 15, all in Concord Township, DeKalb County, State of Indiana.

And also the following lateral commencing at the junction of the Saylor and Koch ditches, in section 9 of said Concord Township, said point being 40 rods north and 50 rods east of the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of said section 9 aforesaid, thence in a general southwesterly and southerly direction through and in said sections 9 and 8 to the main ditch at a point 25 feet below stake 8, of said main ditch, and thereto end.

This proposed work will affect the lands of the following persons:

Alchemist's Alloys.

The alchemists of the middle ages were incessantly occupied with the endeavors to transmute metals. Many alloys were known to them which are lost to us, and their recipes contain many useful hints worthy the attention of modern scientists. There is a curious book in the Bibliotheque Nationale entitled "Liber Sacerdotum," ("The Book of the Priests"). It is supposed to have been written by the Jewish priests, but probably dates from the eighteenth century. Here is one of the curious recipes contained in this book: "Mix a quantity of iron filings with a quarter of its weight of red orpiment. Press the mixture in a linen cloth, inclose in a smelting pot and leave it for a whole night in a heated furnace. Next add some oil and natron and just as much copper filings as there is iron. Melt altogether, and the result will be a fine material for hammers.

What makes a house a home? The mother well, the children rosy, the father in good health and good humor. All brought about by the use of DeWitt's Sarsaparilla. It recommends itself.

Health and Happiness!

HONEY OF FIGS is the QUEEN or all cathartics; syrups or pills. One anticipates its taking with pleasure. No other remedy sells so well or gives such satisfaction. It acts gently on inactive bowels or liver, relieves the kidneys, cures constipation, colds, fevers, nervous headaches, etc., and restores the beauty of health. Ladies and children prefer it. Doctors and druggists recommend it. The Fig Honey Co. of San Francisco. Try a bottle. Only one cent a dose. Matheny & Gerke wholesale and retail agents for DeKalb county.

A GREAT DISCOVERY.

PRACTICAL PHOTOGRAPHY WITHOUT LIGHT OR LENS.

A Picture Taken by Electrical Action Only. Hertz's Experiments Rivaled by a Professor In the Leland Stanford, Jr., University.

Clerk Maxwell's electro magnetic theory of light received striking confirmation seven or eight years ago when Heinrich Hertz performed a number of experiments in which electrical waves were made to imitate the conduct of light waves in several particulars. This gifted investigator, now connected with the University of Bonn, concentrated the rays to a focus with a parabolic mirror. Refraction as well as reflection was accomplished. Electricity, proceeding in straight lines, was diverted from its course by a prism of pitch. The phenomena of interference and polarization were also reproduced.

It is now announced that a photograph has been taken by using electricity instead of light, and if this story is true then additional evidence will have been afforded as to the kinship of these two forces or forms of force. Hertz, it will be observed, only showed that the electrical radiance conformed to mechanical laws which are known to control life, but photography introduces the element of chemical action, so that this later achievement, if it proves to be all that it seems, is one of the most remarkable revelations of our day.

Professor Fernando Sanford, who claims to have attained this wonderful result and who gives some account of it to the San Francisco Examiner, occupies the chair of physics in Leland Stanford, Jr., university and is one of the youngest members of the faculty of that institution. As the story appears over his own signature, and he intimates that he has repeated the experiment several times, there is little room for doubt as to the genuineness of the occurrence described. Professor Sanford obtained his picture in the dark without even a lens in the following manner:

It is well known that when two brass rods connected with the sides of the battery or placed in the secondary circuit of an induction coil are brought close enough together a spark will fly from one to the other. If to each rod, a short distance from the knobs in which they terminate, a copper wire be attached and the two wires be led off to suitable metal plates placed facing each other, but not quite touching, an electrical oscillation will occur between the plates whenever there is a discharge between the knobs. Now, Professor Sanford substituted a coin, the object to be photographed, for one of the plates of such a pair, and laid it face downward upon a thin sheet of mica, which in turn rested on the sensitive gelatin film of a glass photographic plate.

Tinfoil was arranged on the other side of the glass and took the place of the other metal plate of the pair. This combination was now placed between two boards and left in the dark for an hour, during which time a series of sparks were flying from one knob to the other of the discharger across an interval of one-sixteenth of an inch. Upon developing his sensitive plate Professor Sanford had an image of his coin—that is, of the portions in relief on that side which was in contact with the mica. The Examiner prints a copy of the picture, a positive, which shows the Liberty head, date, inscription "E Pluribus Unum," circle of stars and raised edge in white on a dark background.

Professor Sanford does not enter into a discussion of the theories involved, but he mentions that the tinfoil was not only of the same size as the coin (a silver dollar), but placed directly opposite. Apparently electro magnetic waves flowed from the coin to the tinfoil, but preferring the shortest route radiated mainly or exclusively from the raised part of the dollar. They seem to have proceeded in straight lines too; otherwise the chemical action on the film would not have been confined so accurately to regions directly opposite the pattern.

Right here it should be noted that Hertz discovered in his experiments that the induced magnetic radiance excited in the manner described, and now called "Hertzian waves" in honor of that now famous physicist, had this remarkable trait not possessed by a primary electrical current: Good "conductors," like copper or other metals, being interposed would stop them, but they would go right through wood and other so called "insulators." Hence in Professor Sanford's experiment the mica and glass were evidently no barriers to the passage of the particular kind of electricity produced.

Although it does not at first appear clearly what practical applications of this discovery can be made, it is not improbable that uses will be found for it. The indirect consequences are sure to be valuable as well as interesting.—New York Tribune.

Negro Logic.

A robbery had been committed in a Virginia town. The finger of suspicion pointed to a negro servant, and he was arraigned before the local justice, who happened to be the negro's old master, to whom he was still intensely loyal.

He made no defense or denial as the judge laid the evidence point by point against him, and sentence was about to be pronounced when suddenly the real culprit was discovered.

"Why didn't you say you didn't do it, George?" asked the justice.

"Why," said the faithful old servant, "you's a hones' man, judge, an if you say I is the man den I is the man, but you see I ain't the man."—Exchange.

Success in law requires, first, a good deal of money; second, a good deal of patience; third, a good cause; fourth, a good lawyer; fifth, a good counsel; sixth, good witnesses; seventh, a good jury; eighth, a good judge, and, ninth, good luck.—New York Evening World.

A Real Magic Grove.

Cal E. VanAuken, of Auburn, spent Sunday with his brother Frank at Magic Grove farm, returning Monday morning. Cal is looking hale and hearty, though he still shows the trouble he has recently passed through. Cal is keeping his little fellows together, which is commendable.

The above is taken from the Pleasant Lake correspondence of the Angola Herald of last week. The "Magic Grove" is a plat of ground planted with trees by Mr. VanAuken's father, assisted, as we supposed by the "boys." It is arranged like the "magic grove" in the old arithmetic, "19 trees in 9 straight rows, 5 trees in a row, etc." When we saw it a few years ago, it was quite a curiosity. And very few people can plant such a grove.

While Mr. T. J. Richey, of Altona, Mo., was traveling in Kansas he was taken violently ill with cholera morbus. He called at a drug store to get some medicine and the druggist recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy so highly he concluded to try it. The result was immediate relief, and a few doses cured him completely. It is made for bowel complaint and nothing else. It never fails. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

For Lame Back.

The most painful cases of rheumatism may be relieved by a few applications of Chamberlain's Pain Balm; its continued use will cure any case, no matter of how long standing. It is equally beneficial for lame back, pain in the side, pain in the chest, lameness, and in all painful affections requiring an external remedy. A piece of flannel saturated with Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain is superior to any plaster. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

IN THE OLDEN TIMES.

WHEN THEATRICAL TICKET SPECULATORS WERE IN CLOVER.

How One of Them Won a Wager by the Aid of an Old Violin Case—The Trick Was One of Jimmy Hyde's, Whom All Old Time New York Show People Know.

"The palmy days of the ticket speculator are over," said the old theatrical man. "There's nothing in the business nowadays. Newspaper criticisms, the result of public sentiment, were the first things to kill the business, and it never has and never will revive. Why, it was nothing in the old times for a man to make $25 and $50 in a night speculating. It wasn't necessary, either, for a man to stand in with the box office in order to make money, as speculators have to nowadays. A speculator could be stuck with 15 or 20 tickets and still make some profit. So far as making money now, though, there is little in it. A speculator is in luck if he can knock out $3 a night. All of the old timers who made big money speculating years ago are either dead or in other branches of the business now. A trickier or smarter crowd of fellows than some of the old time speculators could not be found.

"About the most successful game I ever saw worked by a speculator was the scheme gotten up by Jimmy Hyde, then prominent among ticket speculators, to beat the French ball. Jimmy, who is now with the Casino, made up his mind that it would be an easy thing to beat the ball out of several hundred dollars. Max Hirsch, who was then and is now treasurer of the Metropolitan Opera House, was telling Hyde about the elaborate arrangements that were being made for the French ball that year, and how it was bound to be a great success on account of the entire suspension of the free list, when Hyde exclaimed: 'Suspend the free list, eh? Well, you can suspend and be darned, but just the same I'm going to pass in at least 15 people.' 'I'll bet you don't pass in a soul, barring yourself,' replied Hirsch.

"The result was a heavy wager, Hyde betting that he would pass in at least 10 strangers for nothing, giving none of them tickets or passes. Every one who heard of the bet laughed at Hyde, but Jimmy simply smiled and said nothing. Those who knew Jimmy Hyde felt confident that he would succeed in doing what he had boasted he could do, although nobody could see just how he was going to manage it. Well, on the night of the ball Hirsch stuck around the door of the opera house all night, watching every one that passed in. It was just about midnight when Hyde, followed by a meek looking individual who carried something under his coat, showed up in the vicinity. Leaving his companion on the corner, Jimmy walked into the lobby and approached a young man who was leaning against the wall.

"'Going in?' asked Hyde.

"'Can't. Ain't got the price?' responded the stranger.

"'How much have you got?' asked Hyde.

"'Two an a half.'

"'Well, it's money anyway, so come on,' and Hyde walked out of the lobby, followed by the young man.

"'Now, see here,' said Jimmy when they reached the corner, 'when you get inside don't stop a second, but just go right past the wineroom down toward the stage. At the left end you'll find a flight of stairs. Go down them, and you'll find yourself in the cellar right under one of the gratings which open on Thirty-ninth street. Will you do that?'

"'I don't see any use of doing all that, but you get me in and I'll do it.'

"'All right,' said Hyde, and he took the bundle from under his companion's coat and handed it to the young man. It was an old and battered violin case.

"'Take that and walk right through the door,' said Hyde. 'If any one says anything to you, just say "musician," and pass on. When you get in the cellar, pass it up to me.'

"The young man took the case and walked into the lobby and past the doormen without any trouble. In three minutes he was under the grating and had passed the case up through a small aperture. Nine other men, each of whom paid from $2 to $4 apiece for the use of the violin case, were successfully passed through. Hirsch stood at the door the whole time and never once saw through the game. It was one of the doormen who caught on first. He thought it remarkable that so many of the orchestra were coming in late, and when Hyde's eleventh man tried to pass through he nailed him. 'Musician,' said the man hoarsely, but it was no go. The doormen took the case away and opened it. Of course it was empty.

"Hyde saw that the game was up and almost burst with laughter when he saw his man go sailing out into the street, with the old violin case flying after him. The truth flashed on Hirsch in an instant. Two mutual friends whom Hyde had let into the secret at the last moment testified that 10 men had been passed through on the old case, and Hirsch paid over the amount of the wager like a man. It didn't take the crowd long to drink up the money, and when it was gone Hyde was forced to blow in the money he had collected from those he had passed in too. That was a mighty neat piece of work, that was, and there wasn't another man in New York but Jimmy Hyde who would have thought of it. It seems that Hyde had made up his mind to beat the ball in that way long before the bet was made, and that he only accepted the wager because he saw a chance to rake in a few dollars more.

"Yes, the day of the ticket speculator is over, and, despite the old saying that history repeats itself, I don't believe it'll ever come around again."—New York Sun.

A Model For the Heathen.

"John, dear," said Mrs. Hicks, "I'm making a shirt for the heathen. Come here and let me fit it on you, will you?"—Exchange.

The empress dowager of China celebrated her sixtieth birthday recently in the traditional manner of her country. Over 1,000,000 pieces of red silk, each 40 feet long and 3 feet wide, were made in the imperial factories, to be used in decorating the streets of Peking for this occasion.

A combined photographic and visual telescope has been finished and placed in position for Dr. Janssen at Meudon. The two lenses were made by the Henry Bros. of the Paris observatory, and the mounting by Gauthier of Paris.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

That Sugar Duty.

The Dispatch and some other equally blind republican papers commented on the little article we had about putting a duty on sugar. Their comments admit all we claimed, and we admitted in advance that sugar is cheaper with the tariff taken off. For we have always asserted and these republicans denied that a duty levied on any article made it higher in price. We have gained so much in the argument and republicans have lost so much. For if a tariff will raise the price of one article, it will raise the price of another, if both are imported. But they did not touch another point we make, that is, that if we put a tariff on sugar, we collect the money when the sugar is brought in and the government gets it all. But if we take it off of sugar, government loses all that and has not money enough to use. At the same time the republicans took the duty off of sugar, they put it up much higher on other articles, many of which were not imported to any great extent, and so the government did not get much money and has found itself compelled to issue bonds, all through this republican blunder. But, while this republican law permitted people to get their sugar about 60 millions cheaper, it made them pay 15 millions in bounty to the sugar producers, and several hundred millions in higher prices to the "proted industries" that were "protected" by a higher duty, of which the "protected" man got all the benefit, the people had to pay, and the government got nothing, and finds itself in close quarters. Yes, the people will find it profitable to "go back to the old system" and pay 60 millions and let the government have enough money, rather than go down into their pockets for several hundred millions to put into the wealthy "protected industries," while government gets nothing. The people are not fools. To ask if the people want to go back to the old way, is merely avoiding the question. The Dispatch does not even attempt to deny what we said, or to prove that the McKinley law had lifted the burden of a penny from the shoulders of the taxpayers. The COURIER is not ashamed of an article of this kind, in which we try to lift 200 millions of the people's burdens from their shoulders and give them 60 millions instead.

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phœbe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her, and she says it saved her life. Mr Thomas Eggers, 139 Florida St., San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption. He tried without result, everything else, then bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medecine in coughs and colds. Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50c. and $1. 5

One of the differences between a bicycle and a unicycle is that the wheelbarrow is much the harder to push.

Why Water Expands When it Freezes.

Ice is in reality crystalized water, and during its formation the partitcles arrange themselves in ranks and lines, which cross each other at angles of sixty and one hundred and twenty degrees, and as an exchange explains, occupy more space than when liquid. Cast iron bombshells thirteen inches in diameter and two inches thick were filled with water and their apertures or fuse holes firmly plugged with iron bolts. Upon exposure to a temperature of nineteen degrees below zero, at the moment the water froze the sheels burst asunder, demonstrating the enormous interior pressure to which they were subjected by the water assuming its solid shape.

The Fluctuation of Silver.

From Harper's Weekly.

Keseph, or the white metal, as it was called by the Hebrews, has known endless fluctuations, yet has never ceased its vain rivalry with gold. Solomon was the first apparently to discredit it, and when silver grew so abundant in the Holy City that it was almost as plentiful as the stones of its streets, he very naturally refused to receive it as currency. He would take nothing but gold, we are told by Josephus, for his merchandise, but paid away his depreciated silver to Egyptian traders for a chariot and a pair of horses. On this he rode out in state in the morning to his country-seat at Etham, a paradise of rivulets and gardens. Nothing could be bought or sold at Jerusalem for silver, says the historian, and only gold was valued.

The Greeks, when they first visited Spain, made their anchors and common utensils of silver. The white metal lost its value. But this could not continue long, for the richest silver mines at last grew unproductive, and in the seventh century B. C. the metal had once more risen to a higher price. It could once again complete with gold, at least at a distance. The first form of money was in stamped bars or ingots with the weight certified by an official seal. The earliest known ingots were of gold. But about 700 B. C. Mr. Head tells us money was first coined, and in the British Museum may be seen a Babylonian stater of electrum, a mingling of gold and silver, apparently the oldest coin in existence. Silver was for a time the common currency of the Greeks, but at last they adopted a gold standard. The fine gold pieces of Philip and Alexander have become the models of all later coinage.

At Rome the oaliest money was of bronze; then silver came in as the standard; and when it grew too abundant, the Roman emperors borrowed the gold coinage of the East. The Roman solidus was worth, in gold, a sovereign or a half-eagle. But nowhere did silver money fluctuate more widely than at Rome; in the Hannibalic wars the currency was constantly debased; in moments of danger money was hoarded. But the victories of Cesar and his general robbery made it so plentiful at Rome that land doubled or trebled in price and money sank in value. Under Augustus, in the quiet of peace, it is probable that silver was worth about one-tenth its weight in gold. With the decay of the empire a debased currency filled the world with disaster, and aided in the general destruction of commerce and the arts.

Silver in the Middle Ages rose in value with rarity, and was at times almost on an equality with gold. In Richard the the First's time in England four shillings would buy a cow, a bull, or a horse for ploughing, and tenpence a sheep with fine wool. Yet again, with the conquest of Mexico and Peru, money fell, prices of labor and land increased; but the rapid growth of trade and commerce at the same period revived the demand for an honest currency. Silver and gold moved on together, and kept up a certain ratio to each other that was never greatly disturbed. It is only recently that the immense yield of our Western mines has nearly equalled that of ancient Spain when silver sank into discredit. But it will no doubt soon revive again. It cannot take the place of gold in the opinion of mankind—the source of value. But it will always hold a subsidiary position that no other metal can fill.

The Chinese Columbus.

The belief in a Chinese Columbus was first allowed by scholars only about fifty years ago. The claim is that a Buddhist priest in the fifth century crossed the Pacific to the continent and returned. making a written report of his discovery. The report still exists. It was translated into French in 1791 by M. de Guignes. It gives a narrative of a voyage eastward by a priest for twenty thousand li. where he found a country which he named Fusang. People familiar to the the Indians were described as well as the American plants. The only doubt about the matter is as to the distance meant by twenty thousand li. The priest may have reached only some island in the Pacific ocean.

Children and Sunday.

From Harper's Bazar.

Children are apt to find the quiet of Sunday tedious, unless the mother takes pains to make the day enjoyable. That there should be a difference felt by the little ones, from the time they are old enough to notice such things and as they grow up between the every-day affairs of the week and the one day of rest, is accepted as right and just by most thoughtful mothers. Yet it is not wise to forbid little children to play on Sunday, play being as natural to them as to other young creatures. Kittens, lambkins, kids, frisk about and exercise their young limbs, and so, too, should the children, unchecked and unreproved. Yes, even on Sundays let the little ones play.

Still, the play may be quieter, and not quite like that of the week-day. In a certain home, where the children are very happy and are developing beautifully, there are toys for Sunday, never used on any other day, and therefore coming forth with a zest of novelty when the sacred day returns. Lately, too, a wise woman, long accustomed to infant-school teaching and skilled in kindergarten methods, has invented a set of Bible toys, in the shape, easily adjustable, of ladders, stars, and other devices, by which, while playing games, the children are taught the beautiful old Bible stories, as fascinating to the childish ear as stories from Homer or from fairyland—stories of the Garden of Eden, of the deluge, of Joseph, of Samson, of Gideon, of Samuel, of David and Goliath, of Solomon and Josiah, and coming to later times, the wonderful stories of the New Testament. These cards and cords, reversible, and printed in clear type, are a charming addition to the nursery store of games.

There should be a bright atmosphere about the house on Sunday. It ought to be a gala-day, because it is often the only day in which papa and the babies can make each other's acquaintance with any freedom. Many men are obliged to go to business so early, and they return from it so late that the children are asleep at both ends of the day, and papa is necessarily somewhat a stranger to their lives and interests. The Sunday breakfast should be later, the Sunday dinner more leisurely, than on other days, and as a treat the little ones ought to be allowed to sit up longer on Sunday night. If there is a dessert the little ones like very much, than have that on Sunday, and if ever candy is allowed, let Sunday afternoon be the time for it. In homes where the mother can play and sing, the children should have their hour of song on Sunday—an hour to remember in other years and in later life.

Gas Well, Now an Oil Well.

The Ft. Wayne Journal speaks of a strange occurrence at Montpelier, a few miles south of there, on May 8, in these words: Probably the most peculiar accident that ever occurred in an oil field was that of the instant changing of a gas well to an oil well, which happened at the McGeath well, one mile south of this city. The well until yesterday was a dry gasser, with no show of oil whatever, and was used to furnish gas to the large lime works and other factories. At 11 o'clock last night an explosion occurred, which was distinctly felt in this city, and by the continuous roar it was soon located at the above named well. On arriving at the well it was found that it was throwing oil and that the regulator house was completely destroyed, the large regulator scattered over the entire field, pieces being found a distance of a quarter of a mile from the well. The workmen succeeded in getting it under control at noon today. It is the opinion of oil men that the well is good for 200 barrels a day.

BUTLER.

The weather, so far in May, has been most beautiful, surpassing any former May in many years.

Much of the corn is planted and potatoes in some places are being cultivated.

J. A. Campbell visited Orland, Flint, Hudson and Ashley last week.

Postmaster Jones still holds the government stamps, with no apparent signs of a successor.

R. G. Campbell and wife visited relatives near Pleasant Lake the first of the week.

Mother DeForest is reported as very seriously ill with meager hopes of her recovery.

Dr. and Mrs. Fanning have returned from their trip to Galveston, Texas, and report having had a very nice time.

It looks as if Randall's Army of tramps is going to give our section a letting alone. Glad are we.

The receivership of the Butler Manufacturing Co. will most likely work to its advantage. The company does not seem to have been a money making concern. We hope Mr. Jones, the receiver, may be able to do better.

Susannah Diehl, the aged widow of Isaac Diehl, died at her residence in Stafford township last week. She was among the first settlers in that township, having lived on the same farm for fifty-one years. She was one among the most noble women of the vicinity and her death will be mourned by many relatives and friends. She was a member of the Evangelical Association and an earnest and faithful church worker nearly all her life.

WATERLOO.
LAST WEEK

The L. M. C. held their meeting May 15, at the home of Mrs. Chloe Kennedy.

Mrs. E. Dickinson and daughter, Harriet, returned home from Angola a few days ago.

Mrs. Winslow has been supplying her table for some time past from her own garden, with lettuce, onions, asparagus and spinach. Who can beat that?

The new bakery is in good running order, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Baker express themselves as being entirely satisfied with their prospects this far.

Mrs. Hall nee Phillips, of Elkhart, has a nice baby boy, born Friday April 29. Mrs. Phillips went to Elkhart in response to a telegram, Tuesday, May first, and returned home the following Monday leaving her daughter and baby doing well.

Mrs. George Derthick has a bad hand and arm, much swollen and very painful, caused by a heavy door falling upon her about two weeks ago, knocking her down and breaking the cap to the third joint of the middle finger to her right hand. The right hand and arm are entirely useless as yet.

Last Tuesday evening being the regular time for electing members of L. M. C., at the meeting at Mrs. Emma Plum's, the following officers were elected: pres., Mrs. Juliette Dickinson; vice pres., Mrs. A. Long; Sec., Mrs. Carrie E. Francis; Treas., Mrs. E. Booser; Critic, Mrs. Florence Waterman; custodian of table talk, Irene A. Smith.

CONCORD.

Bert Casebeer and Jennie Showalter, of Auburn, were driving out this way Monday looking at the farmers' crops.

George Hull moved to Spencerville last Thursday.

Richard Ervin is painting his house, thereby greatly improving its appearance.

C. W. Widney, of St. Joe, was the guest of F. Buchanan Monday.

Sheep shearing is now on the farmer's program.

Mr. and Mrs. Townley, nee Hornberger, of Elkhart, is here visiting her sisters Mrs. Belle Swineford and Mrs. Nanni Kosht.

Mrs. Hattie Benner and Master Harry of Butler, are spending several days with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hutton.

W. L. Blair, of Butler, took dinner with his sister, Mrs. G. W. Draggoo, Saturday.

Will Pence's little boy is reported better.

Grant Keller, of Butler, is visiting Ernest Johnson.

George Smurr, of Mooresville, came down to help his brother Will with his corn.

G. W. Reed drove down from Auburn last Sunday.

Miss Ella Thomas has had her sale a few days ago and has perfected her other business and will shortly leave for an extended visit with her only brother in Wooster, O.

Will Pence and family visited in Garrett over Sunday.

G. W., Alice, Cora and Hattie Draggoo and Laura and Mary Layman were in St. Joe Saturday.

Nora Harris is home from Auburn for a few days.

J. A. Wyatt and Bertha Hennessey drove to Cedarville Sunday.

Metta and Harper Leighty, of St. Joe, visited the family of their uncle, J. B. Gibford, Sunday.

The farmers are busy putting out their crops; the merchants stand drumming on their show cases, watching for a stray penny; the commercial men are riding over the country with an unlitcigar in their mouth, and candidates are more plenty than money.

UNION CHAPEL.

The fine weather we are now having is favorable for the farmers and they are very busy getting in their corn crop.

The social at Luceville was quite a success. The young ladies especially enjoyed seeing the boys empty their pockets of cash.

M[redacted] Hoagland, of Chicago, is still sta[redacted]ith her sister Mrs. G. D. McGo[redacted]

Mr. Silas Franks' house is completed and he now occupies it.

Mother Erehart is quite low at this writing with but little hopes of her recovery.

Mrs. Jennie Wyatt, of Auburn, visited with her parents a few days while Mr. Wyatt went fishing.

The Sunday school convention will be held at Norris Chapel next Saturday, May 19.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Townley, of Elkhart who have been visiting friends for the past ten days, returned to their home Sunday evening.

New York against Hill.

A few days ago the leading democrats of New York had a meeting, and passed resolutions in favor of the Wilson bill, or a stronger one—not a weaker one as Hill, their senator, wants. They agree with Hill only in one thing, and that is in opposing an income tax. The substance of their resolutions is like this:

"Resolved that we should prefer a more consistent and courageous measure of tariff reform than is now pending; but we urge that it be passed to a final vote so that we may be relieved from the extortions and oppressions of the McKinley tariff.

"That while we are opposed to the income tax provisions, we are more opposed to the existing system of tariff taxation, which casts on the working classes nine tenth of the burden of taxation and extorts from them an enormous tribute for the benefit of a few.

"That we desire the income tax clause be stricken out. We deem its retention no excuse for the vote of any democrat against the bill as a whole, and demand that every democratic senator and representative vote for the repeal of the McKinley laws.

"That the defeat of the bill by democratic votes would be disastrous to the nation and an act of the treason to the democratic party."

A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beat those parts until they were sore, to overcome in a measure the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a strange weakness in my back and around my waist, together with an indescribable 'gone' feeling in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, from which, according to their universal conclusion, there is no relief. Once it fastens upon a person, they say, it continues its insidious progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but with no particular benefit, when I saw an advertisement of Dr Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 170 to 137. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recomendation, and it has been as satisfactory in their cases as in mine."—James Kane, La Rue, O.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

THE LIFE OF OUR LORD

RISING OF HIS STAR IN THE EAST.

First of a Series of Sermons by Rev. Henry Johnson, D. D., Delivered at the First Presbyterian Church South Bend Sunday Evening, April 22.

South Bend Tribune.

For we have seen His star it the east and are come to worship Him.—Matthews 2:2.

Palestine occupies a small place on the map of the world, but it has been a great center of influence. It has contributed largely towards the religious education of a race. What Greece was to art and literature, Rome to law and government, Palestine was to religion. Were she a part of the American republic she would rank among the small states of the union. In length she is about 189 miles and in breadth at the north about 20 miles and in the south widening to about 40 miles. And thus she was much smaller than our Indiana. But her position was central and unique for the education of the race. A country gives color to its literature. A book writteny in Englad or France or Germany would reflect its surroundings.

But the land of the Bible must represent all climates and all skies. And so it does. Palestine is the globe in miniature. It has the perpetual snow of the mountain and the summer of the tropics. In the north you may look upon a landscape of ice and snow and in the south you may breathe air of a tropical world. Its mountains and hills and valleys and river and lake and sea and varied climates represent all lands and give color to the world's greatest book. For this reason every one feels at home while reading the Bible. It is not the book of any one land or any one people, but the book of the human race. But studying the life of our Lord the question arises why did He not appear earlier in the world's history? Why did He not stand at the gate of man's first home.

Well, for the reason that the world was not ready for His coming. There must be preparation. The race must realize its need and fail in its solution of the great problem of sin. Not till then would it hail His coming and receive Him as God's remedy for the tragedy of Eden. He came in an age of history with a high state of civilization behind Him. Before He entered our world the Greeks had climbed to a lofty intellectual summit. In fact their golden age of literature anticipated His coming. They were already famous for their work in marble and on canvas, in literature and in architecture. Their brilliant sky and beautiful landscape seemed to stimulate them to do great things in the world of art and philosophy; hence the age of fable was gone and the age of literature and reason had come; the hour was soon to strike His coming. But the Roman empire must have a hand in the preparation; she must build a highway for His approaching chariot. She had realized the dream of ambitious kings and had made the nations one. Her flag waved over a conquered world. Thus, to win her recognition was to have the right of way over the world.

But besides being the age of literature and law and government, it was also the age of peace. The battles had been fought and the soldier was at rest and peace flooded the world. The hour had struck and the Prince of Peace was at hand; but where shall we locate His cradle? What city shall be honored by his birth? The prophet Micah wrote hundreds of years in advance of His coming that Bethlehem was to be the place of His birth. The census of the empire is to be taken and every Jew goes to the city of his ancestors for enrollment. Thus Joseph and Mary came from Galilee to the city of Bethlehem to be enrolled. While they make no display to arrest the attention of the towns through which they pass, yet in their veins flows the blood of kings. They belong to the royal family of David. Upon their arrival the city is crowded and so there was no room for them in the inn.

Hence the manger became the cradle of our Lord. He began life in our world at the lowest round, and thus tonight the lesson that the soul born in the humble cottage is as dear to God as the soul born in the most brilliant palace. It is not the birthplace or cradle that gives honor to the soul, but it is the soul that reflects honor and glory upon the cradle. It is not the place of his birth that adds glory to the name of William Shakespeare, but it is Shakespeare that gives fame to the place of his birth.

But who hailed his coming and to whom was it announced? Angels in the midnight air hailed his birth in the language—"Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will toward men." But what clothes the fact with so much significance is that the announcement was made to humble shepherd guarding their flocks. It was not to the great of Jerusalem but to the toilers of Bethlehem that the sublime revelation of the Savior's birth was given. This was the glad news: "For unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."

That news is more beautiful than the most beautiful music, sweeter than the sweetest song. No sentence ever fell from human lip of such importance to humanity Then to think that it was first announced not to the king in his palace but to the shepherd guarding his flock by night. It was prophetic of what Christ was to be to the toilers of our world. He was to be the Savior and friend of him who pushed the plane in the shop, followed the plow of the field and carried the burdens of earth in summer's heat and winter's storm. To-day, unseen He stands by the side of the toiling millions of the world to cheer them with His sympathy and to give strength to their arm and to impart inspiration to their brain.

But He is equally the friend of the scholar. This is evident from the coming of the wise men from the east. They had seen His star in the brilliant sky and so came to Jerusalem with the words: "Where is He that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen His star in the east and have come to worship." Their coming indicates that the world was expecting Him. The Jews had traveled over the earth with sacred books telling of the promised Messiah. Hence when these scholars of the far east saw the peculiar star in the sky they associated it with His coming. They followed its light until it led them to the cradle of the Christ. Standing in its presence they put their treasures at His feet. They worship the Divine in Him that was to find revelation through His humanity.

But does astronomy tell us anything of the brilliant star? Well, this may be said: Mr. Kepler the astronomer, discovered a strange but beautiful star in 1604. It was seen just a year after the conjunction of the two superior planets, Saturn and Jupiter. It was said to sparkle with the interchange of colors like a diamond. It illumined the sky with its splendor and beauty until 1606 when it waned and disappeared. Well, Mr. Kepler tells us that about the time of our savior's birth there was a similar conjunction of the two superior planets. He ascertained this fact by calculating backwards.

Who knows but what the brilliant star that shone on the sky in 1604 was the star that in the first century of our era led the wise men to the cradle of our Christ? This much we may affirm, that science makes it possible. But the wise men standing at the cradle was a promise that the scholarship of the world would find its way to Christ, our Lord. The greatest of the poets, Shakespeare, Milton and Tennyson, have sung His praise; the greatest among artists, the most renowned among statesmen, and the most brilliant names in science have hailed Him as Lord and Savior.

He is God's light to brighten our world, God's bread to feed our hunger, God's fountain to quench our thirst, and God's salvation for our sin. He is the leaven that is to transform our earth and hence we hail Him as our Lord and Savior.

Nothing in This World

Is so cheap as a newspaper, whether it be measured by the cost of its production or by its value to the consumer. We are talking about an American, metropolitan, daily paper of the first class like THE CHICAGO RECORD. It's so cheap and so good you can't afford in this day of progress to be without it. There are other papers possibly as good, but none better, and none just like it. It prints all the real news of the world—the news you care for—every day, and prints it in the shortest possible space. You can read THE CHICAGO RECORD and do a day's work too. It is an independent paper and gives all political news free from the taint of party bias. In a word—it's a complete, condensed, clean, honest family newspaper, and it has the largest morning circulation in Chicago or the west—125,000 to 140,000 a day.

Prof. J. T. Hatfield of the Northwestern University says: "THE CHICAGO RECORD comes as near being the ideal daily journal as we are for some time likely to find on these mortal shores."

WE keep telling people that republican editors are not well posted that they do not read enough, nor study enough. And now here is another case. The Dispatch in speaking of the republican trickery in the tenth (Hammond) congressional district, speaks of "Judge Johnson of Laporte." But Laporte is in the 13th district, now represented by Conn. We do not suppose republican editors ever will post up on political questions, but we did hope they understood local geography.

A BLOODY BATTLE.

Bandits and Deputy Sheriffs Meet at Yukon.

Guthrie (O. T.) special: News has reached here of a detperate battle between deputy sheriffs and an armed body of bandits at Yukon, a small place just east of Elm Reno, in which two officers, Sam Ferris and James Snider, and one of the outlaws, were fatally wounded, and several residents of the place, who were engaged in the fight, were slightly injured. For several days Yukon has been in a great state of excitement, the peace officers of that town having been warned that a part of the gang of highwaymen who held up a Rock Island Express train at Pond Creek a month or so ago, was in camp near Yukon and evidently contemplated a raid on the town. Every one began to prepare for the attack, and when three heavily armed horsemen rode into town their identity was readily guessed. The men hitched their horses and entered a saloon, whereupen Deputy Sheriff Sam Ferris, who had been watching their movements, attempted to turn their animals loose. The bandits soon reappeared and opened fire on Ferris, all three bullets entering his body, mortally wounding him. Deputy Sheriff Snider sent a ball into the head of one of the outlaws, but he drew the fire of the other two men and received a wound in the chest from which he cannot recover. The shooting had by this time attracted a small crowd and as the bandits mounted their horses and rode away they were followed by a volley from a score of weapons.

Coxey, Browne, and Jones Sentenced.

Coxey, Browne, and Jones were sentenced by Judge Miller in the Washington Police Court, to twenty days in jail for violating the statutes of the United States prohibiting the display of partisan banners in the capitol grounds, and Coxey and Browne were fined $5 each additional for trespassing on the grass, the alternative being another ten days in jail. Jones was acquitted on the last charge.

Coxey, Browne, and Jones, with handcuffs on their wrists were placed in the "Black Maria" with a dozen white and negro prisoners who were not handcuffed as companions, and the van immediately conveyed them to the jail. Coxey did not relish free transportation on such a basis, and when he was told that he was to be taken to the District prison he asked to be allowed to go in a carriage, but his request was not granted, and he and his companions were compelled to ride the same as other prisoners. A score of policemen patrolled the sidewalks adjacent to the court house after the sentence was given, and prevented the curious from assembling thereabout.

After the Reporters.

Chicago special: The special Grand Jury, investigating alleged election frauds, has taken steps to prevent the publication of secret jury room proceedings. A formal complaint, charging unknown parties with having divulged secrets, was made by one of the grand jurors, and on that complaint the city editors of the Evening Post and Tribune, and the reporters of these papers, who had been assigned to report the Grand Jury were summoned as witnesses. This action will raise for the first time in this county, the question whether communications made the press are privileged.

Another Flood at Johnstown.

Tuesday Johnstown, Pa., was visited by the most disastrous flood since the big flood of May 31, 1889. At present it is a hard matter to estimate the loss, but it is an assured fact that the damage done in the city and within five miles of it will amount to from $60,000 to $80,000. The Pennsylvania Railroad is the heaviest loser: most of its loss is the result of a bad washout on its tracks above Conemaugh. Two lives were lost.

Steamboat Burns.

Camden (N. J.) special: The steamboat, New York, which was lying at the ship yards of Foreys & Mathews, was completely destroyed by fire. The New York formerly ran between Boston, St. John, and Halifax, and was bought and brought here to run to the fishing banks off the Delaware capes.

Three Men Injured.

Chicago special: Passenger train No. 3, on the Grand Trunk, coming into the city smashed into an empty freight car at Fifty-eighth street. Four coaches filled with passengers were derailed and two freight cars badly wrecked. Three men were injured.

Industrials Sentenced.

At Salt Lake, Utah, Judge Merritt sentenced twenty-eight industrials to three days imprisonment in the penitentiary on the charge of having stolen a Union Pacific engine in Echo Canyon, near Ogden. The men all pleaded guilty.

Pottsville Threatened.

A special says that the Tumbling Rud Reservoir above Pottsville, Pa., was giving way, and that the people of Pottsville and along the valley had been warned to get out of the way.

Effect of Dime Novels.

At Indianapolis, Claude Sanders, a boy, was arrested for shooting Willie Taylor. Both were dime novel readers. "I am Deadwood Dick, the avenger!" exclaimed Sanders, pointing a pistol at Taylor. "Well, what if you are?" replied the latter. "I am Buffalo Bill and I ain't afraid of you. Blaze away!" Sanders did blaze away and the bullet entered Taylor's brain, just above the eye. He lived but a few hours.

Dun & Co.'s Review of Trade.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review says: Obstacles to improvement do not lessen. The strikes of coal miners and coke workers have not ceased, but have caused the stoppage of numerous works and embarrassment to some railroads. The conference at Cleveland exhibited much angry feeling and wider differences than were expected, and seems to render agreement more distant. Proceedings in the Senate do not indicate that the latest form of tariff revision has made speedy final action more probable. Yet the recuperative force of the country is so great that observers are constantly amazed at the volume of business being transacted, tonnage transported, number of works resuming operations, and the general soundness of trade, notwithstanding influences which in any other land would produce dire disaster.

FIERCE STORM.

Fearful Havoc in the Northwest.

St. Paul special: Half a million dollars will scarceful cover the damage done by the great storm of Friday in Minnesota and Western Wisconsin. The down-pour of rain was the greatest ever known in this section of the Northwest and in many places was as destructive as a water-spout. The damage is greatest along the River St. Croix, Kaugalle, and Chippewa rivers, where the rise in the water was so rapid that bridges could not resist it and dozens of them were washed away. In several places also, dams were washed out and the swift flowing flood did large damage to business property.

The death list so far includes five, one being killed by lightning near Anoka, Minn., and another near New Richmond, Wis. A woman and two children were drowned in the Kaugalle River near Spring Valley, Wis. Railway traffic is in a state of paralysis, because of lost bridges and washouts in the tracks. Reports from the farming districts indicate that the loss to farmers will be very large. On rolling land the rainfall was so heavy as to wash out the tender young wheat and oat plants. Hundreds of acres of grain are reported ruined in Goodhue, Washington, Pine, and Benton Counties. The potato planters of Chicago County also report serious loss.

SEVEN DEAD.

The Result of a Railroad Collision in Kentucky.

Princeton (Ky.) special: Probably the worst wreck which the C. & O. S. W. Railroad has had for years occurred at Standing Rock Tunnel, ten miles east of here. Extra freight train No. 602, under charge of Conductor Kinkle, ran into the rear of the work train, which was grading near Dawson, under charge of Conductor Hill, midway of the tunnel, and Conductor Hill and six gravel men named Whitehead, Duncan, Butler, Condrey, Bowen, and Crisp were killed outright and several slightly injured.

Engineer Jones of the extra freight, saw the danger first in time to jump and save his life. The engine and ten or twelve cars are piled up in the tunnel for a space of fifty feet. An ambulance train, with Surgeon Miller aboard and several local doctors, was quickly made up and sent to the scene of the wreck. Seven bodies were taken out and are now here at an undertaking establishment waiting for orders from friends.

The cause of the wreck was due to either the carelessness of the flagman of the work train or to Conductor Hill, who was killed.

KELLY'S ARMY

Makes a Fierce Attack On an Iowa Town.

Eldon (Iowa) special: Kelly has left here for Keosauqua. General Kelly and his men were ordered not to land in this city, but to go to the camp provided for them two miles below. Kelly told the men to land in the city. They were prevented from doing so and went into camp at the place designated. Next morning a number of boats attempted to land near here. They were met by the officers and the men requested to not land. With other provocation the whole army came across the river armed with stones, clubs and revolvers. They surrounded and disarmed the officers, stole their weapons and yelled, "kill them, drown them." Kellyites struck Charles Martin, a citizen, on the temple, rendering him insensible. George Miller, another citizen, was struck with an ax, his jaw was broken and he was injured about the heart. Both men are in a critical condition. Finally the sheriff arrived with reinforcements, and Kelly drew his army off, and they floated down the stream.

Strikers Discouraged.

Pullman, Ill., contains 2,500 discouraged strikers. A large number of painters who have been employed at the works and joined the American Railroad Union have become deserters and are now seeking work in Chicago. Many of them have met with success and will probably leave Pullman permanently, and the union to which the painters belonged has appreciably lessened in size.

The defection of the painters, the failure of the brickmakers' strike and the shaky condition of the strikers' finances, have cast considerable gloom over the men, and where there was an almost invincible feeling of confidence there is now to be found questioning hope and faltering faith in the ultimate result of the fight.

Close Call for Akron.

The business portion of Akron, Ohio, was threatened with destruction by fire, and had it not been for the heavy rains the past few days many blocks of business houses would have been destroyed. Fire started from an unknown cause in the immense planing mill plant of Weary, Snyder & Wilcox, and the large livery stables of Charles Dietz and Edward Indsande was burned. The buildings were of frame in the heart of the city. Besides the brick block of B. F. Crumrine and the brick warehouse of Herrick & Son, were destroyed and several other large business blocks were badly damaged. Loss, $110,000; insurance, unknown.

No More Dollar Stamps.

Postmaster General Bissell says that he does not propose to order another issue of the dollar series of Columbian stamps in order to break the alleged corner of the series by stamp dealers. Every one of the dollar Columbian stamps, it is said, has been bought for speculation by the dealers, and it has been intimated that the only way to prevent the corner was by another issue. The Postmaster General, however, will not take this action, as he believes the public generally who wanted the stamds should have taken advantage of the opportunity of getting them while they were placed on sale by the Department.

Highwayman Killed.

Two masked men made an attempt to hold up the Murphy stage, thirteen miles above Milton, Cal., and one was instantly killed by Messenger Hendricks, who was on the seat. Hendricks fired upon the highwaymen immediately after they stopped the stage. The second robber returned the fire and seriously wounded Miss Ella Bray, a young lady passenger from Stockton, and T. T. Hume from Murphy's, another passenger. The dead robber and his comrade were left by the roadside. A posse has started from Milton after the surviving highwayman.

A Shocking Accident.

Victor Mygrants, aged 11 years, a son of the Rev. Mygrants, pastor of the Evangelical Church in Kendallville, Ind., met with a distressing accident on the Lake Shore tracks. He had been out at work in the celery or onion gardens. He had finished his work for the day and, with some other boys, had started home along the railroad tracks. It is not positively known, but it is presumed, that he attempted to jump on a moving west-bound freight train and, missing his hold, fell under the cars. The right leg is crushed above the knee and shockingly mangled, and there are other bruises about his head and body.

Ghastly Find.

The workmen at the State Fair grounds, Springfield Ill., while excavating for the Exposition building, unearthed the remains of thirty-two human bodies. For a long time the burying grounds of Springfield were just west of the old fair grounds, and just where the Exposition building is to be built. There is nothing left of them except a few fragments of bones. A silk necktie and a smooth coin—a French piece with the inscription, "Carolus III, 1793"—were found. Some of the bodies are supposed to have been buried for forty years.

Smuggled Tobacco Seized.

Special agents of the Treasury Department have discovered an extensive and ingeniously conducted conspiracy to smuggle Sumatra tobacco from Canada to the United States. The tobacco is packed in ordinary trunks. It is smuggled by boat and wagon over the line and is then sent by express to New York city without attracting suspicion. A trunk shipped from Rouse's Point and addressed to S. Kohl, 184 Water street, was traced and seized as it was about to be received by employes of the tobacco house of Joseph Hirsch.

Northern Indiana Editors.

At a meeting of the executive committee held at Plymouth, it was decided to hold the next annual meeting of the Northern Indiana Editorial Association at Spring Fountain Park, Warsaw, on June 14. J. B. Stall, of the South Bend Times; J. B. Conlogue, of the Kendallville Sun; Gen. Reub Williams, of the Warsaw Times; Dan McDonald, of the Plymouth Democrat, and J. S. Sutton, of the Logansport Reporter, were chosen as delegates to the coming national convention at Asbury Park, July 2.

Behind Closed Doors.

The special committee to investigate the charges of bribery in the United States Senate held a meeting for the purpose of preliminary organization and to take steps as to the summoning of witnesses, the employment of stenographer and clerk. The investigation will be conducted behind closed doors. The Chairman is to be authorized from day to day to give out for publication the purport of the testimony.

Died From Fear.

Martha Brunks, aged 23, died at her home near the village of Pleasanton, Ohio, as the result of nervous prostration, superinduced by apprehension of an attack of hydrophobia, she having been bitten on the ankle several weeks since by a dog which she wrongly imagined was mad.

David B. Hill Has a Bill.

A Washington special says that Senator Hill has been for the past week at work on an entirely new bill to be substituted for the so-called Senate compromise tariff bill. He will boldly demand its acceptance and his attitude is the latest sensation.

A Tot's Fatal Fall.

Maud, the 4-year-old daughter of Elihu Wilhelm, a farmer residing near New Baltimore, Ohio, lost her balance while leaning out of a bedroom window in the second story of the house and fell and sustained injuries which resulted in her death.

Two Were Killed.

A storm near Waxahatchie, Texas, destroyed the house of a farmer named Merryman, killing him and his wife, and badly injuring their three children and two young men stopping there.

Miss Moody Married.

At East Northfield, Mass., in the new Congregational Church, Miss Emma Reynolds Moody, daughter of Evangelist Moody, was married to Arthur Percy Fitt of Chicago.

Scotch Coal for America.

In consequence of the coal strikes in the United States, several Scotch coal owners in London have been asked to tender a number of ship loads of coal for New York.

Buggy Factory Burned.

The large buggy factory of Stutz & Walker and the business plant of E. W. Walker & Co., at Goshen, Ind., burned. The loss is $50,000, with small insurance.

After the Guillotine.

A dispatch from Paris says the police have discovered a plot to explode a bomb in the building in which the guillotine is stored.

Child Murderer Lynched.

Henry Scott, colored, was lynched at Jefferson, Texas, for the murder of his 6-year-old stepdaughter.

Drank Gasoline.

At Anderson, Ind., Marie Worley drank gasoline by mistake. Her condition is very serious.

DIE IN THE WAVES.

Day of Untold Horrors on the Great Lakes.

MANY SHIPS GO DOWN

Men Drown in Sight of Thousands of People.

Terrible Disaster Wrought by the Tremendous Storm—Human Lives Lost and Fourteen Vessels Reported Wrecked at Various Points—Greatest Hurricane in Many Years Sweeps Lake Michigan—Shipping Tossed About—Crops in the Northwest Injured.

Drowned like rats in a cellar. Drowned while a great city looked on and wrung her hands in an agony of helplessness. Drowned even as their bleeding hands reached up from the waters and clutched the cruel sea wall. Drowned before the eyes of 100,000 people massed along the shore and housetops. Drowned because the imperial city of the lakes has a life-saving service that would be unworthy of a seacoast village. Eleven lives lost and half a score of vessels wrecked as a result of gross negligence. This is the record Chicago had to face the morning after the storm.

Sweeping down from the north across the lake with terrific force, the hurricane hurled itself upon Chicago, destroying life and strewing the shore with wrecks. Ten men met death in the lake and nine lumber schooners went down in the path of the storm. From daybreak to nightfall there was nothing but death and disaster, misery and suffering.

Beginning on Thursday evening with a capful of wind, the storm increased in strength and finally swept with all the fury of a hurricane on the struggling shipping caught on the boiling waters of the lake. All day long the storm raged, says a dispatch, and it was not until late at night that the wind dropped sufficiently to allow the distressed schooners to enter the harbor. From Glencoe to South Chicago the shore was strewn with wreckage. Twelve fishermen were rescued by a volunteer life-saving crew from the government pier. The same crew rescued seven persons from the bumboat at the north pier. Tugs assisted in snatching sailors from sinking vessels. Others were dragged ashore as they floated in on spars or in the shattered hulks of their own vessels. Nearly 100 persons were in imminent peril of their lives, yet all but ten were saved.

With the lee shore so near, there was little chance for the vessels caught in the storm to run before the wind. The only thing they could do was to reach the port for shelter. Many vessels failed to do so and the loss resulting from the storm is calculated to amount to several hundred thousand dollars.

Fury of the Gale.

Like a wild beast howling for its prey, the north wind arose and swept across the lake with a fury that knew no bounds. It caught the waves in its mighty grasp, hurling them high into space and lashing them into foam that made the air white, as if a sheet of snow had been dropped from the clouds. The heavy rack above fled swiftly before the hurricane, as if a mighty hand had pushed aside the plaything of an hour. Leaping madly, like giants in anger, the tremendous waves came on, wrestling with each other and dashing their sheets of foam upward. Leaping, roaring, tumbling, surging, the seething waves went on their course, climbing over each other as if they were flying before the hurricane. Three miles out, opposite the lake front, a long line of gigantic waves rushed along in a solid mass, with a great, white sheet of foam crowning them. Boreas blew upon them and caught the sheet, scattering the glistening, watery crystals in the air, the force of the shower almost beating the waves into submission. But the waves behind impelled the waves before: the advancing ridges swelled in all their strength, like hoary, white-haired monsters, and with a tremendous crash beat themselves against the breakwater. The pier stood bravely, and Boreas was foiled. Over leaped the waves, licking the tops of the breakwater as if eager to bury it forever. Floods of water dashed over the structure like cataracts.

Inside the breakwater everything seemed quiet and peaceful, but there was a dangerous swell, the water moving up and down like a sail bellying under a strong wind. Outside the breakwater, where the shore was virtually unprotected, the waves spent their fury and fled back only to gain fresh strength to hurl themselves later at the same spot. All along the lake shore, from Racine to South Chicago, there was a thick white line, growling, roaring, hissing and spluttering, as if it was the overflow of a huge caldron of boiling water. Waves pounded the beach with the force of steam hammers, washing away portions of the shore.

As the storm increased in fury the tug captains found it difficult to bring their boats into the harbor, the most powerful tugs in the Chicago fleet were unable to breast the storm and bring their tows into the river. The north breakwater, however, afforded some protection for the schooners, and the boats anchored in a long line off the city.

Then the storm became so violent that the tugs were barely able to live in the sea alone, and the situation became serious for the anchored fleet. The anchors lost their hold on the bottom, and many of the boats settled steadily toward the shore. In a vain effort to better the situation some of the captains made a little sail and tried to make the harbor, but they were driven through the anchored fleet, crashing into other vessels, carrying away spars, rigging, and smashing large holes in the other boats. One schooner, the Myrtle, whose captain had tried to sail out of his bad position, had all its spars and rigging carried away and was finally sunk with all on board. Another boat, the schooner Jack Thompson, crashed into the Rainbow, causing the latter to capsize, and being finally driven on the beach herself. The Evening Star, having dragged her anchors, went ashore with the Thompson.

How Six Brave Men Died.

The sinking of the Myrtle was the most terrible event of the long afternoon of horrors. Before the eyes of 10,000 men and women that lined the lake shore from Thirty-sixth to Thirty-eighth streets this craft went down, carrying six men with her. For an hour the crowds on the railroad tracks in Groveland Park and on the neighboring housetops watched the waves steadily carrying the boat toward shore. No help came. Men ran wildly back and forth in a vain effort to find assistance. When 400 yards south of the Government pier the Myrtle grounded and her anchor cables became taut. Two minutes later a wave that lifted her ten feet into the air tore the anchors loose, the wind caught the tattered foresail, it bellied to the gust, and the Myrtle was fairly heaved out of the water. The six men on board waved their hands frantically.

Suddenly their signals ceased, and they huddled together around the broken mainmast. An old woman knelt on the tracks in front of Thirty-sixth street station, and prayed in a shrill, penetrating voice that silenced for an instant the curses of the frantic men about her. An instant later an

CLINGING TO THE WRECKED SCHOONER RAINBOW.

Illinois Central engine crept down the tracks from the south pushing a flat car. On the car was a brass mortar charged and ready for action. The crowd drew a long sigh of relief, and cheered the life-saving crew lustily. The engine stopped, but no attempt was made to fire a line from the mortar to the doomed Myrtle, now less than 300 feet from shore. The life savers left the car and ran to the shore with lines. They ran aimlessly back and forth. One or two mighty waves tossed the Myrtle against the breakwater. Twice she bounded back like a toy boat. It was after the second of these rebounds that the six men on board jumped to the water. A wave swept the craft over them. It filled and settled slowly.

Before the eyes of 10,000 people men and boat sank out of sight. The men were seen no more.

Crowds Saw Seamen Drown.

The news that lives were being lost, that ships were being tossed about like chips, that the harbor was filled with wreckage, and that human beings were clinging to the masts of their disabled vessels spread through Chicago like a flash. In less than an hour from the time the report was sent to the offices of the newspapers the lake shore from Lincoln Park to South Chicago was lined with sight-seers, old and young. All braved the terrific gale, which blew them about like feathers, in their eagerness to catch a glimpse of some sinking ship or the figure of an unfortunate seaman hanging limp and almost lifeless to the rigging of his boat.

Field glasses and telescopes were brought into requisition and whenever one was found it owner was surrounded by a crowd. Ever and anon a groan would escape the sympathetic gathering. "Oh, why don't more men go out to those poor fellows," was what almost every woman said as she heard some especially awful news.

It was estimated that at one time not less than 100,000 persons were lined along the lake shore from north to south. The Randolph street viaduct was a magnificent vantage ground, as it overlooked the center of the inner harbor. It was almost impossible for the pedestrian to make his way. Hats by the dozen were blown far out into the harbor, but undaunted the women folk as well as men remained chained to the awful scene.

FURY OF THE GALE ELSEWHERE.

Six Persons Go Down with a Schooner in Milwaukee Harbor.

Milwaukee, Wis.—On the beach of Jones' Island, just south of the mouth of the river and in the harbor of the port of Milwaukee, is a big and stanch schooner, high and dry, and out in twenty feet of water, with her masts standing straight up, with close-reefed spars, is another vessel. In the rigging of the foundered schooner is a dead woman lashed to the halyards, and up above, on the cross-trees, is an unconscious sailor, who will be dead before morning. Of their late companions four are dead and one alone survives. This is the story of a May day, a May day such as was never before known in the history of this city. It was a day with a raging gale that played a varied accompaniment of rain, sleet, snow and hail.

Oshkosh. — Wednesday the thermometer registered 90 degrees in this city. Thursday morning it was 33 and enough snow had fallen during the night to whiten the ground. It was the severest cold wave the city has experienced in years and caused great discomfort.

Sheboygan.—Decorations of the recent Catholic meeting were blown down to-day, and the arches across the streets nearly fell. On the lake a tremendous sea was running. In the city many more accidents were reported.

Kewaunee.—A heavy downpour of rain ended in a stowstorm, which continued for several hours.

Racine.—Trees were blown down and fences and outbuildings suffered considerably.

Kenosha.—Trees and signs were blown down and cellars flooded.

Clinton Junction.—Snow fell for six hours.

Hail and Rain in Illinois.

Rockford.—The thermometer dropped from 96 degrees at noon Thursday. From the hottest May day known in twenty years it fell nearly to the point of frost. Flurries of snow fell.

Springfield.—A veritable blizzard struck this city. The thermometer, which registered 86 degrees, fell to 40 degrees in sixteen hours.

Washburn.—The hail was exceptionally large and damaged the growing crops considerably.

Tuscola.—Farmers are alarmed for the safety of their crops.

Marshall.—Considerable damage was done to growing crops.

Effingham.—Great fears are felt for the crops and fruit.

Bloomington.—A change of 50 degrees in the temperature took place here in less than twenty-four hours.

Wind in Michigan.

Hillsdale.—The hailstorm took in a strip about two and a half miles wide, and there is scarcely a pane of glass left in the houses in its course. Much damage was done to crops.

Traverse City.—The severest storm in the memory of the oldest inhabitant raged here. Icy sleet and rain caused suspension of outdoor labor and much damage was done.

Grand Rapids.—A lively flurry of snow fell and the thermometer registered 36. At Cadillac five inches of snow fell and the temperature was 32.

Elk Rapids.—The schooner Mineral State, loaded with pig iron, was scuttled alongside of the pier in order to prevent her from pounding to pieces.

Cyclone in the Hoosier State.

Laporte.—Henry Spirgel's barn was demolished and the owner, who was standing therein, was killed. At Wellsboro a freight car was blown across the main track of the Baltimore and Ohio Road in front of an incoming milk train and a bad wreck resulted.

Peru.—Reports from the country show great destruction. South of this city a large brick schoolhouse and five barns were leveled. In this city a large flouring mill was unroofed and trees and smaller buildings were damaged.

Muncie.—The storm blew the roof from the warehouse at the Port Glass Works and badly demolished a large tent that was occupied by some of the hands at work building machines for the Whitely Reaper Company, whose factory was recently destroyed by fire.

Valparaiso.—Two young women were prostrated by lightning.

Ohio Feels the Storm.

Norwalk.—Several cows were killed while standing under a cherry tree. In the north part of the city much damage was done to fruit trees by the hail. At Chicago Junction the school building, containing 400 scholars, was struck by lightning. One teacher and several scholars were hurt by falling timbers.

Montpelier.—The cyclone near here did more damage than was at first reported. Little Martha Daso, who was injured, is dead. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Moore, who were hurt, have little chance of recovery. Another who may be numbered among the victims is Mrs. George Mercer, and possibly her 3 months old babe. At Pleasant Lake the cyclone swooped down and caught up two pleasure boats, together with immense quantities of water, and dropped the same in the town, one boat landing on the roof of a hotel.

THE NATION'S SOLONS

SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our National Law-Makers and What They Are Doing for the Good of the Country—Various Measures Proposed, Discussed and Acted Upon.

Doings of Congress.

Monday the Senate made but little progress in the tariff bill discussion. In the House several unimportant bills were passed. The only important one gave the Washington, Alexandria and Mount Vernon Electric Railway Company an entrance into Washington. When the District of Columbia bill was taken up the even tenor of business was interrupted by a negro in the center of the gallery arising in his place and shouting: "Mr. Speaker of the House of Representatives." Instantly the House was in confusion, and all eyes were turned upon the new orator in the gallery. The Speaker, who was the first to regain his composure, directed the doorkeeper to remove the man. He was of powerful physique, however, and the doorkeeper was unable to oust him for some time, the negro endeavoring to deliver his alleged divinely inspired message to the effect that the Lord had commanded him to come to the Speaker of the House and order him to pass the Coxey bill. Other portions of his message referred to the Capitol, the White House and the Treasury, but the exact purport was not learned in the confusion. The interloper was finally ejected and business resumed. The resignation of Representative Barnes Compton, of Maryland, was laid before the House, after which a bill was passed authorizing the Braddock and Homestead Bridge Company to build a bridge over the Monongahela River at Homestead, Pa. At 4:08 the House adjourned.

Consideration of the tariff bill was resumed in the Senate Tuesday after several bills of minor importance had been passed and a resolution, introduced by Mr. Allen, calling for information as to the number and class of persons unemployed in protected industries, had been discussed and laid over. Three items in the chemical schedule were passed and that Mr. Aldrich broke in with an amendment to place a duty of 15 per cent. on coal tar products, which was defeated. Among the bills presented in the House was one from the committee on labor, reported by Mr. McGeen, making Labor Day a holiday. It was placed on the calendar. The naval appropriation bill was then taken up. The paragraph authorizing the secretary of the navy to use $450,000, appropriated by the act of March 2, 1889, for the construction, armament and equipment of three torpedo boats to cost not more than $450,000, was adopted, and the bill was then passed. The House then went into committee of the whole and the agricultural appropriation bill was taken up. No amendments had been made in the bill when, at 5:05 o'clock, the committee rose and the House adjourned.

The Senate occupied its time Wednesday in considering tariff bill amendments. The House passed the bill for the validation of affidavits made before United States commissioners in all land entries. Mr. Marsh, of Illinois, severely denounced the practice of the Agricultural Department of collecting and publishing statistics of crops, upon which speculators were enabled to manipulate the grain and cotton markets. His amendment to strike out the paragraph providing for the publication of monthly crop reports was defeated. Mr. Wilson, of Washington, offered an amendment appropriating $800 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue experiments in the production of hemp and flax in the State of Washington. Agreed to. Mr. Coffeen offered an amendment, which was adopted, including the sheep scab, pleuro-pneumonia, tuberculosis and other diseases of animals, which the secretary is authorized to investigate. Mr. Hainer proposed an amendment directing the president to enter into correspondence with the authorities of Great Britain for the abrogation or modification of the law which requires cattle imported into Great Britain from this country to be slaughtered at the port of entry, and prevents them from being carried to other parts of the kingdom. Agreed to. Mr. Pickler offered an amendment increasing the appropriation for the purchase, propagation, and distribution of seed from $130,000 to $160,000. Agreed to. An amendment was agreed to providing that after May 1 the Secretary of Agriculture shall distribute all the seeds on hand, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress, and who have not before, during the same season, been supplied by the department.

The Senate again wasted a day, Thursday, in a bootless fight over tariff bill amendments. Among the bills favorably reported in the House was one by Mr. Chickering, of New York, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, to inquire into the feasibility of constructing a ship canal from the Hudson River to the great lakes. Concerning the agricultural appropriation bill Representative Herman offered an amendment raising the appropriation for irrigation investigations from $8,000 to $25,000. It was defeated. An amendment was adopted authorizing the Secretary of the Agriculture to investigate the nutritive value of food products; also an amendment providing for the introduction of ramie, a Chinese plant resembling silk; also an amendment providing that persons who should knowingly publish a false weather forecast or warnings should be fined not to exceed $500 or imprisonment not exceeding ninety days or both. An amendment was also adopted authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to inquire as to the feasibility of displaying weather signals from postal cars. At 5 o'clock the consideration of the bill was concluded and, the committee of the whole having risen, the bill was favorably reported to the House, and the previous question being ordered the bill was passed in spite of Mr. Marsh's efforts to recommit.

The Senate Friday decided to inaugurate longer hours, commencing Monday, and then settled down to real work on the tariff schedule, disposing of eleven pages—more progress than has been made in three weeks. The House found a filibuster on its hands, caused by a motion to consider appropriation bills running counter to private bills. The legislative, judicial and executive appropriation bills were taken up, after an agreement to close general debate at 5 o'clock, and to adjourn over Saturday, was reached. But little progress was made in real work. Mr. Boatner, of Louisiana, gave notice that he would offer an amendment to deduct pay of members for all time they were absent without leave, except in case of sickness. Adjournment was taken until Monday.

UNITED AT LAST

BY

CHAPTER VIII—Continued.

He left the house when Constance went out for her daily drive in the park, and strolled in the same direction, caring very little where he went upon this particular afternoon. The Lady's Mile was thronged with carriages, and there was a block at the corner when Gilbert took his place listlessly among the loungers who were lolling over the rails. He nodded to the men he knew, and answered briefly enough to some friendly inquiries about his luck in Yorkshire.

"The filly ran well enough," he said, "but I doubt if she's got stay enough for the Chester."

"Oh, of course you want to keep her dark, Sinclair. I heard she was a flier, though."

Mr. Sinclair did not pursue the conversation. The carriages moved on for a few paces, at the instigation of a pompous mounted policeman, and then stopped again, leaving a quite little brougham exactly in front of Gilbert Sinclair. The occupant of the brougham was Mrs. Walsingham. The stoppage brought her so close to Gilbert that it was impossible to avoid some kind of greeting. The widow's handsome face paled as she recognized Gilbert. It was the first time they had met since that unpleasant interview in Half-Moon street. The opportunity was very gratifying to Mrs. Walsingham. She had most ardently desired to see how Gilbert supported his new position, to see for herself how far Mr. Wyatt's account of him might be credited. She put on the propitiatory manner of a woman who has forgiven all past wrongs.

"Why do you never come to see me?" she asked.

"I scarcely thought you would care to receive me, after what you said when we last met," he replied, rather embarrassed by her easy way of treating the situation.

"Let that be forgotten. It is not fair to remember what a woman says when she is in a passion. I think you expressed a wish that we might be friends after your marriage, and I was too angry to accept that proof of your regard as I should have done. I have grown wiser with the passage of time, and, believe me, I am still your friend."

There was a softness in her tone which flattered and touched Gilbert Sinclair. It contrasted so sharply with the cool contempt he had of late suffered at the hands of his wife. He remembered how this woman had loved him; and he asked himself what good he had gained by his marriage with Constance Clanyarde, except the empty triumph of an alliance with a family of superior rank to his own, and the vain delight of marrying an acknowledged beauty.

Before Mrs. Walsingham's brougham had moved on, he had promised to look in upon her that evening, and at 10 o'clock he was seated in the familiar drawing-room, telling her his domestic wrongs, and freely confessing that his marriage had been a failure. Little by little she beguiled him into telling her these things, and played her part of adviser and consoler with exquisite tact, not once allowing him to perceive the pleasure his confession afforded her. He spoke of his child without the faintest expression of affection, and laughed bitterly as he described his wife's devotion to her infant.

"I thought as a woman of fashion she would have given herself very little trouble about the baby," he said, "but she continues to find time for maternal rapture in spite of her incessant visiting. I have told her that she is killing herself, and the doctors tell her pretty much the same; but she will have her own way."

"She would suffer frightfully if the child were to die," said Mrs. Walsingham.

"Suffer! Yes, I was thinking of that this afternoon when she was engaged in her baby worship. She would take my death coolly enough, I have no doubt; but I believe the loss of that child would kill her."

Long after Gilbert Sinclair had left her that night Clara Walsingham sat brooding over all that he had told her upon the subject of his domestic life.

"And so he has found out what it is to have a wife who does not care for him," she said to herself. "He has gratified his fancy for a lovely face, and is paying a heavy price for his conquest. And I am to leave all my hopes of revenge to James Wyatt, and am to reward his services by marrying him. No, no, Mr. Wyatt; it was all very well to promise that in the day of my despair. I see my way to something better than that now. The loss of her child would kill her, would it? And her death would bring Gilbert back to me, I think. His loveless marriage has taught him the value of a woman's affection."

CHAPTER IX.

THE BEGINNING OF SORROW.

Sir Cyprian did not again call at the house in Park Lane. He had heard of Constance Clanyarde's marriage during his African travels, and had come back to England resolved to avoid her as far as it was possible for him to do so. Time and absence had done little to lessen his love, but he resigned himself to her marriage with another as an inevitable fact, only regretting she had married a man of whom he had by no means an exalted opinion. James Wyatt was one of the first persons he visited on his arrival in London, and from him he heard a very unsatisfactory account of the marriage. It was this that had induced him to break through his resolution and call in Park Lane. He wanted to see for himself whether Constance was obviously unhappy. He saw little, however, to enlighten him on this point. He found the girl he had so fondly loved transformed into a perfect woman of the world; and he could draw no inference from her careless gayety of manner except that James Wyatt had said more than was justified by the circumstances of the case.

Instead of returning to Davenant for the autumn months, Mr. Sinclair chose this year to go to Germany, an extraordinary sacrifice of inclination, one might suppose, as his chief delight was to be found at English race meetings, and in the supervision of his stable at Newmarket.

Mrs. Sinclair's doctor had recommended change of some kind as a cure for a certain lowness of tone and general derangement of the nervous system under which his patient labored. The medical man suggested Harrowgate or Buxton, or some Welsh water-drinking place; but when Gilbert proposed Schoenesthal in the Black Forest, he caught at the idea.

"Nothing would be better for Mrs. Sinclair and the baby," he said, "and you'll be near Baden-Baden if you want gayety."

"I don't care for brass bands and a lot of people," answered Gilbert; "I can shoot capercailzies. I shall get on well enough for a month or so."

Constance had no objection to offer to this plan. She cared very little where her life was spent, so long as she had her child with her. A charming villa had been found half hidden among pine trees, and here Mr. Sinclair established his wife, with a mixed household of English and foreign servants. She was very glad to be so completely withdrawn from the obligations of society, and to be able to devote herself almost entirely to the little girl, who was, of course, a paragon of infantine grace and intelligence in the eyes of mother and nurse. The nurse was a young woman belonging to the village near Marshbrook, one of the pupils of the Sunday school, whom Constance had known from childhood. The nurse-maid who shared her duties in London had not been brought to Schoenesthal, but in her place Mrs. Sinclair engaged a French girl, with sharp dark eyes and a very intelligent manner. Martha Briggs, the nurse, was rather more renowned for honesty and good temper than for intellectual qualifications, and she seemed unusually slow and stolid in comparison with the vivacious French girl. This girl had come to Baden with a Parisian family, and had been dismissed with an excellent character upon the family's departure for Vienna with a reduced staff. Her name was Melanie Duport, and she contrived very rapidly to ingratiate herself with her mistress, as she had done with the good priest of the little church she had attended during her residence at Baden, who was delighted with her artless fervor and unvarying piety. Poor Martha Briggs was rather inclined to be jealous of this new rival in her mistress' favor, and derived considerable comfort from the fact that the baby did not take to Melanie.

If the baby preferred her English nurse to Melanie, the little French girl, for her part, seemed passionately devoted to the baby. She was always eager to carry the child when the two nurses were out together, and resented Martha's determination to deprive her of this pleasure. One day when the two were disputing together upon this subject, Martha bawling at the French girl under the peculiar idea that she would make herself understood if she only talked loud enough, Melanie repeating her few words of broken English with many emphatic shrugs and frowns and nods, a lady stopped to listen to them and admire the baby. She spoke in French to Melanie, and did not address Martha at all, much to the young person's indignation. She asked Melanie to whom the child belonged, and how long she had been with it, and whether she was accustomed to nursing children, adding, with a smile, that she looked rather too lady-like for a nurse-maid.

Melanie was quite subdued by this compliment. She told the lady that this was the first time she had been nurse-maid. She had been lady's-maid in her last situation, and had preferred the place very much to her present position. She told this strange lady nothing about that rapturous affection for the baby which she was in the habit of expressing in Mrs. Sinclair's presence. She only told her how uncomfortable she had been made by the English nurse's jealousy.

"I am staying at the Hotel du Roi," said the lady, after talking to Melanie for some little time, "and should like to see you if you can find time to call upon me some evening. I might be able to be of some use to you in finding a new situation when your present mistress leaves the neighborhood."

Melanie courtesied, and replied that she would make a point of waiting upon the lady, and the two nurses moved on with their little charge. Martha asked Melanie what the foreign lady had been saying, and the French girl replied carelessly that she had only been praising the baby.

"And well she may," answered Miss Briggs, rather snappishly, "for she's the sweetest child that ever lived: but, for my own part, I don't like foreigners, or any of their nasty, deceitful ways."

This rather invidious remark was lost upon Mlle. Duport, who only understood a few words of English, and who cared very little for her fellow-servant's opinion upon any subject.

In spite of Gilbert Sinclair's protestation of indifference to the attractions of brass bands and crowded assemblies, he contrived to spend the greater part of his time at Baden, where the Goddess of Chance was still worshiped in the brilliant Kursaal, while his wife was left to drink her fill of forest beauty and that distant glory of inaccessible hills which the sun dyed rosy red in the quiet even-tide.

In these tranquil days, while her husband was waiting the turn of Fortune's wheel in the golden salon, or yawning over "Galignani" in the reading-room, Constance's life came far nearer happiness than she had ever dared to hope it would come, after her perjury at God's altar two years ago. Many a time, while she was leading here butterfly life in the flower-garden of fashion, making dissipation stand for pleasure, she had told herself, in some gloomy hour of reaction, that no good ever could come of her marriage; that there was a curse upon it, a righteous God's anathema against falsehood. And then her baby had come, and she had shed her first happy tears over the sweet small face, the blue eyes looking up at her full of vague wonder, and she had thanked Heaven for this new bliss, and believed her sin forgiven. After that time Gilbert had changed for the worse, and there had been many a polite passage at arms between husband and wife, and these encounters, however courteously performed, are apt to leave ugly scars.

But now, far away from all her frivolous acquaintance, free from the all-engrossing duties of a fine lady's existence, she put all evil thoughts out of her mind, Gilbert among them, and abandoned herself wholly to the delight of the pine forest and baby. She was very gracious to Gilbert when he chose to spend an hour or two at home or to drive with her in the pretty little pony carriage in which she made most of her explorations; but she made no complaint, she expressed no curiosity as to the manner in which he amused himself or the company he kept at Baden-Baden, and though that center of gayety was only four miles off, she never expressed a wish to share in its amusements.

Gilbert was not an agreeable companion at this time. That deep and suppressed resentment against his wife, like rancorous Iago's jealousy, did "gnaw him inward," and although his old passionate love still remained, it was curiously interwoven with hatred.

Once when husband and wife were seated opposite each other, in the September twilight after one of their rare tete-a-tete dinners, Constance looked up suddenly and caught Gilbert's brooding eyes fixed on her face with an expression which made her shiver.

"If you look at me like that, Gilbert," she said, with a nervous laugh, "I shall be afraid to drink this glass of Marcobrunner you've just poured out for me. There might be poison in it. I hope I've done nothing to deserve such an angry look. Othello must have looked something like that, I should think, when he asked Desdemona for the strawberry-spotted handkerchief."

"Why did you marry me, Constance?" asked Sinclair, ignoring his wife's speech.

There was something almost piteous in this question, wrung from a man who loved honestly, according to his lights, and whose love was turned to rancor by the knowledge that it had won no return.

"What a question after two years of married life! Why did I marry you? Because you wished me to marry you; and because I believed you would make me a good husband, Gilbert; and because I had firmly resolved to make you a good wife."

She said this earnestly, looking at him through unshed tears. Since her own life had become so much happier, since her baby caresses had awakened all the dormant tenderness in her nature, she had felt more anxious to be on good terms with her husband. She would have taken much trouble, made some sacrifice of her womanly pride, to win him back to that amiable state of mind she remembered in their honeymoon.

"I've promised to meet Wyatt at the Kursaal this evening," said Sinclair, looking at his watch as he rose from the table, and without the slightest notice of his wife's reply.

"Is Mr. Wyatt at Baden?"

"Yes; he has come over for a little amusement at the table—deuced lucky dog—always contrives to leave off a winner. One of these cool-headed fellows who know the turn of the tide. You've no objection to his being there, I suppose?"

"I wish you and he were not such fast friends, Gilbert. Mr. Wyatt is no favorite of mine."

STENOGRAPHER'S BILLS.

They Are Hard to Collect—How to Get a Remedy.

These are bitter days for stenographers. There is just as much work now as ever before, but collections are slow and uncertain. One of them told me the other day that he had been doing $1,200 worth of work for every $400 he had received during the last year. A movement is now on foot to raise a fund to send a competent lawyer before the Supreme Court and argue against the celebrated Bonynge decision. This is the man who sent in a bill of $12,000 to Tweed's lawyers for his work on the Tweed case, together with the transcripts of testimony ordered. The lawyers refused to pay it on the ground that they were simply acting as the agents of their clients, and were not personally responible for the bill. The general term sustained this decision, when Bonynge brought suit, and the case was lost every time it was appealed. Now stenographers are compelled to wait until their lawyers collect their fees from clients, and if there are no collections the stenographer's bill is held over. The only remedy is to get a written contract from the lawyer himself to be personally responsible for the bill; but few court stenographers care to risk loss of friends and patronage by insisting on this precaution. Of course, great law firms in this city and elsewhere pay their stenographers promptly as they would pay any other employe, and do not ask them to share their risks in business. But the great majority of small firms and individuals in bad times take advantage of the law and stenographers have to suffer.—New York Press.

Lost His Head, Too.

When the brave Admiral Benbow was a common sailor his messmate, who was stationed with him at the same gun, lost his leg by a cannon shot. The poor fellow instantly called out to his friend Benbow, who immediately took him upon his shoulder, and began with great care to descend with him to the cockpit; but it happened that just as the poor fellow's head came upon a level with the deck, another ball carried that off also. Benbow, however, knew nothing of the matter, but carried the body down to the surgeon, and, when he came to the bottom of the ladder, called out that he had brought him a patient, desiring someone to bear a hand and help him easily down. The surgeon turned about and exclaimed:

"Why, what do you do here with a man who has lost his head?"

"Lost his head!" said Benbow. "The lying scoundrel, he told me it was his leg; but I never believed what he said in my life without being sorry for it afterward."

Internal Revenue Figures.

During the last fiscal year the government revenue from spirits was $94,720,261, an increase over 1892 of $3,410,277.

Tobacco paid in internal revenue taxes $31,880,712, an increase over the preceding year of $889,219.

During the past year tax was paid on 34,555,317 barrels of beer, an increase over 1892 of 2,736,481 barrels.

Snuff takers got away with 11,912,894 pounds last year, a gain over 1892 of 748,543 pounds.

The chewers and users of smoking tobacco burnt up last year 252,399,749 pounds of tobacco.

The consumption of cigars, cheroots and cigarettes last year reached a grand total of 7,900,895,817. This means about one smoke per day for each smoker.

The consumption of fermented liquor continues to increase. Last year the tax thereon yielded $32,548,983, a gain over 1892 of $2,511,530.

Our Scandinavian Contingent.

No country contributes so many immigrants to the United States in proportion to population as Norway. It is chiefly the rural Norse that come to America, and the immigrants are for the most part under 30 years of age. The Norse are good farmers and thrifty citizens. They, as well as their neighbors, the Swedes, have a strong desire to make homes for themselves and to have land and the conveniences of life. They frequently return to visit their native country, but they become permanent citizens of the United States. Most of those who come are of marked peasant type.

SENATE AND SUGAR.

TRUSTS SEEM TO CONTROL THE PEOPLE'S SERVANTS.

Subterranean Connection Between the Upper House of Congress and Wall Street — Benedict Arnolds Who Have Betrayed the Democratic Party.

Sugar Trust Domination.

The sugar trust is capitalized at $75,000,000. As fully two-thirds of this amount is water, the market price of $100 worth of stock should be about $30. Owing, however, to the monopoly which controls the refining business and the many advantages which our refiners have in supplying our markets with refined sugar, it is likely that, even without any protection whatever, sugar stock might sell as high as 45 or 50. Trust stock selling at 50 would indicate profits of 10 or 12 per cent. on actual capital. The difference between 50 and the actual market price of sugar stock represents the beneficial effects—to the trust—of tariff legislation. The present selling price being above 100, it is certain that the owners of trust stock expect to make 12 or 15 per cent. a year out of the sugar duty which is now promised them by the Senate.

On Jan. 24, when Warner's free sugar amendment passed the House, sugar fell from 85⅛ to 80. The decline continued until Feb. 1, the date on which the tariff bill passed the House, when sugar sold for 75⅞. Undoubtedly the decline would have been much faster and greater had not the sugar magnates in the meantime, turned their attention to the Senate where two or three traitors, masquerading as Democrats, held the balance of power. Negotiations having been concluded with these Democrats for revenue, whereby they agreed to defeat or delay all tariff legislation, by making a sham fight against the income tax clause, or under cover of special demands for local industries (compensation depending upon the extent of the opposition promised), the price of sugar stock at once began to rise. On March 20, the day before the new tariff bill was reported in the full Senate Committee, sugar jumped to 93½. The New York World, which believes that there is a subterranean connection between Wall street and the Senate Chamber, which has been worth millions to certain "insiders" and to certain Senators, says that on this day (March 21), "Senator Brice was in conference with Mr. Havemeyer," of the sugar trust.

The trust did not cease its efforts. Two more concessions have been made to it. In each case the concession was heralded by sudden advances in the price of stocks several days before the Finance Committee had announced publicly that the sugar schedule had been modified. On April 26, sugar sold for 100⅛. The World said on May 4: "The report that the schedule was to be changed became generally known, although there were many who were still skeptical. Sugar continued to rise on inside information."

"Sugar quoted April 27, 103⅛.

"And still no word from the Finance Committee. Everybody about the Senate, from the clerks up, were operating in sugar. Everybody was sugar mad. Two days later came Secretary Carlisle's interview, which furnished the first official confirmation of a change in the sugar schedule to an ad valorem basis.

"Sugar quoted April 30, 107⅞.

"And sugar still rising. Why, this rapid advance is explained by the value of the concessions prophesied."

On May 5, sugar sold for 109.

This great advance of thirty-three points over the price of Feb. 1 has enhanced the market value of sugar stock over $35,000,000. Perhaps $30,000,000 of this increase went to the clique of "insiders" who were bold enough to waylay the Senate. Perhaps the remaining $5,000,000 is where it can be drawn upon by the anti-income tax and protectionist Democratic Senators as a reward for "Senatorial courtesy" shown the trust. This courtesy promised a bill which will give a gratuity of about $15,000,000 a year to the trust. If this courtesy can prevent the passage of any tariff legislation it will allow the trust to continue to enjoy a gratuity of nearly $20,000,000.

Another evidence that sugar stocks have been manipulated on private tips from the Senate chamber, and that the sugar trust has dictated legislation, is supplied by the Sugar Trade Journal, the organ of the trust. This journal, with remarkable foresight, made an emphatic prophecy on April 5 of what would come to pass. On May 3 this journal said boastingly, foolishly and threateningly:

"It seems to be generally conceded that if any tariff bill is to be passed it will contain a sugar schedule such as suggested in ours of April 15, placing 40 per cent. ad valorem duty on all sugars, with ⅛ cent per pound extra on all sugars above No. 16 D. S., and 1-10 cent per pound more on sugar from bounty countries. This is, in fact, exactly what was reported on May 7 to the Senate committee.—Byron W. Holt.

Satan Denouncing Sin.

"Surface indications point to the possibility of the Democrats passing a tariff bill, but it will be possible only through the consent of the sugar trust. This has long been known to comparatively few persons and the secret has been well kept. The Democratic party might survive the defeat of their tariff bill, but can it withstand the infamy of passing a tariff law for the United States dictated by the sugar trust, which is the most unscrupulous monopoly known to any civilization?" The above quotation is taken from the Brookline Chronicle, and is a fair representation of a good deal of the material which our Republican contemporaries are putting forth on the assumption that it is argument.

Now, it is a fact that the representatives of the sugar trust have been vigorously employed in Washington for the last two or three months. But what have they been doing? Simply endeavoring by persuasion, intimidation, and corruption to induce the Democratic majority in Congress to continue to the trust the infamous opportunities to plunder the American people secured to them through the medium of the McKinley law. It is well known that the duty upon refined sugar of a half-cent a pound has been just so much bounty to the American sugar trust, and, taking into account the hundreds of millions of pounds of sugar that are annually refined, this bounty has accorded an enormous profit, enabling large, regular, and extra dividends to be paid upon a tremendously inflated capitalization.

If the representatives of the sugar trust were assured that they were to be as well treated under the proposed law as they have been under the McKinley law, they would not have made the least effort to interfere with Congressional proceedings. We should like to have the question answered by some of our Republican contemporaries whether a protection on refined sugar amounting to less than a half a cent a pound would be a deal with the sugar trust, and, if so, what can be said in defense of the McKinley method of granting half a cent bounty to this industrial combination? If it is infamous to pass a tariff law which concedes favors to the sugar trust, what can be said of a law which concedes the more than equal favors to the sugar trust, and also to the coal and iron combinations, to the manufacturers of worsteds, woolens and cottons, to the glass and crockery syndicates, and to scores of other kindred and exacting monopolies? Considering the virtuous indignation shown by some of our Republican friends at the possibility of the continuance of a few of the existing protection duties, we cannot understand why they have ever been protectionists—that is, why they have not long before this come out in advocacy of free trade as a means of ending, once and forever, the system of granting favors to special interests.—Boston Herald.

The Voice of New York.

On May 3, a big mass meeting was held in Cooper Union, in New York City, to condemn the inaction of the Senate on the tariff bill. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Reform Club. The call, which was signed by one hundred and fifty of New York's leading business firms and men, asked for the immediate passage of the tariff bill "with or without the income tax." On May 4, the New York World said:

"The Cooper Union meeting last night showed clearly what the people of this great center of the country's trade desire.

"They want tariff reform. They want an end put to delay that has been hurtful. They want the Wilson bill passed without the further waste of time.

"This was the substances of all the speeches made there by men who have a right to speak for the metropolis, who know its needs and the desires of its people. It was the meaning of the enthusiasm aroused by the words of the speakers.

"The meeting was significant upon another point of interest also. It brought out strongly the fact that the World was right when it told Senator Hill that he misinterpreted New York sentiment as to the income tax. Mr. Jas. C. Carter was applauded to the echo when he frankly declared himself in favor of that feature of the pending bill, and characterized an income tax as the fairest of all possible ways of raising a revenue in an emergency like that to which reckless pension legislation has brought us. Mr. Coudert was hissed by about three to one of the audience when he criticised the income tax feature, though he protested his readiness to accept it as a condition of tariff reform.

"There never was any reason to suppose that one in three of New York's voters would object to this just tax, as there was never any reason why they should do so.

"In urging the speedy passage of the tariff bill New York speaks for the business and industrial interests of the whole country, for those who have money and those who have none, for capitalist and laborer, for the captains of industry and for the rank and file. The Democratic Senators have decided to stand together and pass the Wilson bill. Let them do it quickly."

Getting Out of Patience.

The tariff bill is not making much headway in the House of Lords (U. S. Senate) at Washington. If these corporation tools and millionaires don't soon get a move on them, they will surely bankrupt this country. We are apprised by the Washington correspondents that our Senators, Cameron and Quay, are battling hard to delay the passage of the tariff bill. Yet our own Quay says it will pass. If such is the case, why keep us on our sick bed and destroy the business men of the country and keep our working people from employment. The important magnates called Senators are possibly speculating in the impoverishment of the people so they can buy their re-election cheaply. They had better get a move on them and dispose of this tariff legislation one way or the other. We have been patient with our Congressmen and Senators but this will soon cease to be a virtue. The public servants must not become the people's masters and neglect the public business. This country is sustaining losses of untold millions by indecision and willful neglect of Congress to promptly dispose of the tariff bill. Obsolete customs, whether they be called Senatorial courtesy or any other high-sounding name, must give way to more modern methods. The American people want rapid action and will not tolerate delay.—National Glass Budget.

Must and Shall Be Passed.

As the pinch comes on in the Senate debate on the tariff, it is evident that the bill will be passed sooner or later by a party vote. Republican obstruction will doubtless be very defiant at first, but it cannot be maintained. Senator Allison must have alarmed the Pennsylvanians by his remark that he thought the bill might get through the Senate in six weeks, possibly in four, and that he "expected to aid as well as he could in the progress of it." The Pennsylvania program is obstruction and filibustering to the end of time. The organ of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia utters the dire hope that Senator Quay may speak for a month, and that even so his speech may be the shortest one made by any Republican. This shows that it has no real hope of defeating the bill. With a clear majority and a presiding officer in its favor, some way will be devised of having a vote, and the result is certain.—New York Post.

Offensive Features.

Speaking of the Senate tariff bill, the Wilmington, N. C., Messenger (Dem.) says: "To real anti-protectionists there are features that are absurd and offensive. Putting 55 per cent. tax on collars and cuffs is an example. The tax on sugar, iron, and salt is without defense—an abomination and a stench." It adds, however, that unsatisfactory as the measure is it is greatly to be preferred to the McKinley bill.

More Mills, Less Hills.

Commenting on Senator Mills' assertion that the tariff bill could be passed by the Senate in forty-eight hours if the majority so willed it, the Atlanta Journal (Dem.) says: "If we had more Democrats like Roger Q. Mills and fewer like David B. Hill and Arthur P. Gorman in the Senate, that body would command more respect from the country and the future of the Democratic party would be safer."

THE opponents of an income tax say it is as much class legislation as the protective tariff. There is this difference: The protective tariff taxes the many for the benefit of a few private individuals, and is levied on people in proportion to what they have to buy; the income tax is levied upon people in proportion to their wealth, and not for private, but for public, benefit.—Oakland County Post.

SENATOR CHANDLER remarks that "Senators Gorman, Gibson and Camden are protectionists; Senators Brice and Faulkner are half protectionists." Does Mr. Chandler imagine he is disclosing a secret in telling this?

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....MAY 24, 1894.

RANDALL'S army of Coxeyites spent Sunday in Ft. Wayne at the fair grounds It must be almost as hard as work, to walk all day in the rain and sleep in stables at night.

WHAT has become of the "Great American Compact? Have the people got tired of being roped into a matter that consists chiefly in paying initiation fees and grand lodge dues?

REPUBLICANS keep saying that people are mad and business bad all on account of "a threat to repeal the McKinley bill." Has it come to this, that congress has no right to change or to repeal a law? Can we not talk of changing a law without having our talk called a threat.?

COL. LAPHAM, a manufacturer, was before the tariff committee last week, and admitted that we send wire nails to Liverpool. and sell them at a cent a pound, and that we ask more for them in Pitsburg. This proves that our manufacturers do not need "protection against foreign competition."

DEMOCRATS in congress are fighting hard to reduce tariff taxation for the benefit of the people. Republicans in congress are fighting just as hard to keep the tariff taxes high—not to benefit the people, but the monopolies. In this nefarious work, several eastern democrats, we are sorry to say, are helping them.

THE Waterloo Press says the editor had a lamb that lay down and died under the malign influence of the Wilson bill. Of course he was in fun, and believed he was perpetrating one of his customary supposed jokes. But we as sure him he has got off "earnest" little assertions in regard to the Wilson bill, that were as foolishly ridiculous as this lamb joke.

WE are pained to see our old friend Dr. Parker of the Kendallville News going off after strange gods as it were. He wants the government to buy and run all the railroads and telegraphs. This is one of the wildest and most rediculous doctrines advocated by the populists. It is a plan utterly impossible, and if possible it would be impracticable, and if practicable it would be ruinous to both government and people. Doc., stop and imagine a four years real working of such a plan, in all its details.

COXEY and all the men in the "armies" now begging and stealing their way over the country are not in earnest in asking goverment to find work for them. They do not want work. Many times they have been offered work, sometimes at $1.50 a day, as was the case at East St. Louis, but they refused. The writer of this recently published an article in which is recorded the fact, that one of Randall's men told him with an oath, that he "would not, work for any dollar a day." The "armies" are well aware that goverment has no right to provide them work in the way they ask, and will not do it. And they know also, that they would not do the work they are talking about. If the work was given them promptly, they would as promptly disband and scatter. We know of no better way to stop this Coxey nonsense than for government to provide the work for them. But as we said before, government has no right, even to make it as an experiment.

Jackson Township Ticket.

The democrats of Jackson township selected their township ticket at the Saturday caucus. For trustee, they nominated Thomas McNamara; for assessor, Jesse Dancer; justice of the peace, Chas. Comesky, sr. for the south and S. J. Tarney for the north. Jas. W. Friend for constable in the south and Alvin Ervin in the north. The nominations were all made unaminously. J. J. Walter is state delegate with Moletus High for alternate; Moletus High is congressional delegate, with W. D. Miller alternate. Wm. Carr was chairman of the meeting and James H. Farver, secretary. Old Jackson is getting herself in shape for the coming fight.

Fairfield Caucus.

EDITOR COURIER:—

The following is the report of Fairfield township caucus which you will please insert in this week's paper. (Names of delegates will be found elsewhere.—ED.)

After a few brief remarks by the chairman it was proposed and carried by a unanimous vote that the delegates all stand by their candidate for auditor, Mr. Seiler, as long as his name was before the convention, for the reason that Fairfield township never had a representative in the clerk's or auditor's office. Therefore we ask the support of the convention.
SOLOMON REINŒHL, Chair.
AL. HAVARTER, Sec'y.

A Communication.

ST. JOE, IND., May 21, 1894.

To the Friends and Delegates of the DeKalb County Democratic Convention, to be held at Waterloo June 9, 1894.

GENTLEMEN:—On account of my business interest needing my personal attention at this season of the year (being engaged in the shipment of grain and wool) it will be impossible for me to call on you all personally in my canvass for the office of Clerk of the DeKalb county Circuit Court. While I cannot call on you, I ask and hope you will treat my candidacy with that due consideration that my merits as a candidate may demand at your hands, realizing this is a busy season of the year for farmers, and, as I am personally acquainted with a great many of the delegates, to you I have nothing to say. I leave my case in your hands. But to those that I am not acquainted with, I ask you to investigate as to my merits for said office, believing my claims for the nomination will be treated by you with fairness and justice. Hoping the action of the convention will be ratified by the votes of the county in November, I remain yours, SOL. BARNEY.

Political Notes.

We announce in this issue the name of Solomon Reinœhl, of Fairfield, for commissioner of the North district. He is an intelligent and successful farmer, has served several terms as township trustee, with marked ability, and would make a good officer.

THE NEW WATERLOO BRIDGE.

We visited the new bridge at Waterloo Tuesday and feel like complimenting the commissioners on the kind of work they secured. The stone work is of very large pieces and well laid. The foundations are deep and wide. We think it the best in the county, and that the board made a good bargain. The work has been promptly done. If those who thought the old bridge would have stood up longer would go and look at the broken and cracked old piers of the old bridge, they would be convinced. The water had got into these piers and burst them.

St. Joe Commencement.

As nice a school program as we have seen this year, is that of the Concord public schools, which we received last week. Their commencement will be at St. Joe this evening, May 24. The banquet of the Alumni of their schools, is at the same date, at the residence of Prof. J. P. Bonnell. We thank the class for an invitation for self and wife, to both. But as we had already accepted an invitation to help at a barn raising in a distant county, where extraordinary muscle is required, we shall have to decline. Still our heart goes with these young men and women, and our wishes for their future are as earnest as when we were more directly connected with their interests. Prof. L. W. Fairfield, Supt. Merica and Ex Supt. W. H. McIntosh will make speeches, which will be good, of course. There are 22 graduates, which is twice as many as any township has graduated before. They are: Mattie Tustison, S. N. Armstrong Chas. Kagey, Otto Widney, Roy. D. Abel, Lina Sheffer, Cora Widney, Adelbert Meek, Frank Tustison, Nena Leighty, S. P. Hadsell, Rettie Bishop, J. H. Bonnell, Nelson Lake, N. N. Fisher, Rosa Fales, Connie Burley, Chas. Stafford, Bessie Patterson, Carl Shull, Chas. O. Krise, A. E. Shilling.

HOMESEEKERS' EXCURSIONS,
Via the Baltimore & Ohio R. R.

On May 29 the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will sell thirty-day excursion tickets to points in Virginia on the Harpers Ferry & Valley Branch, south of and including Winchester, at a rate of one fare for the round trip. Excursion tickets will also be sold on the same date to points in the West at very low rates.

The Whist Club Entertained.

One of the most pleasant events of the season was the luncheon, given by the members of the Whist Club last Thursday at the home of Mrs I. M. Zent. Each member was allowed one guest, and twenty-four guests and members sat down to a table made beautiful with cut glass, china and flowers. The luncheon was served in six courses, by part of the members of the club, in a style of elegance not equaled in large cities. The menu was as follows: Strawberries served in the natural state, cream tomato soup, bread sticks, chicken croquettes, French peas, white bread, egg salad, brown bread olives, radishes, ice cream, angel's food, macaroons, black coffee, cheese wafers. While enjoying the luncheon the guests were treated to some fine music by Mrs. Jessie Hanna. The rest of the afternoon was spent in playing progressive pedro. The head prize was captured by Mrs Dr Buchtel, the other by Mrs. Jacobs, of Fort. Wayne, both prizes being beautiful pieces of china painted by Mrs. Dr. Siver, of Fort Wayne.

Milo Husselman swings the gad of the court room bailiff, and Charlie Wiant was for two days bailiff for the grand jury. The grand jury did well. They had little to do, and did it quickly, and Tuesday evening adjourned, without bringing in an indictment. They said they didn't believe in remaining in session merely to make expense. The usual odds and ends of court work have been looked after. Several administrators have settled the estates in their charge. Others have come in and reported. Charles Duey was up for larceny, but his surety, Samuel Bricker, defaulted, and court finds owing on bond $25, and has ordered out the necessary warrants to bring Duey in. In the John L. Davis matter, Assignee Davenport reports sale of stock to Mrs. Louisa Davis, for $2,650.50, and asks leave to sell certain real estate without notice at private sale for not less than appraised value. Leave was granted. Tuesday Mr. Davenport reported the sale of the real estate to Edna A. Davis. This was part of a cheap lot in east part of town. Sue E. Strayer vs Penn. Ry., damages, dismissed at cost of Ry. Rebecca Gard was divorced from Thomas. Cases are to come up to set aside certain mortgages given by J. L. Davis. The case of Fisk vs Jones et al. ordered off docket till interested parties call it up again. The receivership matter of the Butler Windmill Co A. G. Jones receiver, is in court. There are several injunction cases brought by township trustees to prevent Treasurer Sawvel and Auditor Coffinberry from paying school money over. The trustees are J. J. Walter, M. E. Reynolds, Fred Schultheiss, W. J. Whetsel, R. H. Sherlock, R. S. S. Reed. An unusual amount of work has been done and work seems to be hustling along.

A Guilty Conscience.

All the older teachers of this county will remember the genial and talented Cyrus Smith, the best known school book agent that ever traveled and worked in Indiana. He was for many years the agent of Van Antwerp, Bragg & Co., of Cincinnati, whose text books were used in more schools in the state than were all others combined. He is now with another house, and is located at Lansing, Mich. Lately he received a letter with the postmark of Hicksville, Ohio, which reads as follows:

April 13, 1894.

Cyrus Smith,
Lansing, Mich.

DEAR SIR:

You have lost many books and I am in possession of Potter's Manual of Reading, lost by you at one of the County Institutes of Indiana, which you attended about fifteen or sixteen years ago. I did not steal it from you, but from the one who stole it from you. Please accept payment for same with interest, to appease the wrath of an angry God and guilty conscience. Yours in Christ,

OLD TEACHER.

Mr. Smith, on receiving the letter, credited the money to the unknown writer. It was $3, and from this we suppose the book stolen was worth about $1.50, as the interest for sixteen years would about equal the principal. Mr. Smith enclosed the letter to Co. Supt. Merica, and we get the copy from him. We have no idea who this teacher is. We think it is not a DeKalb teacher for the reason he does not spell "accept" the same way DeKalb teachers have been taught.

CYCLONE AT MONTPELIER.

Thursday evening they had a terrible cyclone between Montpelier and Kunkle up the Wabash road. About half past four the extremely hot weather seemed to be taking a turn and cyclone clouds came up rapidly. Soon their worst fears were realized, as the storm settled down on them with fearful violence. One farmer named Barrett, about three miles this side of Kunkle, was in his house with his wife and two little girls who were his nieces. The cyclone struck them squarely. The house was crushed and carried away. The mangled remains of the wife were picked up at a distance of a quarter of a mile, in and near a cemetery. Mr. Barrett was carried about half as far, badly crushed and, though breathing when the neighbors found him he never spoke, but died in a few minutes after. The two girls were found locked in each other's arms, the oldes one dead and the other one died in about five hours. Barrett's hired hand was in the field when he saw the storm coming. He unhitched the team and hurried to the barn. He got the horses into the barn and started for the house just as the cyclone struck him. He was lifted into the air and then hurled to the ground, fearfully crushed and mangled. He was dead before help came. Another hand was in the field with him and started for the barn at the same time. But his team took fright and got away. The delay saved his life, for he did not get to the house till the worst was over. There were seven or eight lives lost, and many were hurt.

A Punctual Pupil.

"One of the most important factors of this day and age is punctuality. Dist. No. 5, of Richland Tp., is one of the few that are up to the standard. It cites you to the person of Master Owen Bangs who two years ago started to school. Since that time he has not failed to be in his seat at the close of the ringing of the nine o'clock bell. Such faithfulness will surely be crowed with success."

Cures Dyspepsia.

Rebecca Wilkinson, of Brownsvalley, Ind., says: "I have been in a distressed condition for three years from nervousness, weakness of the stomach, dyspepsia and indigestion until my health was gone, I had been doctoring constantly with no relief. I bought one bottle of South American Nervine, which did me more good good any $50 worth of doctoring I ever did in my life. I would advise every weakly person to use this valuable and lovely remedy: a few bottles of it has cured me completely. I consider it the grandest medicine in the world." Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottle 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord.

Bad May Weather.

Snow the 19th of May! It makes one shiver to think of it! Last Saturday morning we awoke to find quite a snow storm raging, and the larger leaves of plants on the north sides of buildings, were piled full of the white, winter material. Wednesday and Thursday it had been very hot, the mercury in some places registered 85 in the shade. But a cold wave was coming from the west where they had hard hail storms Thursday afternoon, and Friday forenoon the mercury here went down rapidly. The summer coat went off and was replaced by heavy woolens, and the early summer hat became a byword and a reproach. By Friday evening the cold wind was disagreeable, but instead of a freeze, it turned into a rain, followed by snow. All over the west and northwest they reported hard storms of all sorts. Some hailstorms were very destructive, the hailstones being very large. Growing wheat and corn were greatly damaged, and the fruit buds knocked off. Here however, we had no such destructive storms. The weather was very disagreeable though.

DeWitt's Sarsaparilla is prepared for cleansing the blood from impurities and disease. It does this and more. It builds up and strengthens constitutions impaired by disease. It recommends itself.

Some Lovely Flowers.

Last Thursday we received a package of flowers from the South through the kindness of Uncle John Pepple's family. They were sent us by John W. Pepple, at Taylor, Texas, and were as fresh as the day they were cut off the stem. They were of the lovely white jasmin, a flower that grows easily in warm climates, but not as far north as this. Their fragrance is very delicate and is extensively used in making perfumery. These specimens will scent the whole room. Then there was a second package that contained some of the large buds of the magnolia, one of the most magnificent of all the flowers. Our northern people, who never saw these grand flowers on the tree, can hardly realize their beauty. They are the king of American flowers as the jasmin is the queen. "Mr. and Mrs. B." send their thanks. We believe that Mrs F. J. Yesbera also was remembered in the same delicate manner, for the boys had not forgotten her welcome services in song at the funeral of their brother Willard. A number of other friends received similar packages. And while he was about it we know that John thought he might as well remember a certain bright eyed Auburn girl, who also had a generous amount of these lovely flowers.

The town dads, should see about the long sidewalk over into Gastown. It is in a bad, even dangerous, condition especially that part just as one approaches the solid ground near gas well No. 1. The citizens have just cause for complaint.

If anyone wishes to see a fine job of typewriter work, they should see the June calender sentus this week by Phil. Gibson, now at the Business College at Fayette, Ohio. The design is very elaborate, yet very beautiful, and is the first work of the kind we ever saw. He graduates there, June 7, and will come home the 8th.

Silas McCosh and Samuel Crowle, from north of Waterloo, were here Tuesday to get a Swing Washer of Mr. Meese. Each took one home with him. They are well known and prominent citizens of that section, and Mr. Meese has reason to feel pleased to have their patronage. He says business is opening up nicely for the Swing Washers.

Rev. W. L. Meese, is now selling a very valuable work, which will take the place to a certain extent, of a costly encyclopédia. It is the "Manual of Useful Information," a book that in a brief way treats of almost everything. There are five books in the series, and these are usually taken by teachers. But this one volume is a great value to the general public.

The Garrett Republican started its writeup of the town last week and will continue in this week's issue. It is a very creditable job and will do the town immense good. There are business houses, and lines of industry in Garrett that outsiders never heard of. We have always said that town needed a newspaper that would now and then remember it was located in Garrett.

Marion Smith, the lad who was hurt in a runaway here a week or so ago, was able to be about again in a few days, He was up town last week. There is quite a scar on the crown of his head, but he is a lad of pluck, and ready to drive any team on the farm.

The Auburn Cyclery has booked orders for 14 Ladies' "Chainless," Safeties, but has been unable to fill an order owing to the factory being so behind with orders, "even when running 22 hours per day." No lady rider will be without this mount, if she can raise $135.

"No one can afford to slight the old soldiers" says the Dispatch. On the same day that article appeared in public the republican convention was engaged in what appeared to be a delightful task, of "slighting an old soldier" who was a candidate for judge. Taffy for soldiers, but solid offices for others, seems to be the rule.

Hamilton Advocate—J. A. Campbell, of Butler, was at The Advocate office the first of the week. We can not say as did the editor of the COURIER, "that we were school paps together, in times gone by," but we know something of Mr. Campbell's discipline, while he was engaged in the business. He taught us many a good lesson on that line.

The electric wires got crossed some way Tuesday night at a pole on South Main street and set it on fire. The fire cut it in two just below the ground—a clean cut, and the pole fell. There was also some trouble of the sort at Yesbera's store the other day and in fixing it Ernest Benedict was badly shocked and fell against another man thus shocking him severely.

W. H. Mader will be in the buggy business this year, selling Kiblinger buggies, road wagons and carriages. He will be found at the Kiblinger factory, his room being on 8th St. west of the Davis hardware store. Come and see me before you buy. tf

A satisfied customer is the best advertisment. This is the way they talk when asked how they liked the League Chainless after a 40 mile ride over hills and muddy roads. Tom Patterson says if he was buying 50 bicycles 49 would be Chainless and being asked what the fiftieth would be, said it would be a chain wheel, for a relic. This simply voices the sentiment of thousands of others who have ridden the League Chainless.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.—The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Robbins & McCord. tf

Now you ought to just see the work J. G. Clapp is doing. Well, it is surprising how much work he has on hand, and still they go. If times are dull people want to see how they look just the same. So they go pushing in and sit for the best photo on earth. Did you ever get left? Yes, but with J. G. Clapp's work we never did; he's all right.

Chautauqua.

Change of Firm.

John W. Shaffer, the veteran wagonmaker, bought out his partner, John Berg, last Tuesday, and the firm of Shaffer & Berg has been dissolved. Mr. Shaffer will carry on the work on a larger scale than ever. He has employed Ed. Cutter, an excellent blacksmith, who has been with H. E. Richey so long, and this insures the best of work in the blacksmith department. Mr. Shaffer himself will this week put in a larger and better stock of fully seasoned material and every department of the work will be put on a good footing. We believe Mr. Shaffer has taken a step in the right direction and hope to see him have a good business. Everyone will agree that he does good, honest work, and he should be well patronized. There are no better farm wagons than Mr. Shaffer makes, and all things being equal, the home man should have the patronage.

Call for County Orders.

All county orders to No. 360 Series, M. are called. Interest stops on same May 26th 1894.

Miss Ada Spangler died last week at the asylum at Logansport, where she had been for several years. The funeral was on Sunday. She was a lady of great promise, having rare talents, especially in the way of drawing and sketching, at which she was very gifted. It is believed that her mind was injured by overwork at school. Her case is a sad one and our people sympathize with the stricken parents.

"ARE bicycles immoral?" asks Kate Field. They are, Kate, they are; all of them are "fast."

THE United States Senate can do less in more time than any other legislative body of which we have knowledge.

DESPITE the great amount of talk pro and con about wages, the coal digger's pay is, after all, only a miner consideration.

MANY of the Polish emigrants to this country are tailors, which is another proof of the attraction between the needle and the Pole.

AMERICAN whisky is to be manufactured by a Japanese process. No doubt this will enable the consumer to read his own writing the morning afterward.

THE old camel-back engine has been placed in the World's Fair art palace. Now if a few of those impressionist paintings could be put in a roundhouse things would be evened up.

A FLIPPANT, frivolous man may ridicule others, may controvert them, scorn them, but he who has any respect for himself seems to have renounced the right of thinking meanly of others.

PROF. MORGAN has discovered the fourth dynasty of Egypt at the foot of the brick pyramid of Dashour. The Professor is now all right unless another explorer happens along with the fourth dynasty ace.

UNCLE SAM holds the world's record for rapid murder trials, and it is to be hoped that the judges and attorneys of the various State courts will go into training at once and attempt to beat it. What the State courts need most are a number of legal sprinters.

A PITTSBUGH man believes that it is excellent exercise for women to stand up in a street car. He must have been married a very long time ago. No gallant bachelor would reveal such a belief, and no man who has been hardened toward the other sex by long years of unhappy domestic life would venture to entertain it.

AS SHOWING how easily London shop-keepers are taken in, a young lady of twenty-five, of no occupation, and with no visible means of subsistence, has just passed her examination in bankruptcy, with $10,000 liabilities and no "assets." Her unpaid dressmakers' and tailors' bills reached $4,650, her gloves totaled up to $120 (in two years,) boots to $265, jewelry to $270 photos to $300, and she also ran up a little "wine bill" to the amount of $120.

ARKANSAS has recently distinguished itself by being the first state to hang train robbers who committed murder in the pursuit of their industry. This is so desirable that public opinion will not unwell on the discrimination shown in the fact that the sentiment of the State did not deem it necessary to burn the murderers. In convicting and hanging these outlaws Arkansas has shown that some of the laws at least can be enforced, and has set an example to other States. If punishment should follow quickly and surely upon train robbing, enterprises of that sort would very promptly disappear.

FOR despicable cowardice Admiral Mello of Brazil, holds an evil preeminence. If he is captured by the Government forces, condemned to death by court-martial and shot promptly, the general verdict of the civilized world will be, "Served him right." He has displayed almost all the bad qualities that can be displayed by a rebel against a constituted authority. He has brought about a great deal of bloodshed and suffering without any reasonable excuse, has interfered with commerce and trade, caused an enormous amount of mischief, while constantly betraying qualities the most contemptible and dastardly. If he is put to death, as he richly deserves to be, the world will be well rid of him. Practically he has been only a pirate.

THE literary critics are sharpening their pencils and preparing to have fun with John Jacob Astor's book, which it is understood is something in the line of "Looking Backward." The critics may find themselves disappointed in their ideas of the young man's work. John Jacob is a very different sort of person from William Waldorf. He is neither a snob, a fool, nor an Anglomaniac. On the contrary, there is every reason to believe that he is a pretty good specimen of the better type of young Americans. At all events he prefers this country to Europe, he goes about his business in a matter-of-fact way, the bottoms of his trousers are not influenced by the meteorological conditions in London, and his accent is not that of Seven Dials. His book may not be brilliant, but it is safe to say that it will not excite mirth. Young Mr. Astor is nobody's fool.

UNLESS it be the members of Henry S. Ives' immediate family nobody will regret his untimely demise. His marvelous talents, his phenomenal executive ability, his indomitable force and will had all been put to the basest and most reprehensive uses. He was a wrecker, a pilager, a robber, a destroyer of what other men had built up. He acquired a railroad not to improve or extend it, but to loot its treasury, motgage its every mile and every wheel, and involve its stockholders in ruinous obligations. He was friend to no man, but an enemy to society and the community at large. The dash, courage, and nerve which characterized his stupendous achievements may challenge admiration as did those of Napoleon. But the achievements themselves, like those of Corsican, were ignoble and wicked. Bonaparte was a better man than Ives, and the world does not mourn his death; what wonder, then, that it should mutter a thanksgiving for the taking off of the man who so successfully imitated his methods of pillage, but never entertained his intentions of reconstruction?

THE example of Pugilist Lannon, who sued Pugilist Corbett for damages, has been followed by Pugilist Fitzsimmons, commonly known as "Lanky Bob." Mr. Fritzsimmons is a slugger of very expert and approved allowance, but he has had no opportunity to display his prowess of late. The slugging industry has shared in the depression that he has befallen all other lines of business. No purses are being offered; no fights are being arranged. The pugilistic fraternity has reached a point where the necessity of going to work stares it in the face. In this humiliating extremity Mr. Fitzsimmons evolved a Napoleonic idea. He got on a railroad train, stirred up a controversy with a brakeman and allowed himself to get "licked." Now he sues the railroad company for $10,000 damages to his feelings and his person. This is a novel development of pugilism. If Mr. Fitzsimmons wins his suit we may expect to hear of champion pugilists being swatted right and left over this broad land by $40-a month brakeman. The only way out of the difficulty appears to be for the railroads to put up purses for regular fights. It is evident that the pugilists are bound to have the money in one way or another.

IT seems that the sun's average distance from the earth is not yet settled upon to the satisfaction of those interested in that curious topic of research. From a discussion of all the data obtainable Professor Harkness of Washington has recently stated the most probable value of the parallax to be 8.80905 seconds of arc. corresponding to a distance of close to 93,800,000 miles. In a recent article Professor Auwers gives the result of 754 different measurements obtained by the German astronomers who observed the transits of Venus in 1874 and 1882. It is 8.88 seconds, corresponding to a distance of 91,800,000 miles, or a round million of miles away from the Harkness computation. On this point it may be interesting to note the changes that have been made in estimates of the distance. The most ancient ones known were less than 5,000 miles. That of the age of Ptolemy less than 5,000,000 miles; the one used by astronomers in the eighteenth century less than 88,000,000; that generally taught in the schools after Encke had attached undue importance to the records made by Father Hell at Wardhus, in computing from the transits of Venus in 1761 and 1769, was in excess of 95,000,000. This was cut down to less than 91,500,000 about thirty years ago, and since then the most generally accepted estimate is about 93,000,000 miles. It may be stated as probable that the Harkness value of the parallax, being nearly a mean of all the more important deductions of the quantity from the work of astronomical observers of different nations, will probably be accepted as the nearest approximation to the truth in spite of its wide divergence from the German result above noted.

One Good Janitor.

Lady—"I should like to look at a flat which I see is for rent in this building, but no one has answered my bell."

Man—"I'll show it to you. Right this way, mum."

"Well, this is something like. The rooms will suit, I'm sure. What sort or a janitor have they here?"

"The very best in the city, mum."

"Obliging?"

"The kindest-hearted gentleman to be found anywhere, mum."

"Honest?"

"As the day is long, mum."

"Is he attentive to his duties?"

"He's just workin' himself to death, mum. Always thinkin' up some new thing to make folks comfortable."

"Well, I declare! I wouldn't lose this flat for the world. Where is the janitor now?"

A Chance for the Legislature.

Janesville is agog over a surgical sensation that recalls the Pagel sponge case, which agitated people in this city several years ago. J. V. Voorhees, a student of telegraphy in the Rock County metropolis, has just been successfully operated upon for the removal of four inches of rubber drainage tube which had been carelessly left in his abdominal cavity by Detroit physicians a year ago and which had caused an abscess that nearly proved fatal. There ought to be a law passed enabling the patient to charge storage when a doctor who has cut his way into the interior department and prowled around like Belzoni in the pyramids forgets to take away his traps when he moves out.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

THE LOYALTY OF WOMAN.

'Tis meet that for our warriors,
We come Memorial Day
With flags unfurled, while drum-beat
And bugle lead the way.

That o'er their last encampment,
Where never stirs a soul,
In memory of their valor,
The boom of cannons roll.

But save in gentlest whispers,
Come not in woman's name;
Drum-beat or blare of bugle
Should not her deeds proclaim.

Yet, tho' her duties led her
Not in the battle's heat,
Her zeal spurred men to conquest,
And cheered them in defeat.

And where death's angel hovered,
Her feet sped swift and sure;
Her touch brought balm and healing,
Her voice strength to endure.

Did woman's heart e'er falter,
In war of gray and blue?
To God, or Flag, or Country,
Her heart e'er prove untrue?

For every wounded soldier,
Or hero that hath died,
Some woman, too, hath suffered,
In soul been crucified.

Ah! 'tis the prayers of woman—
Methinks the sad refrain—
That give to martial music
A subtle sense of pain.

The brightest deeds recorded
In God's own book above,
Are of man's dauntless courage,
And woman's deathless love.

As comrade is to comrade
Is she to veteran true;
And each to each shall cherish
The gratitude that's due.

Their names may not be severed,
The veteran's deeds he own;
But woman's hands upheld them,
The "power behind the throne."

CAPTAIN JIM.

"To-morrow is Decoration Day, comrades. Report for marching orders as early as nine."

"We'll all be here, Major. I wonder if Capta'n Jim will?"

A group of grand army men were burnishing their accoutrements in the village hall. A curious bystander made the query.

"Who is Captain Jim, may I ask?"

"Captain Jim Prescott," replied the second speaker, "is an old soldier—none braver in the war. He came back minus an arm, got married, and led a happy and prosperous life till two years ago. Then drink got hold of him. You know what that means. He went down. Last year his broken-hearted wife left him. Only his daughter, Edna, a beautiful girl of seventeen, clung to his broken fortunes."

"Do they live here?"

"In the old cottage he once kept so trim she is sacrificing her life for him, for Norman Beale, one of the finest young fellows in town, wants to marry her, but Edna believes it her duty to care for the sad wreck rum has made of Captain Jim. About three months ago an old comrade took him South, on the chance of reforming him. Edna has great hopes, so has our Colonel. He told me Jim would be here to-night to join in the ceremonies to-morrow, but I fear he has fallen by the wayside."

Edna Prescott, a sorrowful participator in this bit of family history, thought so, too, as, watching from the window of her lonely home, the hours went by and her father did not appear. She had received encouraging letters from his comrade, but her hopes now misgave her and seemed to predict failure for her many plans for reuniting husband and wife.

Her mother, who was living with a sister in an adjoining place, would certainly visit the village cemetery where her brothers were buried on the morrow, yet when morning broke after a sleepless night, Edna had scarcely the heart to engage in the day's ceremonies.

She was arranging some flowers when the sound of muffled drums told her that the procession had started. She gazed from the window, sadly thinking of other days like this when Captain Jim had looked the hero he was at the head of his old company. She recalled, too, the last Decoration Day, when his fatal habit had made him an object of pity to all his friends. Would that humiliation be repeated on this solemnly sweet May morning?

"Oh, what is this? Father on earth, my joy is complete; Father in heaven, I thank thee!"

Down upon her knees in prayer, the happy tears dimming her sight, Edna sank. The survivors of Company A were marching by, and at their head, clothed in new, neat uniform, clothed, as well, in his right mind again, the bleared eyes gone, the noble face serious with earnest dignity, was—her father!

One glance told Edna that he was reclaimed. That moment of joy atoned for all the dark fears of the lonely night.

When she gained the cemetery the ceremonies of the day had begun. On everybody's lips the name of Captain Jim hovered, coupled with words that showed how lovingly he was esteemed, how welcome in this new guise of manhood.

It was just after the final address that Edna went to the soldiers' monument. A veiled form was kneeling at its railing. Edna recognized her mother.

About to speak, she paused. Her father and the Colonel were approaching. Captain Jim saw the kneeling form. His lips trembled. He glanced appealingly at Edna. She took his hand in silence and led him forward.

"Mother," she murmured in the ear of the veiled mourner, joining the twain in tremulous finger-clasp, "let this poor one hand plead for its dear owner. Look up and see!"

"And let my earnest heart, truly brought purified through the fire of temptation and affliction, join in the prayer that you will forgive the past. Mary, can you doubt me this time?"

Mrs. Prescott looked once at the changed, earnest face of the reformed man. Then she put out her arms, and those two were one again.

"Edna!"

The weeping, happy girl started as the name was softly whispered, and thrilled as well, for her lover spoke.

"My dear," he continued, "is not that reunion a presage of the future from which I may take hope?"

"Norman," murmured Edna, "can you doubt my heart's wish? My father will not need me always—now."

And so, amid the glory of the odorous lilies and the sanctity of memories true hearts alone can understand, those four knew that love ineffable had been gained and regained upon that solemn, peaceful Decoration Day.

THE GREAT LESSON.

What the Heroes of 1861-65 Have Done for the Nation.

As we strew the flowers over the resting places of departed heroes, we have the consciousness that there is no North nor South, no East nor West. We have learned the greatest lesson of the war—that the sacrifices made by the blue and the gray were necessary to maintain the doctrine of national unity. Cemented by the best blood of both sections the peace which followed the collapse of the Southern cause will never again be disturbed.

We who enjoy the blessed fruits of the great conflict can show our gratefulness to the heroes of 1861-65 in many ways. We can honor the living and remember the dead. But, to do full justice, we must never cease to impress upon our children and those who come to us from foreign lands that to be worthy of citizenship they must cultivate the spirit of patriotism exhibited by the countless thousands who cheerfully bled and died to preserve for future generations the blessings of free government.

MEMORIAL DAY.

It Is Now Generally Observed Throughout the Country.

In nearly every town in the Northern States the streets on Memorial Day resound to the sound of martial music, and the surviving veterans march together, not now, as they did so many years ago, to the camp and the battle field, but to that last camping ground where have been lain all that was mortal of so many of their comrades. As they place their floral tributes upon the mounds that are marked by a miniature emblem of the flag under which they marched and fought, and in defense of which and what it represents so many of those whose graves they decorate gave up their lives, or received wounds and disease from which they have since suffered and died, they cannot but devote a moment's thought to the time when they, too, shall have answered the last roll call, and with "lights out" shall have sank into their last slumber, to be awakened only in the great hereafter. They devote a thought to the memory of those who do not lie in those graves, near home and among their kindred, who still cherish their memory, but who, uncoffined and unknelled, were buried in trenches, or in but hastily made graves upon the fields that their sacrifices redeemed to the Union and to Freedom.

For a few years after the observance of this day was begun by the returned soldiers, they were left to perform their sad duties almost alone, unassisted, and scarcely noticed except by the friends of those around whose graves they gathered, but now it has become a national observance, a tribute to the valor and the patriotism not only of the dead but the living, and, while the few remaining comrades are allowed the privilege of placing the flowers of spring upon the graves, the Women's Relief Corps, many of whom also made their sacrifices for their country in those trying times, are proud to accompany and assist them, while the Sons of Veterans and the Daughters of Veterans stand by to show their readiness to continue in the good work of keeping alive the memories of the soliders and the soldiers' deeds when the time, not far distant, shall come, that the Grand Army of the Republic has become so reduced in numbers as to be no longer able to perform their share.

In many places the Grand Army posts are escorted by the local companies of the State militia, who, if they are not "eager for fray," and desirous of an opportunity of showing that they, too, are loyal, courageous and able to endure hardships, would not be likely to be found wanting in those qualities, if there should ever be in their day or generation a necessity for it. Children of the public schools almost unconsciously absorb more of the love of country from the martial music, the waving flags and the respect shown to the veterans than from the addresses of the eloquent orators of the day. The townspeople turn out in large numbers, for one day at least forgetting political differences, and most of them convinced that, no matter how many are receiving pensions who are unworthy of them, or fail to handle them wisely, there are none such in the ranks that march by them, or among the loved ones who were left behind by those who lie beneath the flower-decked mounds.

Nor is this the only benefit of Memorial Day observances. Not only are the dead soldiers, though they may have passed away more than thirty years ago, thus kept in mind and honored, but all who have loved ones who have gone before them are led to beautify their last resting place, and for a few days at least our cemeteries are bright with flowers, and neatness and order help to make them less repulsive to those who must contemplate being carried there soon, or being called upon soon to follow there the remains of one who can no longer be retained in the earth life by their loving care.

These demonstrations of respect to the Union soldier, dead or living, are not, however, confined to the States which were loyal during the war of the Rebellion. Nearly every one of the States, perhaps every one, that were in the Southern Confederacy thirty years ago have now posts of the G. A. R., formed of the men who assisted to bring them back into the Union by war in the time of war, and who are now striving to conquer them and to conquer their prejudices by the nobler arts of peace. They gather together upon that day to mark with their flags, their wreaths of evergreen and their bright flowers the graves of those who lie buried there far from home and from friends, in soil which has been made sacred by their blood and their sufferings and sacrifices.

IN THE WILDERNESS

THE NATION'S DEAD.

They Lie Buried in Eighty-three National Cemeteries.

The nation's dead are buried in eighty-three national cemeteries, only twelve of which are in the Northern States. The principal ones in the North are Cypress Hill, with its 3,786 dead; Finn's Point, N. J., with 2,644 unknown dead; Gettysburg, Pa., with 1,967 known and 1,608 unknown dead; Mound City, Ill., with 2,505 known and 2,721 unknown graves; and Woodlawn, Elmira, N. Y., with its 3,900 dead. In the South, near the scenes of the fearful conflicts, are located the largest resting places of the nation's heroic dead. Arlington, Va., 16,264, of which 4,319 are unknown; Chalmette, La., 12,511, of which 5,674 are unknown; Chattanooga, Tenn., 12,962, of which of which 4,963 are unknown; Fredericksburg, Va., 15,257, of which 12,770 are unknown; Jefferson Barracks, Mo., 11,490, of which 2,900 are unknown; Little Rock, Ark., 5,602, of which 2,317 are unknown; City Point, Va., 5,122, of which 1,374 are unknown; Marietta, Ga., 10,151, of which 2,693 are unknown; Memphis, Tenn., 13,997, of which 8,817 are unknown; Nashville, Tenn., 16,526, of which 4,700 are unknown; Poplar Grove, Va., 6,180, of which 4,001 are unknown; Richmond, Va., 6,542, of which 5,700 are unknown; Salisbury, N. C., 12,126, of which 12,032 are unknown; Stone River, Tenn., 5,602, of which 288 are unknown; Vicksburg, Miss., 16,600, of which 12,704 are unknown; Antietam, Md., 4,671, of which 1,818 are unknown; Winchester, Va., 4,559, of which 2,365 are unknown.

The dust of 300,000 men who fought for the Union find guarded graves in our national cemeteries. Two cemeteries are devoted to the heroic souls who passed away in the prison pens, those festering fields of death of the same name. Andersonville, Ga., harbors 13,741, and Salisbury, N.C., 12,126. Of the Grand Army whose legions are dust, 275,000 sleep in the blood-stained ground of the sunny South, and 145,000 of them fill unknown graves. The total Confederate loss will never be known, but estimates place it at 220,000 out of the 1,000,000 men enlisted in the Southern service. They fought the war on the defensive plan, and were acclimated, which gave enormous advantages.

BRIDAL AND BURIAL.

It was a soldier's bridal day;
His darling stood in robes of gray
To give to him her heart.
The soldier wore the army blue,
And vowed his vows of honor true,
Till "death their lives should part."

Above them hung our banner bright;
Each heart was sad, and yet alight
With hope he might not fail,
And that some happy, gala day,
He would return, with her to stay,
When bugles did not call.

"Haste to my rescue!" Freedom cried.
The soldier marched away—he died.
As white as winter snow
He came again; alas! alas!
They hid his face beneath the grass
Full thirty years ago.

Under the pillow where his head
Was lying the dear bride-wife spread
Her wedding-gown of gray.
They found her picture on his breast,
And left it undisturbed to rest
Till God's memorial day.

Her brow wears signet of the years;
Her eyes have not forgot the tears
They shed that vanished day;
Her locks have lost youth's loveliness;
Their hue is like her bridal dress,
Of unobtrusive gray.

Time is grief's healer; but she waits
Alone for him who by the gates
Of heaven records the hours
Till she shall come with love as true
As when he wore the army blue,
Or lay 'mid funeral flowers.

Fish Have No Souls.

The Moslems, like the Jews, were commanded not to make images of anything in heaven or in earth, and Mohammed added: "Therefore, if ye must make images, make images of things which have no souls, such as trees or plants." His Sunnite followers have never transgressed this rule, and their friezes and capitals and paneling are either in geometrical patterns, or are ornamented with symmetrically twined boughs and leaves.

The Hindu, on the other hand, never loses an opportunity of introducing gods, elephants, tigers, horses and birds—anything living that he can think of except fish, for fish have no souls, and the believer in the transmigration of the spirit eats fish with impunity, though he would die rather than eat beef, and has religious scruples with game.—The Century.

LIFE TERM FOR MEYER

NEW YORK POISONER CONVICTED OF MURDER.

A career that Throws the Records of Newgate in the Shade—How His Murders Were Planned and Executed—Fiend in Human Form.

Story of Foul Crimes Told.

Dr. Henry C. F. Meyer was convicted in New York of murder in the second degree, punishable by imprisonment at hard labor for life. His crime was a long series of murders for the insurance on the lives of the men marked for victims. The testimony at the trial revealed only a portion of what is alleged to be a career of crime unmatched in the records of the Newgate calendar and unrivalled even by the most gruesome imaginings of Edgar Allan Poe.

The number of people said to have been sacrificed by Meyer is not known, but the indications are that a score of men and women have been his victims. Meyer is supposed to have poisoned his first wife, his own child, an alleged wife in Toledo; Henry Gildeman, of Chicago; and Ludwig Brandt. He is also under suspicion of having administered poison to his second wife (Gildeman's widow), in Chicago; an old woman in Chicago, and Mary Neiss, now the wife of Carl Muller, alias August Wimmers. The Wimmers and Mullers were the most important direct witnesses against him.

Meyer was born in Minden, Prussia, about forty years ago. He began to practice medicine in Chicago in 1878. He got into trouble there over the suspicious death of his first wife's son after he had married the widow of Gildeman. He was arrested, but was discharged for lack of evidence. About 1888 he married his present wife, the daughter of a man named Gressen. Soon after this Meyer was arrested on the charge of forging his father-in-law's name to a heavy life insurance policy. He was tried and acquitted. During his detention in jail, Meyer made the acquaintance of Ludwig Brandt, who, like himself, was locked up on a charge of forgery. Brandt was the son of a General in the Norwegian army. When both had been released, Meyer resumed his practice in Chicago and employed Brandt as his collector. In 1891 Brandt was insured under the name of Gustav Maria Joseph Baum for large amounts.

DR. HENRY C. F. MEYER.
[One of the worst criminals of the age.]

Brandt agreed to help Meyer in making a little money out of the insurance companies. Brandt was to feign sickness, a corpse was to be secured by the doctor and passed off as that of Brandt. Brandt's death was to be reported and certified, and when the insurances were collected the spoils were to be divided.

Meyer persuaded Brandt that it was necessary to the success of the plot that Brandt should pose as the husband of Mrs. Meyer. A marriage ceremony was actually performed on Feb. 11, 1892, and Brandt called at the insurance offices and had his policies made payable to his "wife." Four or five days later Brandt and the Meyers went to New York with a man who then used the name of August Wimmers, who had served two years in Joliet for using the mails in the distribution of fraudulent matrimonial advertisements. Baum, or Brandt, began rapidly to fail in health. It is charged that he had been dosed by minute but continuous doses of antimony. On March, 30, 1892, Brandt died. Dr. Minden gave a death certificate, stating chronic dysentery as the cause. The widow applied for her insurance money with such indecent haste that the suspicions of the companies were aroused. Wimmers and the Meyer couple scented danger and left town in a hurry. The doctor and his wife were heard of after that at Chicago, Milwaukee, Toledo, Detroit and South Bend, Ind.

MRS. MARY MEYER.
[Wife of the convicted poisoner.]

Detective H. G. Julian, of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, was detailed to run down the criminal. It was a long and difficult chase. Meyer changed his name and his residence so often that he continually threw his pursuer off the track. The chase lasted some twelve months, and finally ended in the capture in Detroit.

FLOOD'S WILD SWEEP.

KEYSTONE STATE THE SCENE OF A DELUGE.

Horrors of the Johnstown Flood May Be Repeated—Williamsport, Lock Haven and Other Towns Are Under Water—Several People Drowned.

Great Damage Done.

Furious floods have broken loose throughout Central and Western Pennsylvania and already great damage has been done. They are sweeping down every valley, carrying destruction to villages, hamlets and cities, and the loss to property of all kinds will be enormous. Several people have been drowned and it is feared that there will be great loss of life, as the floods are the worst that have occurred in this State since 1889, the year of the Johnstown calamity. The beautiful city of Williamsport that suffered so severely in 1889, is threatened with destruction, and people fear that the horrors of five years ago may be repeated in the Susquehanna Valley. Steady rain pouring down for three days swelled all the streams, and numerous cloud-bursts along the tributaries of the Susquehanna River have caused the streams to overflow their banks. The great lumber boom near Williamsport broke. There were 175,000,000 feet of logs in the boom, and they rushed down the river and will be a complete loss.

The Susquehanna River has been rising steadily according to dispatches. Nearly the entire business portion of Williamsport is under water. The Western Union Telegraph office, which is situation on comparatively high ground had three feet of water on the floor, and the telegraph operators were forced to abandon their instruments and seek a place of safety. Passenger trains on the Pennsylvania Road are only running as far as Dewart, and no trains are running over the Northern Central Railroad between Williamsport and Elmira.

Williamsport Under Water.

At one o'clock Monday afternoon the water in the river had reached a height of thirty-one feet above low water, one foot higher than the disastrous flood of 1889. The entire city is under water, which ranges in depth from four to twenty feet. All the logs of the boom have been swept away, as well as many sawmills and houses in the lower part part of the city. Not a telegraph or telephone wire is working out of the city, with the single exception of a shaky long-distance telephone wire which was placed at the disposal of the Associated Press correspondent. The loss has already reached more than a million dollars, and, the dispatch says, unless relief soon comes, it will be three times as much.

The boom at Lock Haven broke and 15,000,000 feet of logs have been lost. The Upper Linden boom also broke. It contained 10,000,000 feet of logs, and they have gone down. There are about 150,000,000 feet of logs in the main boom and half as many more in the city mill-ponds that may go on a twenty-five foot flood.

There has been no telegraphic communication with Lock Haven since 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon, at which hour the telegraph operator was driven from his office by the rising flood. The flood there is very high, and between Bellefonte and Rising Springs two spans of one of the railroad bridges were carried away. There is a seven-foot flood in Lycoming creek, and at Rising Springs the water is eighteen inches higher than it was in 1889.

LOST TWO CUSTOMERS.

Yet the Clerks in the Store Laughed Then and Are Smiling Still.

"It was a rainy day," said the bookseller, "and the wet shoes and dripping umbrellas of customers had made the floor quite wet and slippery just inside the store door. All our clerks happened to be in the back part of the place when the door opened and a large and very stout lady hurried in. Just as the door swung shut behind her she slipped and fell flat upon the floor.

"Before any of us could reach her she picked herself up with surprising quickness for a woman of her size, gave a stony stare all around the room, and then, without uttering a word, turned around, opened the door and walked out in the most dignified manner.

"None of us has ever seen the woman since, and I suppose her pride will prevent her from ever coming into the store where her first appearance was so mortifying.

"It was only a day or two after that," the salesman continued, "when we lost another customer. A lady who had bought a book from us a week or so before came in and asked to exchange the volume for another one she thought she would rather have.

"I explained to her that it was our rule never to exchange books, and though I talked as politely as I could I could see she was getting angry every second. She was indignant, and didn't hesitate to say so, and she had begun to make me rather nervous, when in the midst of what was really a regular trade, she snapped out:—

"'I suppose your rules are as unchangeable as the laws of the Pedes and Mersians—I mean the Perds and Mesians—or—I mean—the Merds and—'

And then she stopped, took a long breath, made a break for the door and disappeared, and we have not yet exchanged that book."

MAN WITH A HISTORY

The Terrible Experience that Befell John W. Thomas, of Theta, Tenn.

Afflicted with a Peculiar Disease, His Body Covered with Lumps, Could Not Eat, and Thought He Was Going to Dry Up—His Recovery the Marvel of Tennessee.

[From the Nashville (Tenn.) Banner.]

Mr. John W. Thomas, Jr., of Theta, Tenn., is a man with a most interesting history. At present he is interested in blooded horses, for which Maury County is famous.

"Few people, I take it," said Mr. Thomas to a reporter who had asked him for the story of his life, "have passed through as remarkable a chain of events as I have and remained alive to tell the story.

"It was along in 1884, when I was working in the silver mines of New Mexico, that my troubles began: at first I suffered with indigestion, and so acute did the pains become that I went to California for my health, but the trip did me little good, and fully impressed with the idea that my last day had nearly dawned upon me, I hurried back here to my old home to die.

"From simple indigestion my malady developed into a chronic inability to take any substantial food, I was barely able to creep about, and at times I was prostrated by spells of heart palpitation. This condition continued until one year ago.

"On the 11th of April, 1893, I suddenly collapsed, and for days I was unconscious, in fact I was not fully myself until July. My condition on Sept. I was simply horrible; I weighed but seventy pounds, whereas my normal weight is 165 pounds. All over my body there were lumps from the size of a grape to the size of a walnut, my fingers were cramped so that I could not more than half straighten them. I had entirely lost control of my lower limbs and my hand trembled so that I could not drink without spilling the liquid. Nothing would remain on my stomach, and it seemed that I must dry up before many more days had passed.

"I made another round of the physicians, calling in one after the other, and by the aid of morphine and other medicines they gave me, I managed to live, though barely, through the fall."

Here Mr. Thomas displayed his arms, and just above the elbow of each there was a large irregular stain as large as the palm of the hand and of a purple color; the space covered by the mark was sunken nearly to the bone. "That," said Mr. Thomas, "is what the doctors did by putting morphine into me.

"On the 11th of December, 1893, just eight months after I took permanently to bed—I shall never forget the date—my cousin, Joe Foster, of Carter's Creek, called on me and gave me a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, saying they had cured him of partial paralysis, with which I knew he had all but died. I followed his directions and began taking the medicine. As a result I stand before you to-day the most surprised man on earth. Look at my hand—it is as steady as yours; my face has a healthy look about it; I have been attending to my duties for a month. Since I began taking the pills I have gained thirty pounds, and I am still gaining. All the knots have disappeared from my body except this little kernel here in my palm. I have a good appetite and I am almost as strong as I ever was.

"Yesterday I rode thirty-seven miles on horseback; I feel tired to-day, but not sick. I used to have from two to four spells of heart palpitation every night. Since I began the use of the pills I have had but four spells altogether.

"I know positively that I was cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I believe firmly that it is the most wonderful remedy in existence to-day, and every fact I have presented to you is known to my neighbors as well as to myself, and they will certify to the truth of my remarkable cure."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are not a patent medicine in the sense that name implies. They were first compounded as a prescription and used as such in general practice by an eminent physician. So great was their efficacy that it was deemed wise to place them within the reach of all. They are now manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and are sold in boxes (never in loose form by the dozen or hundred, and the public are cautioned against numerous imitations sold in this shape) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company.

Horseshoes of Ancient Days.

The earliest form of the horseshoe was a leather boot, says Dr. S. J. Harger of the University of Pennsylvania Veterinary school. But this boot was only worn by heavy war horses. The ordinary horses of the Greeks, Romans, Arabians and other natives were unshod, though methods of hardening the hoof were occasionally used. The earliest written record of metal shoes is found in a book by the Emperor Leo VI., who died 911, A. D., but horseshoes have been found in tombs that date back to the sixth century. The ealiest oriental fo m of shoe was nearly circular and was fastened on, not by nails, but by flangs driven into the side of the hoof. The Arabian farriers even to-day shoe their horses cold, and regard the European method as injurious.—The Pennsylvanian.

American Tactics in the German Army.

The imperial maneuvers to be held between the First and the Seventeenth army corps this year will be more than usually interesting. The cavalry reconnoitering is to be carried out on a scale hitherto unknown and over long distances, like the American cavalry practice in the civil war. Men and horses are being trained and hardened by long-distance rides in squadrons.—London Standard.

The Watches of the Night

When of the repeated kind experienced by persons troubled with insomnia, soon bring about an alarming condition of the nervous system. The shaking hand, confusion of the brain, lapses of memory and loss of appetite indicate, with terrible precision, the ravages produced by loss of sleep, which if unremedied must destroy mental equilibrium altogether. No better and thorough nervine exists than Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Common sense and experience point to its early and steady use in cases of insomnia. It strengthens weak and relaxes the tension of overstrained nerves, which, by the way, a resort to unmedicated stimulants will never do permanently, while the after effect of such excitants is most prejudicial. Under the influence of this benign invigorant, appetite, digestion and sleep return, and bodily comfort and health are alike promoted. It is invaluable in chills and fever, liver complaint, constipation, rheumatic and kidney trouble.

WHEN a man gets into trouble, his enemies abuse him, and his friends forsake him. The certainty of this keeps many a man honest.
